THE GENUINE EPISTLES.

I.

THE REASONS for accepting as genuine the Seven Epistles in the form in which they were current in the age of Eusebius have been stated already. Only a few additional words will be necessary to explain the principles which have been followed in the arrangement of the epistles and in the construction of the text.

These seven epistles were written in the early years of the second century, when the writer was on his way from Antioch to Rome, having been condemned to death and expecting to be thrown to the wild beasts in the amphitheatre on his arrival. They fall into two groups, written at two different halting-places on his way. The letters to the Ephesians, Magnesians, Trallians, and Romans, were sent from Smyrna, while Ignatius was staying there and was in personal communication with Polycarp the bishop. The three remaining letters, to the Philadelphians, to the Smyrnæans, and to Polycarp, were written at a subsequent stage in his journey, at Alexandria Troas, where again he halted for a time, before crossing the sea for Europe. The place of writing in every case is determined from notices in the epistles themselves.

The order in which they are printed here is the order given by Eusebius (H.E. iii. 36). Whether he found them in this order in his manuscript, or whether he determined the places of writing (as we might determine them) from internal evidence and arranged the epistles accordingly, may be questioned. So arranged, they fall into two groups, according to the place of writing. The letters themselves however contain no indication of their chronological order in their respective groups; and, unless Eusebius simply followed his manuscript, he must have exercised his judgment in the sequence adopted in each group, e.g. Ephesians, Magnesians, Trallians, and Romans.

IGN, II.

The two groups, besides having been written at different places, are separated from each other by another distinctive feature. All the epistles written from Smyrna are addressed to churches which he had not visited in person but knew only through their delegates. On the other hand all the epistles written from Troas are addressed to those, whether churches (as in the case of the Philadelphians and Smyrnæans) or individuals (as in the case of Polycarp), with whom he had already held personal communication at some previous stage in his journey.

It has been seen that at some point in his journey (probably Laodicea on the Lycus), where there was a choice of roads, his guards selected the northern road through Philadelphia and Sardis to Smyrna. If they had taken the southern route instead, they would have passed in succession through Tralles, Magnesia, and Ephesus, before they reached their goal. It is probable that, at the point where the roads diverged, the Christian brethren sent messengers to the churches lying on the southern road, apprising them of the martyr's destination; so that these churches would despatch their respective delegates without delay, and thus they would arrive at Smyrna as soon as, or even before, Ignatius himself.

The first group then consists of letters to these three churches, whose delegates had thus met him at Smyrna, together with a fourth to the Roman Christians apprising them of his speedy arrival among them—this last probably having been called forth by some opportunity (such as was likely to occur at Smyrna) of communicating with the metropolis. The three are arranged in a topographical order (Ephesus, Magnesia, Tralles) according to the distances of these cities from Smyrna, which is taken as the starting-point.

The second group consists of a letter to the Philadelphians whom he had visited on his way to Smyrna, and another to the Smyrnæans with whom he had stayed before going to Troas, together with a third to his friend Polycarp closing the series.

The order however in the Greek MS and in the versions (so far as it can be traced) is quite different, and disregards the places of writing. In these documents they stand in the following order:

1. Smyrnæans

- 2. Polycarp
- 3. Ephesians
- 4. Magnesians
- 5. Philadelphians
- 6. Trallians¹
- 7. Romans.

¹ The Armenian Version however transposes Trallians and Philadelphians.

This sequence is consistent with the supposition that we have here the collection of the martyr's letters made at the time by Polycarp, who writing to the Philippians says 'The Epistles of Ignatius which were sent to us by him, and others as many as we had with us, we send to you, even as ye directed: they are subjoined to this letter' (§ 13). But though this order, which is given in the documents, has high claims for consideration as representing the earliest form of the collected epistles, I have substituted the chronological arrangement of Eusebius as more instructive for purposes of continuous reading.

Of the data for the text an account has been given already. Our documents are as follows.

- I. The Manuscript of the Greek Original (G). If this Ms had been, as Turrianus described it, 'emendatissimus', we should have had no further trouble about the text. But since this is far from being the case, the secondary authorities are of the highest moment in settling the readings.
- 2. Among these the Latin Version (L) holds the first place, as being an extremely literal rendering of the original. It exhibits a much purer form of the text, being free from several corruptions and a few interpolations and omissions which disfigure the Greek. At the same time however it is clear, both from the contents of the collection and from other indications (as described previously), that this version was translated from a Greek Ms of the same type as the extant Greek Ms; and therefore its value, as a check upon the readings of this Ms, is limited. Whenever GL coincide, they must be regarded as one witness, not as two.
- 3. The Syriac Version (S) would therefore have been invaluable as an independent check, if we had possessed it entire, since it cannot have been made later than the fourth or fifth century, and would have exhibited the text much nearer to the fountain-head than either the Greek or the Latin. Unfortunately however only a few fragments (S_1, S_2, S_3) belonging to this version are preserved. But this defect is made up to a considerable extent in two ways. First. We have a rough Abridgment or Collection of Excerpts (Σ) from this Syriac Version for three epistles (Ephesians, Romans, Polycarp) together with a fragment of a fourth (Trallians), preserving whole sentences and even paragraphs in their original form or with only slight changes. Secondly. There is extant also an Armenian Version (A) of the whole, made from the Syriac (S). This last however has passed through so many vicissitudes, that it is often difficult to discern the original Greek reading underlying its tertiary text. It will thus be seen that $A\Sigma$ have no independent authority, where S is otherwise known, and that $SA\Sigma$ must be regarded as one witness, not as three.

- 4. There is likewise extant a fragment of a Coptic Version (C), in the Sahidic (Thebaic) dialect of the Egyptian language, comprising the first six chapters of the Epistle to the Smyrnæans, besides the end of the spurious Epistle to Hero. The date of this version is uncertain, though probably early; but the text appears to be quite independent of our other authorities, and it is therefore much to be regretted that so little is preserved.
- 5. Another and quite independent witness is the Greek Text of the Long Recension (g) of the Ignatian Epistles. The Latin Version (l) of this Long Recension has no independent value, and is only important as assisting in determining the original form of this recension. The practice of treating it as an independent authority is altogether confusing. The text of the Long Recension, once launched into the world, had its own history, which should be kept quite distinct from that of the genuine Epistles of Ignatius. For the purpose of determining the text of the latter, we are only concerned with its original form.

The Long Recension was constructed, as we have seen, by some unknown author, probably in the latter half of the fourth century, from the genuine Ignatian Epistles by interpolation, alteration, and omission. If therefore we can ascertain in any given passage the Greek text of the genuine epistles which this author had before him, we have traced the reading back to an earlier point in the stream than the direct Greek and Latin authorities, probably even than the Syriac Version. This however it is not always easy to do, by reason of the freedom and capriciousness of the changes. No rule of universal application can be laid down. But the interpolator is obviously much more given to change at some times than at others; and, where the fit is upon him, no stress can be laid on minor variations. On the other hand, where he adheres pretty closely to the text of the genuine Ignatius, as for instance through great parts of the Epistles to Polycarp and to the Romans, the readings of this recension deserve every consideration.

Thus it will be seen that though this witness is highly important, because it cannot be suspected of collusion with other witnesses, yet it must be subject to careful cross-examination, before the truth underlying its statements can be ascertained.

6. Besides manuscripts and versions, we have a fair number of Quotations, of which the value will vary according to their age and independence. A full account of these has been given already.

From the above statement it will be seen that, though each authority separately may be regarded as more or less unsatisfactory, yet, as they are very various in kind, they act as checks one upon another, the one frequently supplying just that element of certainty which is lacking to the other, so that the result is fairly adequate. Thus A will often give what g withholds, and conversely. Moreover it will appear from what has been said that a combination of the secondary and capricious authorities must often decide a reading against the direct and primary. For instance, the combination Ag is, as a rule, decisive in favour of a reading, as against the more direct witnesses GL, notwithstanding that A singly, or g singly, is liable to any amount of aberration, though in different directions.

The foregoing account applies to six out of the seven letters. The text of the Epistle to the Romans has had a distinct history and is represented by separate authorities of its own. This epistle was at an early date incorporated into the Antiochene Acts of Martyrdom, and thus disconnected from the other six. In its new connexion, it was disseminated and translated separately. It so happens that the only extant Greek Ms which contains this epistle (the Colbertine) is even less satisfactory than the sole Greek Ms of the other six (the Medicean); but on the other hand we have more than compensation for this inferiority in the fact that the Acts of Martyrdom (with the incorporated epistle) were translated independently both into Syriac (Sm) and into Armenian (Am); and these two versions, which are extant, furnish two additional authorities for the text. Moreover the Metaphrast, who compiled his Acts of Ignatius from this and another Martyrology, has retained the Epistle to the Romans in his text, though in an abridged and altered form.

From this account it will be seen that the authorities for the Epistle to the Romans fall into three classes.

(1) Those authorities, which contain the epistle as part of the Martyrology. These are the Greek (G), the Latin (L), the Syriac (S_m), and the Armenian (A_m), besides the Metaphrast (M). These authorities however are of different values. When the epistle was first incorporated in the Acts of Martyrdom, it still preserved a comparatively pure form. When it has arrived at the stage in which it appears in the extant Greek MS (G), it is very corrupt. In this last form, among other corruptions, it exhibits interpolations and alterations which have been introduced from the Long Recension (g). The MS used by the Metaphrast exhibited a text essentially the same as that of G.

- (2) The independent Syriac Version (S) of which only a few fragments remain, but which is represented, as before, by the Syriac Abridgment (Σ) and the Armenian Version (A).
- (3) The Long Recension (g), which in great parts of this epistle keeps close to the text of the original Ignatius.

Though the principles on which a text of the Seven Epistles should be constructed are sufficiently obvious, they have been strangely overlooked.

The first period in the history of the text of the genuine Ignatius commences with the publication of the Latin Version by Ussher (1644), and of the Greek original by Isaac Voss (1646). The Greek of the Epistle to the Romans was first published by Ruinart (1689). The text of Voss was a very incorrect transcript of the Medicean Ms, and in this respect subsequent collations have greatly improved on his editio princeps. But beyond this next to nothing was done to emend the Greek text. Though some very obvious corrections are suggested by the Latin Version, these were either neglected altogether by succeeding editors or were merely indicated by them in their notes without being introduced into the text. There was the same neglect also of the aid which might have been derived from the Long Recension. Moreover the practice of treating the several MSS and the Latin Version of the Long Recension independently of one another and recording them co-ordinately with the Greek and Latin of the genuine Ignatius (instead of using them apart to ascertain the original form of the Long Recension, and then employing the text of this Recension, when thus ascertained, as a single authority) threw the criticism of the text into great confusion. Nor was any attention paid to the quotations, which in several instances have the highest value. Hence it happened that during this period which extended over two centuries from Voss to Hefele (ed. 1, 1839; ed. 3, 1847) and Jacobson (ed. 1, 1838; ed. 3, 1847) inclusive, nothing or next to nothing (beyond the more accurate collation of the Medicean Ms) was done for the Greek text.

versions-the Syriac Abridgment with the Syriac Fragments by Cureton (1845, 1849), and the Armenian Version by Petermann (1849)1. New materials of the highest value were thus placed in the hands of critics; but, notwithstanding the interest which the Ignatian question excited, nearly thirty years elapsed before any proper use was made of them. In some cases the failure was due, at least in part, to a false solution of the Ignatian question. The text of Bunsen (1847), Cureton (1849), and Lipsius (1859), which started from the assumption that the Syriac Abridgment represented the genuine Ignatius, must necessarily have foundered on this rock, even if the principles adopted had been sound in other respects. Petermann and Dressel (1857) however maintained the priority of the Seven Epistles of the Vossian text to the Three of the Curetonian; and so far they built upon the true basis. But Petermann contented himself with a casual emendation of the text here and there from the versions; while Dressel neglected them altogether. Jacobson (ed. 4, 1863) and Hefele (ed. 4, 1855) also, in their more recent editions which have appeared since the Oriental versions were rendered accessible, have been satisfied with recording some of the phenomena of these versions in their notes without applying them to the correction of the text, though they also were unhampered by the false theory which maintained the priority of the Curetonian Abridgment. It was reserved for the most recent editors, Zahn (1876), and Funk (1878), to make use of all the available materials and to reconstruct the text for the first time on sound and intelligible principles.

The text which I have given was constructed independently of both these editions, and before I had seen them, but the main principles are the same. Indeed these principles must be sufficiently obvious to those who have investigated the materials with any care. In the details however my views frequently differ from theirs, as must necessarily be the case with independent editors; and in some respects I have had the advantage of more complete or more accurate materials than were accessible to them.

In the apparatus criticus, which is appended to the text, I have been anxious not to overload my notes with matter which would be irrelevant to the main issue. Thus for instance, those divergences in the several versions which, however interesting and instructive in themselves, cannot be supposed to represent various readings in the Greek text, are carefully excluded. On the other hand it has been my aim to omit nothing which could reasonably be thought to contribute to the formation of a correct text.

In carrying out this principle, the following rules have been observed.

- I. The various readings of the Greek Manuscripts of the genuine Ignatius (G), i.e. of the Medicean Ms in the Six Epistles, and of the Colbertine in the Epistle to the Romans, are given in full. This is also the case with the fragment of the Epistle to the Ephesians (G') which is found in another Paris Ms. I have not however thought it worth while to record differences of accent, or such variations as $\delta \tau'$ ∂v for $\delta \tau av$, δv for $\delta \tau av$, δv for δv and for δv are the placement of the Epistle to the Ephesians (G') which is found in another Paris Ms. I have not however thought it worth while to record differences of accent, or such variations as $\delta \tau'$ δv for $\delta \tau av$, δv for δv f
- 2. The readings of the Latin Version (L) are generally given from the ultimate revised text, as it is printed in the Appendix. This text is founded on a comparison of the two MSS of the version, modified by other critical considerations which will be explained in their proper place. It did not seem necessary to give here the various readings of these two MSS (L_1 , L_2), except in very rare cases. Where such variations occur, I have held it sufficient to call attention to the fact, referring the reader to the Appendix itself. As the Latin Version is strictly literal, every variation which remains in the ultimate Latin text (i.e. the text as restored to the condition in which presumably it left the hands of the translator) is recorded, because every such variation represents, or may have represented, a corresponding variation in the Greek MS which the translator used.
- 3. In like manner the various readings of the different MSS $(\Sigma_1, \Sigma_2, \Sigma_3)$ of the Syriac Abridgment (Σ) are not generally given. They will be found in the Appendix, where this version is printed at length with an apparatus criticus of its own and a translation. In admitting or rejecting divergences which this abridgment exhibits, I have been guided by the considerations already alleged. The few fragments which survive of the original unabridged Syriac Version (S) are also printed in the Appendix. In the case of this and all the other Oriental versions Latin renderings are given in the critical notes for the sake of convenience and uniformity.
- 4. The Armenian Version (A) has been described in the proper place. From the description it will have appeared that only a small proportion of its many divergences deserves to be recorded as bearing on the Greek text. In giving its various readings I have found Petermann's Latin translation of the greatest service; but I have myself consulted the Armenian original as printed by him, in order that, so far as my slender knowledge of the language served me, I might not be misled by the necessary distortion produced in passing through the medium of another language.

- 5. The fragment of the Copto-Thebaic Version (C) will be found in the Appendix, where it is published for the first time. It is ancient and literal enough to be an important authority as far as it goes, and I have therefore given all its variations.
- 6. The Armenian and Syriac Versions of the Epistle to the Romans in the Acts of Martyrdom (A_m, S_m), having been translated separately and directly from the Greek, are independent of each other and of the above-mentioned versions (A, S) in these languages. I have freely used Petermann's translation of the one and Moesinger's of the other, but not without satisfying myself by consulting the originals.
- 7. The text of the Metaphrast (M) for this same epistle is never quoted, unless supported by some other authority. In other cases his mode of compilation deprives his text of any weight. The Mss of the Metaphrast are very numerous; the readings of some of these are given by Cotelier, Dressel, Zahn, and others.
- 8. The Greek of the Long Recension (g) will be found with its own apparatus criticus in the Appendix. The limits within which it is necessary for my purpose to quote its text as an authority have been already indicated (p. 4). In citing this recension I have given the critical text at which I have myself arrived, without (as a rule) referring to the variations of the several MSS or of the Latin Version (l). These will be found in their proper place.

For convenience of reference I give the following recapitulation of the symbols:

- G. Greek Original (Medicean and Colbertine MSS).G'. Paris fragment of the Epistle to the Ephesians.
- L. Latin Version. L₁, L₂, the MSS of this Version.
- A. Armenian Version.
- S. Syriac Version.

 S₁, S₂, S₃, being the several collections of fragments belonging to this version.

- C. Coptic Version.
- \(\Sigma\). Abridgment of the Syriac Version.
- g. Greek Original of the Long Recension.
- l. Latin Version of the Long Recension.

Am. Armenian Version in the Martyrology.

S_m. Syriac Version in the Martyrology.

M. Acts of the Metaphrast.

The Greek and Latin quotations from the fathers are given by the volumes and pages of the standard editions; the Syriac quotations by the pages of Cureton's Corpus Ignatianum.

The following marks and abbreviations are also used.

add. Where a word or words are added or prefixed in the præf. authority subjoined.

al. Where the divergence is so great in a version or recension, that no inference can be drawn as to the reading which the author of the version or recension had before him. This will also include passages which are so corrupt as to be worthless for determining a reading.

def. When the context, in which the word or words should occur, is wanting either from designed or accidental omission or from the imperfection of the MS or MSS.

om. When the context is there, but does not contain the word or words in question.

dub. Where a word or expression is so translated or paraphrased, that the reading which it represents is uncertain.

marg. When the reading is found in the margin of the authority in question.

s. Attached to an authority signifies that the reading of such authority is not given on express testimony, but may be inferred from the silence of collators.

txt. When the authority quoted supports the reading adopted in the text.

edd. When an authority is given as generally quoted, or as it stands in the common editions, though some MSS may be known or suspected to have it otherwise.

- [] An authority is included in square brackets thus [g], in all cases where it is discredited by some special circumstances: e.g. (1) where the grammatical forms are so close as to be easily confused, as in the case of the singular and plural in the Syriac; or (2) where the context in a version or recension is so altered as to impugn the fidelity of the author or the scribe at this particular point; or (3) where a passage may have been modified in the process of quotation by the influences of the context.
- () The words included in brackets of this form have reference to the authority which has immediately preceded and which they explain or qualify in some way.
- * An asterisk after an authority (e.g. L*) refers the reader to the Appendix for particulars as to the reading of the authority which is so distinguished.

TO THE EPHESIANS.

TO THE EPHESIANS.

THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS belongs to the group of four letters written by the saint from Smyrna (§ 21). He had not himself visited Ephesus on his way; but the Ephesians had been apprised of his journey and had sent delegates to meet him at Smyrna (§§ 1, 2, 21). The probable manner in which this information was conveyed to the Ephesians has been suggested above (p. 2).

Ephesus was the nearest to Smyrna of those cities which are recorded to have sent their delegates thither, the distance between the two places being about 40 miles (Strabo xiv. p. 632 τριακόσιοι εἴκοσι στάδιοι). We are therefore prepared to find that the Ephesian delegacy was more numerous than that of any other church. The bishop Onesimus was there in person; and he was accompanied by four others who are mentioned by name, Burrhus, Crocus, Euplus, and Fronto (§§ 1, 2). Of the two last the names only are given. On the other hand Crocus is singled out in this letter for special praise as having greatly 'refreshed' the saint and is mentioned also in affectionate terms in the Epistle to the Romans (§ 10); while Burrhus the deacon is valued so highly by him that he requests the Ephesians to allow him to remain in his company. This request was granted; and we find Burrhus with him at Troas, where he acts as his amanuensis (see the note on § 2).

Altogether Ignatius appears to have had much satisfaction in the presence of these Ephesian delegates, whom he mentions in all his other letters written from Smyrna (Magn. 15, Trall. 13, Rom. 10). Of his intercourse with Onesimus their bishop more especially he speaks in terms of grateful acknowledgment. He describes him as 'unspeakable in love' (§ 1). He says that in a very brief space of time they had held much spiritual communion (§ 5).

But not only was he moved by gratitude to write this letter. He was also deeply impressed with the previous history of the Ephesian Church. He speaks of it as 'renowned unto all ages'. He himself is the devoted slave of such a church (§ 8). He does not venture to set himself up as their teacher: he is content to be their fellow-disciple. Nay, he will even look upon them as his trainers in the athletic contest for the martyr's crown which awaits him (§ 3). Above all, he remembers their companionship with Apostles; and remembering this, he is constrained to dwell on his own weakness as contrasted with their strength. They had escorted the blessed Paul on the way to martyrdom—Paul who never tires of commemorating them in his letters; and he himself would fain tread in the same path (§ 12).

Of the character of this church he speaks most favourably. Onesimus himself had commended them in the highest terms ($\delta \pi \epsilon \rho \epsilon \pi \alpha u \nu \epsilon \hat{\iota}$). No heresy had found a lodgment among them. They were steadfast in maintaining doctrinal purity and good order (§ 6). They were spiritually minded in all things (§ 8). They owned no other rule of life but God (§ 9). Thus the Ephesian Church appears to have sustained the character and profited by the warning which it received on the last occasion when it is directly mentioned in the Apostolic writings; 'I know thy works and thy labour and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil, and didst try them that call themselves Apostles, though they are not, and didst find them liars, and thou hast patience and didst bear for My Name's sake and hast not fainted. Nevertheless I have this against thee, that thou didst leave thy first love. Remember therefore from whence thou hast fallen and repent and do the first works (Rev. ii. 2—5).'

But, though heresy had not found a home among them, it was hovering in their outskirts. Certain persons who came from a distance had attempted to sow the seeds of error among them, but had been repulsed (§ 7). These were doubtless the docetic teachers, who are denounced in his other epistles. Hence the emphasis with which he dwells on the 'reality' of the Passion in the opening salutation ($\frac{\partial v}{\partial \lambda} \eta \theta u v \bar{\varphi}$). Hence also the prominence which he gives to the true humanity of our Lord, where he has occasion to mention His two natures (§§ 7, 18, 19, 20). False teachers are described as 'violators of the temple' in the worst sense, and as such condemned to the severest vengeance (§ 16).

As a safeguard against the inroads of this heresy, the saint gives the Ephesians some practical advice. They must assemble themselves together more frequently than hitherto for congregational worship (§§ 5, 13). No man can eat the bread of God, if he keeps aloof from the altar (§ 5). More especially they must adhere to their bishop, as the personal centre of union (§§ 2, 3, 4, 5, 6). The silent modesty of Onesimus renders this warning the more necessary (§ 6). Unity will thus be secured, and unity is the overthrow of Satan (§ 13).

While enforcing these duties, Ignatius indulges in several metaphors, always vigorous, but sometimes extravagant, after his wont. One such metaphor more especially demands attention, as containing a vivid appeal to the local experiences of an Ephesian audience. In the reign of Trajan a munificent Roman of high rank, Gaius Vibius Salutaris, a citizen of Ephesus, gave to the temple of Artemis a large number of gold and silver-gilt images. Among them are mentioned several statues of Artemis herself, one representing her as the Huntress, others as the Torchbearer; images of the Roman Senate, of the Ephesian Council, of the Roman People, of the Equestrian Order, of the Ephebeia, etc. One of the ordinances relating to his benefactions bears the date February in the year of the Consuls Sextus Attius Suburanus II and Marcus Asinius Marcellus (A.D. 104)—the same year in which, according to one Martyrology, Ignatius was put to death. Salutaris provided by an endowment for the care and cleaning of these images; and he ordered that they should be carried in solemn procession from the temple to the theatre and back again on the birthday of the goddess (6th Thargelion), on the days of public assembly, and at such other times as the Council and People might determine. They were to be escorted by the curators of the temple, the victors in the sacred contests, and other officers who are named. The procession was to enter the city by the Magnesian gate and leave by the Coressian, so as to pass through its whole length. On entering the city it was to be joined by the Ephebi who should accompany it from gate to gate. The decrees, recording the acceptance of these benefactions on the conditions named, were set up on tablets in the Great Theatre, where they have been recently discovered (Wood's Discoveries at Ephesus Inscr. vi. 1 sq.). The practice of carrying the images and sacred vessels belonging to the temple in solemn procession on the festival of the goddess and on other occasions doubtless existed long before; but these benefactions of Salutaris would give a new impulse and add a new splendour to the ceremonial. At such a time the metaphor of the saint would speak with more than common directness to the imagination of his Ephesian readers, when, alluding to these pagan festivals, he tells them that as Christians they all alike are priests and victors, for they carry, not in their hands, as the votaries of Artemis carry their images and treasures, but in their hearts, each his God, his Christ, his shrine; that they too are duly arrayed for their festivities, not indeed in ornaments and cloth of gold, but in the commandments of Jesus Christ which are their holiday garments (see the notes on § 9).

The Epistle to the Ephesians is the longest and most elaborate of the extant letters of Ignatius. This fact may be explained by his close relations with the Ephesian delegates, as well as by his respect for the past history and present condition of the Ephesian Church, as already mentioned. Towards the close he enters upon what looks like a systematic discussion of the doctrine of the Incarnation (§ 19). But he breaks off abruptly, promising, if it be God's will, to send them a second tract ($\beta\iota\beta\lambda(\delta\iota\sigma)$) wherein he will continue the subject upon which he has entered, 'the economy relating to the new Man Christ Jesus' (§ 20). This promise he seems never to have fulfilled. At least no such second letter or treatise has ever been heard of. The hurry of his subsequent movements (Polyc. 8), perhaps also the direct interference of his guards (Rom. 5), may have prevented his carrying out his intention.

The following is an analysis of the epistle:

'IGNATIUS to the Church of Ephesus, which was blessed by God and predestined to glory through a true Passion, hearty greeting in Christ.'

'You have acted in a manner congenial to your nature, in sending your delegates to comfort me on my way to martyrdom. In welcoming Onesimus I welcomed you all. You are indeed happy in your bishop, and should love him as he deserves (§ 1). I thank you for sending Burrhus also, and I trust you will let him remain with me. Your other delegates too, Crocus more especially, have greatly refreshed me. Glorify Jesus Christ by unity and submission to your bishops and presbyters (§ 2). I do not say this, as if I had a right to command. Indeed it were much more fit for me to learn of you. But love will not let me be silent. The bishops represent the will of Jesus Christ (§ 3). Your presbyters are to your bishop as the strings to the lyre.

Let one harmonious chant rise up to heaven, as from one chorus singing in accord. Union is fellowship with God (§ 4). If my brief intercourse with your bishop has been so blessed, what blessing will not attend your unbroken communion with him! The united prayer of the bishop and the congregation is all powerful. He that stands aloof brings God's condemnation upon himself (§ 5). If your bishop is silent, he only claims from you the more respect. The delegate of the Master must be received as the Master Himself. I rejoice to hear so good an account of you from Onesimus. He tells me that heresy has found no home among you (§ 6). Still certain persons are going about teaching false doctrine. Shun them, as you would wild beasts. There is only one Physician who can heal their wounds; and He is flesh, as well as spirit, Man as well as God (§ 7). Be not deceived, but put away all evil desires. I am devoted to the renowned Church of Ephesus. The things of the flesh and things of the Spirit are exclusive the one of the other. With you even the things done in the flesh are the promptings of the Spirit (§ 8). I have learned that certain persons coming from a distance attempted to sow the seeds of false doctrine among you: but you stopped your ears and would not listen. You are stones raised aloft to be fitted into the temple of God. You are holidaymakers, bearing your sacred things in festive procession; and I rejoice that I am permitted to take part in your festivities (§ 9). Pray for the heathen, since repentance is still possible for them. Teach them by your conduct; by your gentleness, your humility, your prayers, your steadfastness in the faith. Requite them not in like kind, but imitate the Lord in your forbearance. In this way show that you are their brothers. Be chaste and modest (§ 10).'

'The world is drawing to a close. If we value not the present grace, let us at least dread the coming wrath. One way or another let us be found in Christ Jesus, in whom I also hope to rise from the dead and to have my portion with the Christians of Ephesus, the scholars of Apostles (§ 11). I cannot compare myself with you—you who were associates in the mysteries with Paul, who are mentioned by him in every letter (§ 12). Meet together more frequently for eucharistic service. These harmonious gatherings will be the overthrow of Satan. There is nothing better than peace (§ 13). This ye yourselves know. Cherish faith and love—the beginning and the end of life. Where these exist, all else will follow. The tree is known by its fruits. Christianity is not a thing of profession but of power (§ 14). Doing with silence is better than not doing with speech. The silence and the speech alike of the great Teacher were operative. Whosoever understands His word will understand His silence also. Nothing is hidden from the Lord. In all our doings let us remember that we are His temples (§ 15). No violators of the temple shall inherit God's kingdom. To those that violate the faith by corrupt doctrine the warning is especially addressed. They and their hearers shall go into unquenchable fire (§ 16). The Lord was anointed with ointment that He might breathe incorruption upon His Church. Shun the foul odour of false doctrine. Why should we perish in our folly, by refusing the grace of God (§ 17)? I am the devoted slave of the Cross, which is a scandal to the unbeliever. Away with the wisdom of this world! Our God Jesus Christ was born a Man ($ 18). This economy was hidden from the Prince of this world, until it was accomplished—this threefold mystery, the virginity of Mary, her child-bearing, and the death of Christ. It was revealed by a star of unwonted brightness. All the powers of heaven were dismayed at its appearing; for the Incarnation of God was the overthrow of the reign of evil. This was the beginning of the end. The dissolution of Death was at hand ($ 19). If it please God, I will write again and say more of this economy. Only be steadfast in the faith; preserve the unity of the body; render obedience to the bishop and presbyters (§ 20).'

'My affectionate devotion to you and your delegates. I write this from Smyrna. Remember me and pray for the Church in Syria, of which I am a most unworthy member. Farewell in God and Christ (§ 21).'

'IGNATIUS, called also Theophorus, to the CHURCH OF EPHESUS, which is greatly blessed of God and was foreordained from the beginning to eternal glory, united and elected in the power of a real Passion through the will of the Father and of Christ;

hearty greeting in Christ.'

I. ὁ καὶ Θεοφόρος This word would be equally appropriate to the true Christian, whether taken in its active sense (θεοφόρος, bearing God, clad with God) or in its passive sense (θεόφορος, borne along by God, inspired by God); Clem. Alex. Strom. vii. 13 (p. 882) θείος ἄρα ὁ γνωστικὸς καὶ ήδη άγιος, θεοφορών καὶ θεοφορούμενος; comp. Strom. vi. 12 (p. 792). There can however be little doubt that it should here be taken actively and accentuated Θεοφόρος; for (1) We have the authority of Ignatius himself below, § 9, where the connexion of θεοφόροι with ναοφόροι, χριστοφόροι, άγιοφόροι, fixes its meaning; see also the analogous words σαρκοφόρος, νεκροφόρος, Smyrn. 5. (2) It is so interpreted universally till a very late date, e.g. by the Syriac translator who renders it 'clad with God.' See also the altercation in Mart. Ign. Ant. 2, where in answer to the question of Trajan καὶ τίς έστιν θεοφόρος; Ignatius answers 'Ο Χριστον έχων έν στέρνοις. (3) The metaphor of 'bearing God,' 'bearing Christ,' is frequent in early Christian writers; e.g. Iren. iii. 16. 3 'portante homine et capiente et complectente filium Dei,' v. 8. I 'assuescentes capere et portare Deum' (quoted by Pearson on Smyrn. inscr.). See also the Latin reading in I Cor. vi. 20 'glorificate et portate (tollite) Deum in corpore vestro'; comp. Tert. de Resurr. 10, 16, de Pudic. 16, Cypr. Test. iii. 11, Dom. Orat. 11. Hence Tertullian elsewhere, adv. Marc. v. 7, 'Quomodo tollemus Deum in corpore perituro?' Compare also Clem. Alex. Exc. Theod. 27 (p. 976) τὸ θεοφόρον γίνεσθαι τὸν άνθοωπον προσεχώς ένεργούμενον ύπο τοῦ Κυρίου καὶ καθάπερ σῶμα αὐτοῦ νινόμενον. (4) Even in later writers and in other connexions this active sense prevails: e.g. Greg. Naz. Epist. 102 (II. p. 96, Caillau) τὸ δεῖν προσκυνεῖν μη ἄνθρωπον θεοφόρον ἀλλά Θεὸν σαρκοφόρου, and below μη σάρκα θεοφόρον άλλὰ Θεὸν ἀνθρωποφόρον. See other examples in Pearson V. I. p. 521 sq, Suicer Thes. s.v. Similarly γριστοφόρος seems to be always active (see Phileas in Euseb. H. E.

θει Θεοῦ πατρὸς πληρώματι, τῆ προωρισμένη πρὸ

viii. 10 οἱ χριστοφόροι μάρτυρες); while on the other hand πνευματόφορος is commonly used in such a sense as to suggest a passive meaning, 'inspired, borne along by the Spirit,' e.g. Hos. ix. 7 (LXX), Presbyt. in Iren. v. 5. 1, Herm. Mand. 11, Theoph. ad Autol. i. 9, ii. 22, Dionys. Rom. in Athanas. Op. I. p. 182, and frequently. But even here we are perhaps deceived, and the idea of inspiration may be derived equally well from the active πνευματοφόρος 'a vehicle of the Spirit'; e.g. in Herm. Mand. II (a reference already cited) the word may be explained by an expression which occurs in the neighbourhood, έχων έν έαυτώ δύναμιν πνεύματος θείου. Comp. Iren. iv. 20. 6 'videbitur Deus ab hominibus qui portant Spiritum ejus.' The passive word θεοφόρητος, which is also classical, is found occasionally in early Christian writers, e.g. Hippol. Fragm. 123 (p. 193 Lagarde), and several times in Philo, e.g. de Somn. i. 43, ii. 1 (I. pp. 658, 659). The idea involved in the word $\theta \epsilon \phi \phi \rho \phi \rho \sigma$ is found also in contemporary Stoic writers; e.g. Epictet. Diss. ii. 8. 12, 13 Θεὸν περιφέρεις...έν σαυτώ φ ερεις αὐτὸν κ.τ.λ. (comp. ii. 16. 33), Lucan Phars. ix. 563 'Ille Deo plenus, tacita quem mente gerebat.' The active sense therefore must be adopted, but the alternative of 'bearing God' and 'wearing God' still remains. All the passages quoted however seem to show that the former is the sense of $\theta\epsilon \phi \phi \rho \sigma s$ here, though the Syriac renders it 'God-clad,' and S. Paul's metaphor of 'putting on Christ' might suggest this meaning. The former sense indeed is imperatively demanded below, § 9.

It is more probable that this surname was adopted by Ignatius himself, as a token of his Christian obligations, than that it was conferred upon him by others, as a title of honour. For supposed references to it in the body of his epistles, see the notes on Magn. 1, Trall. 4, Smyrn. 5. It occurs in the opening of all his genuine epistles; and in this he is imitated by the Pseudo-Ignatius. The epithet however is not confined to him, but is applied freely to later fathers, especially to those assembled at any of the great councils, as Nicæa; see Pearson V. I. l. c. In his case however it has the character of a second name or surname, as the mode of introduction, ὁ καὶ Θεοφόρος, shows; comp. Acts xiii. 9 Σαῦλος, ὁ καὶ Παῦλos. This form of expression is extremely common in inscriptions; e.g. Boeckh C. I. G. 2836 'Αριστοκλής ὁ καὶ Ζήνων, 2949 Μ. Αύρ. Πετρώνιος Κέλσος ό καὶ Μένιππος, 3282 Καστρίκιος 'Αρτεμίδωρος ὁ καὶ ['Αμ]μιανός, 3309 Ερμείας ό καὶ Λίτορις, 3387 Φλαουΐα Τρύφαινα ή καὶ 'Ροδόπη, 3550 Μενέστρατον τὸν καὶ Τρύφωνα, 3675 Γάιος Γαίου ὁ καὶ Πίστος, 3737 Μαξίμα ή καὶ Ἡδονή, 4207 Έλένη ή καὶ "Αφφιον, and so frequently. From this epithet arose the tradition that Ignatius was the very child whom our Lord took up in His arms (Mark ix. 36; comp. Matt. xviii. 2, Luke ix. 47), the passive θεόφορος being substituted for the active θεοφόρος and a literal sense being attached to the word.

The groundless suspicion of Dusterdieck (p. 89), Bunsen (B. p. 33, I. v. A. p. 38), Renan (Les Evangiles p. xxvii), and others, that $\theta \epsilon o \phi \delta \rho o s$ is a later insertion, has been refuted by Zahn (I.v.A. p. 69 sq). It goes directly in the teeth of all the evidence. Daillé founded an objection to the genuineness of the epistles on the use of this surname, urging that it arose out of the legend. He is refuted by Pearson (V.I. p. 520 sq), who shows that the converse was the case.

τη εὐλογημένη κ.τ.λ.] This opening address contains several obvious reminiscences of Ephes. i. 3 sq. o Θεὸς καὶ πατήρ... ὁ εὐλογήσας ήμας έν πάση εὐλογία...καθώς έξελέξατο ήμας ... προ καταβολής κόσμου, είναι ήμας...αμώμους...προορίσας ήμας...κατά την εὐδοκίαν τοῦ θελήματος...διὰ τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ... προορισθέντες...κατά την βουλήν τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ...είς τὸ εἶναι ήμᾶς είς ἔπαινον δόξης αὐτοῦ. See also the notes on πληρώματι below, and on μιμηταί όντες Θεού § I, and for πρὸ αἰώνων comp. Ephes. iii. II κατά πρόθεσιν τών αἰώνων. Though S. Paul's so-called Epistle to the Ephesians was probably a circular letter, yet even on this hypothesis Ephesus was the principal Church addressed, and there was therefore a special propriety in the adoption of its language. This is analogous to the references in the Roman Clement (§ 47) to the First Epistle to the Corinthians, and in Polycarp (§ 3, comp. 9, 11) to the Epistle to the Philippians, where these fathers are writing to the same two Churches respectively. The direct mention of the Epistle to the Ephesians, which is supposed to occur at a later point in this letter (§ 12 Παύλου...ος έν πάση έπιστολή μνημονεύει ὑμῶν), is extremely doubtful (see the note there); but the acquaintance of Ignatius with that epistle appears from other passages besides this exordium, e.g. Polyc. 5.

 $\dot{\epsilon}\nu$ $\mu\epsilon\gamma\dot{\epsilon}\theta\epsilon\dot{\epsilon}$ 'in greatness.' The $\mu\dot{\epsilon}\gamma\dot{\epsilon}\theta\sigma$ s describes the moral and spiritual stature of the Ephesian

Church itself; comp. Smyrn. 11 ἀπέλαβον τὸ ἴδιον μέγεθος, Rom. 3 μεγέθους έστιν ὁ χριστιανισμός. These are the only other passages in Ignatius where μέγεθος occurs, and in both it refers not to God, but to the Church. We might be tempted by the parallel, Rom. inscr. ἐν μεγαλειότητι πατρός ύψίστου, to connect έν μεγέθει with Θεοῦ πατρός, but this would oblige us to interpret πληρώματι 'fully,' 'richly' (as Zahn I. v. A. p. 415, while ad loc. he compares Rom. xv. 29 έν πληρώματι εὐλογίας); an interpretation which cannot, I think, stand.

Θεού πατρός πληρώματι 'through the plenitude of God the Father; where pleroma is used, as by S. Paul and S. John, in its theological sense, to denote the totality of the Divine attributes and powers: see the excursus on Colossians p. 257 The dative case is instrumental. To participation in the pleroma of God, or of Christ, we are indebted for all the gifts and graces which we possess; John i. 16 ἐκ τοῦ πληρώματος αὐτοῦ ἡμεῖς πάντες ἐλάβομεν κ.τ.λ. The expression before us should be compared especially with Ephes. iii. 19 $\tilde{i}\nu a \pi \lambda \eta \rho \omega \theta \hat{\eta} \tau \epsilon \epsilon \hat{i} s$ πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, a passage which Ignatius probably had in his mind, as this same epistle of S. Paul is present to his thoughts throughout his opening salutation. See also Ephes. i. 23, where the $\pi \lambda \dot{\eta} \rho \omega \mu a$ is regarded as transfused wholly into the Church. Ignatius again uses this term in its technical sense, Trall. inscr. ην καὶ ἀσπάζομαι ἐν τῷ πληρώματι. For the prominence of the pleroma in the Valentinian theology see Colossians p. 265 sq. For similar instances of phraseology, which was afterwards characteristic of Valentinianism or of other developments of Gnosticism, in these epistles, see the

2 ἡνωμένη καὶ ἐκλελεγμένη] ἡνωμένην καὶ ἐκλελεγμένην GLg; but ΣA refer the words to the Church, and seem therefore to have read the datives: see the lower note. Their renderings are ct (i.e. quae ecclesia) perfecta et electa Σ; quae perfecta est (om. καὶ ἐκλελεγμένη) Α. In Σ the word ומשמלים et perfecta is the same which notes on § 1 φύσει, Rom. 6, Magn. 8, Trall. 1.

The sentence would be simplified, if we could venture on the reading καὶ πληρώματι. In this case μέγεθος, like $\pi \lambda \dot{\eta} \rho \omega \mu a$, would be attributed to God; and here again a Valentinian tinge would be given to the language of Ignatius, for μέγεθος appears to have had a technical sense with this school: comp. Iren. i. 2. 2 διὰ τὸ μέγεθος του βάθους καὶ τὸ ἀνεξιχνίαστον τοῦ πατρός, and esp. Anon. in Epiphan. Hær. xxxi. 5 (see Stieren's Irenæus, p. 916 sq) ην τινες "Εννοιαν έφασαν, έτεροι Χάριν οἰκείως, διὰ τὸ έπικεχορηγηκέναι αὐτὴν θησαυρίσματα τοῦ μεγέθους τοῖς ἐκ τοῦ μεγέθους, οί δὲ ἀληθεύσαντες Σιγὴν προσηγόρευσαν, ότι δι' ένθυμήσεως χωρίς λόγου τὰ πάντα τὸ μέγεθος ἐτελείωσεν ώς οὖν προείπον, ἡ ἄφθαρτος [αἰωνία] βουληθείσα δεσμά ρηξαι έθήλυνε τὸ μέγεθος ἐπ' ὀρέξει ἀναπαύσεως αὐτοῦ; comp. the Valentinian use of μεγέθη for 'powers' in Iren. i. 13. 6, i. 14. 4, and see also i. 13. 3. I find moreover that in Syriac 'the greatness' (רבותא) was used absolutely to signify the Divine Majesty. To the passage from Ephraem Syrus (Op. Syr. I. p. 68), quoted by Michaelis (Castell. Lex. Syr. s. v. p. 843) for this use, add two examples from the Syriac of Clem. Recogn. p. 21 l. 28, p. 26 l. 7 (ed. Lagarde), both which passages are altered in the Latin of Ruffinus, perhaps because he did not understand this sense of $\mu \epsilon \gamma \epsilon \theta os$. It is possible therefore that this reading καὶ πληρώματι is correct; but in the extant authorities which have it the kal must be regarded as a later (and very obvious) insertion, and if it existed in the original copy, it must have dropped out at a date anterior to any existing texts. The original form of the Syriac was not ומשמליא 'and perfected (fulfilled),' as it stands in the Curetonian MSS, but בשומליא 'in (or by) the perfection (fulness),' or some similar expression, as the Armenian rendering shows (see Petermann ad loc.). The word is the rendering of πλήρωμα in Rom. xi. 12, Ephes. i. 23, iv. 13. The substitution would be the more easy, because the former word occurs in the immediate context as the rendering (or loose paraphrase) of ήνωμένη.

1. είς For the construction εἶναι εἰς 'to be destined for, reserved for' comp. Ephes. i. 12 εἰς τὸ εἶναι εἰς ἔπαινον κ.τ.λ., Acts viii. 23 εἰς χολὴν πικρίας...ὁρῶ σε ὄντα, I Cor. xiv. 22 αἰ παράμονον άτρεπτον 'abiding and unchangeable.' Both adjectives must be connected with δόξαν, even though we should read ἡνωμένην κ.τ.λ. afterwards; comp. Clem. Al. Strom, vii. 10 (p. 866) έσόμενος, ώς είπειν, φως έστως και μένον ίδίως, πάντη πάντως ἄτρεπτον. For παράμονος comp. Philad. inscr. χαρά αἰώνιος καὶ παράμονος; for ἄτρεπτος, which is used especially of the unchangeable things of eternity, see e.g. Clem. Hom. xx. 5 άτρεπτον γαρ [ό Θεὸς] καὶ ἀεὶ ων, Philo Leg. All. i. 15 (I. p. 53) ἄποιον αὐτὸν [τὸν Θεὸν] είναι καὶ ἄφθαρτον καὶ ἄτρεπτον.

has occurred just before as the rendering of $\pi\lambda\eta\rho\omega\mu\alpha\tau$, and there is probably therefore some corruption, as it does not represent $\dot{\eta}\nu\omega\mu\dot{\epsilon}\nu\eta$. Cureton (1845) suggested that Σ read $\dot{\eta}\nu\nu\sigma\mu\dot{\epsilon}\nu\eta\nu$. $\dot{\epsilon}\nu$ $\pi\dot{\alpha}\theta\epsilon\iota$] GLAg; in signo Σ : see the lower note.

ed to substitute datives for accusatives, as the change is slight. if the accusatives be retained, they must still be referred to the Church, and not connected with δόξαν. As coming after the infinitive, elvai [αὐτὴν]...ἡνωμένην κ.τ.λ., they are justifiable: comp. Winer Gramm. § xliv. p. 402, lxvi. p. 782, Kühner II. p. 590 sq. But in the present instance they are especially awkward, as being interposed between datives before and after, and also as being liable to confusion with the accusatives immediately preceding. For the frequency of ένοῦν etc. in Ignatius see the note on § 4.

ἐν πάθει] This should probably be connected with both the preceding words. The 'passion' is at once the bond of their union and the ground of their election. For the former idea comp. Philad. 3 εἴ τις ἐν ἀλλοτρία γνώμη περιπατεῖ, οὖτος τῷ πάθει οὖ συγκατατίθεται; for the latter, Trall. II ἐν τῷ πάθει αὖτοῦ προσκαλεῖται ὑμᾶς. This latter relation it has, because in foreordaining the Sacrifice of the Cross God foreordained the call of the faithful. Thus their election was involved in Christ's passion.

This word has a special prominence in the Epistles of Ignatius. In Christ's passion is involved the peace of one Church (Trall. inscr.) and the joy of another (Philad. inscr.). Unto His passion the penitent sinner must return (Smyrn. 5); from His passion the false heretic dissents (Philad. 3); into His passion all men must die (Magn. 5); His passion the saint himself strives to imitate (Rom. 6); the blood of His passion purifies the water of baptism (Ephes. 18); the tree of the passion is the stock from which the Church has sprung (Smyrn. 1); the passion is a special feature which distinguishes the Gospel (Philad. 9, Smyrn. 7). In several passages indeed it is coordinated with the birth or the resurrection (Ephes. 20, Magn. 11, Smyrn. 12, etc.); but frequently, as here, it stands in isolated grandeur, as the one central doctrine of the faith.

Hence the importance that the Passion should have been real (anθινόν), and not, as the Docetic teachers held, a mere phantom suffering and death. On the opposition of Ignatius to these Docetic views, see the note on Trall. 9. As this is the only passage referring to Docetism in the Curetonian letters, and as the Syriac MSS here read Krus 'in signo,' the fact has been pressed as arguing the priority of these letters to the Vossian. Cureton at first supposed that it was a corrupt reading for reading 'in passione,' but afterwards was persuaded that it was genuine and represented the Greek ἐν προθέσει, which (as he supposed) had been changed into ἐν πάθει by the Vossian interpolator to controvert the Docetæ, whose errors are combated elsewhere in the Vossian letters, 'or perhaps indeed the Phantasiastæ of a later period' (C. I. G. p. 276 sq). An argument in favour of Cureton's reading is, that it produces another coincidence with S. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians, i. θελήματι τοῦ πατρός καὶ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ ήμῶν, τῆ ἐκκλησία τῆ ἀξιομακαρίστω τῆ οὐση ἐν

ΙΙ προορισθέντες κατά πρόθεσιν κ.τ.λ. This view accordingly has been adopted by several later writers, e.g. Bunsen (Hippolytus I. p. 94, ed. 2), Lipsius (Aecht. p. 24, S. T. p. 153), and others. Nevertheless Cureton's former view was unquestionably correct. The telling facts are these. (1) The word Kras is not in itself a suitable rendering of πρόθεσις, and as a matter of fact is never so employed in the Peshito. As denoting a 'sign,' 'mark,' it denotes an aim or purpose (σκοπός), but this is somewhat different from πρόθεσις. (2) On the other hand the Greek text has ev made, which is exactly represented by Krus. (3) The two words are not unfrequently confused in the Syriac texts. Even in these Ignatian Epistles, the Armenian translator found this error twice in the Syriac text which he had before him, in Smyrn. I ἀπὸ τοῦ πάθους rendered a signo (see Petermann p. xix), and in Trall. 11 ἐν τῷ πάθει rendered signe. The Syriac of this latter passage is preserved (C. I. p. 200), Krus. I may add a third instance from the Syriac Version of the Clementines p. 74, l. 25 (ed. Lagarde), where one MS (the older of the two and the earliest known Syriac Ms, dated A.D. 411) has Krus and the other Krus, the latter being correct, as appears from the Latin of Ruffinus (Clem. Recogn. ii. 58); and a fourth from Sexti Sententiae pp. 26, 27 (ed. Gildemeister), where there is the same interchange between the two words van, van, in the MSS. As a very slight knowledge of Syriac literature has enabled me to collect these instances, it may be presumed that the confusion is common. Indeed the traces of the letters so closely resemble each other that it naturally would be so. (4) The Armenian Version actually has in passione here, so that van must have stood in the Syriac text from which it was translated.

1. τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν] Where the Divine Name is assigned to Christ in these epistles, it is generally with the addition of the pronoun, 'our God, 'my God,' as below $ 18 6 Ocos ήμων Ίησους ὁ Χριστός έκυοφορήθη к.т. д., Rom. inscr., 3 о Өедэ фийг 'I. X., Polve. S έν Θεφ ήμων 'I. X. εύχομαι, Rom. 6 μιμητήν είναι του πάθους του Θεού μου; or it has some defining words as in Smyrn. I Dogáζω Ί. Χ. τὸν Θεὸν τὸν οῦτως ύμας σοφίσαντα, Ephes. 7 εν ανθρώπω Θεός. The expression just below § I èv αίματι Θεού can hardly be regarded as an exception (see the note there). In the really exceptional passages there is more or less doubt about the reading or the connexion; Trall. 7. Smyrn. 6, 10. The authority for the omission of kai here is quite inadequate; but, even if kai were genuine, τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν must be taken with 'I. X., and not (as Bunsen Br. p. S5) with τοῦ πατρός.

'Εφέσφ [τῆς 'Ασίας], πλεῖστα ἐν Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ καὶ ἐν ἀμώμῳ χαρᾶ χαίρειν.

- 2. ἀξιομακαρίστω] 'worthy of felicitation.' Comp. § 5 πόσω μάλλον ύμας μακαρίζω. The compound occurs again § 12, Rom. inscr., 10. It is hardly classical, and its occurrence in Xenophon Apol. 34 has been alleged as an argument against the genuineness of that treatise. On the fondness of Ignatius for compounds of ἄξιον see the notes on ἀξιονόμαστον § 4 below.
- 3. της 'Aσίας i.e. the Roman province. With very much hesitation I have put the words in brackets, as a possible though not a probable interpolation, since they are wanting in the Syriac. With a place so well known as Ephesus the specification is a little startling. It occurs however in Iren. iii. I. Ι Ἰωάννης...έν Εφέσω της 'Ασίας διατρίβων; and is added also in the addresses of the letters to Smyrna, Tralles, and Philadelphia, cities only less famous than Ephesus, while in the letter to the Magnesians it is only suppressed to give place to another geographical definition τη πρὸς Μαιάνδρω. The case of 'Αντιόχεια της Συρίας (Philad. 10, Smyrn. 11, Pol. 7) is different, for several important cities bore that name. The other places called Ephesus were quite too obscure to come into competition (Steph. Byz. s.v. έστι καὶ Εφεσος νήσος έν τῷ Νείλω, on the authority of Hecatæus); and the addition here must be explained by the formal character of the address.

See also Xen. Anab. ii. 2. 6 έξ Ἐφέσου τῆς Ἰωνίας.

4. ἐν ἀμώμω χαρᾶ] Comp. Magn. 7 ἐν τῆ χαρᾶ τῆ ἀμώμω. If the reading had been left doubtful by the external authorities, this parallel would have decided it. For ἄμωμος, ἀμώμως, in the openings of these epistles, see Rom. inscr., Smyrn. inscr., Trall. 1, Polyc. 1: comp. also § 4 (below), Trall. 13.

πλείστα...χαίρειν] This form of salutation runs through six of the seven Ignatian letters, sometimes with words interposed as here and Rom., sometimes in juxtaposition as Polyc., Magn., Trall., Smyrn. The exception is Philad., where the opening salutation runs on continuously into the main subject of the letter, so that there is no place for such words or any equivalent. The commonest form of salutation in the opening of a Greek letter is χαίρειν; and it is occasionally strengthened, as here, by πλείστα. Of the Apostolic Epistles however S. James alone (i. 1, comp. Acts xv. 23) has xaipew in the opening salutation.

I. 'I heartily welcomed you in God. Your name is very dear to me; for your character for love and faith with right judgment is not accidental, but natural to you; and inflamed by Christ's blood you did but fulfil the dictates of your nature, in imitating the loving-kindness of God. And I pray that you may love and imitate him; for God has indeed been good to you in giving you such a man for your

'Having 'Αποδεξάμενος comed'; comp. Polyc. 1, Trall. 1. He had welcomed them in the person of Onesimus: see Trall. 1. The sentence thus begun is never finished, being lost in a succession of subordinate and parenthetical clauses. The subject is at length resumed in a different form, ἐπεὶ οὖν...ἀπείληφα $\kappa.\tau.\lambda$. The opening of the letter to the Romans fares in the same way. See also similar phenomena in Philad. I, Smyrn. I; comp. Magn.

ονομα] 'name,' here equivalent to 'personality,' 'character,' 'worth'; comp. Clem. Rom. 1 å\(\xi\)uaγάπητον ὄνομα ύμῶν. A marginal gloss to the Latin translation (L2) supposes that there is a play on the word ἔφεσις 'appetite, desire,' 'Ephesis Græce, desiderium Latine. Ephesii desiderabiles dicuntur'; and this explanation has been adopted by some editors. Such a reference however, besides being too obscure in itself, is rendered improbable by such parallel passages as Rom. 10 Κρόκος τὸ ποθητόν μοι ὄνομα (see also the note on "Aλκην, Smyrn. 13). The various readings suggest the omission of the pronoun with ovona. At all events oov can hardly stand. The Latin translation here again has a gloss (L2), 'Dicit autem singulariter tuum nomen, et continuo pluraliter possedistis, insinuans multitudinis in fide et charitate unitatem'; but this is too ingenious. I am disposed to think that a transcriber, finding no pronoun, carelessly inserted oov, which appears in Polyc. 1. Otherwise I should adopt the reading of the Long Recension ύμων έν Θεώ τὸ κ.τ.λ., as this pronoun occupies the same early place elsewhere in the opening addresses of Ignatius, Magn. 1, Rom. I, Polyc. I.

φύσει] 'by nature,' and not by accident or use or education. Here again the expression has a Gnostic tinge: see the note on Trall. I "Aμωμον διάνοιαν... έγνων ύμᾶς έχοντας, οὐ κατὰ χρησιν ἀλλὰ κατὰ Φύσιν.

έν γνώμη ὀρθη καί] I have inserted these words from the Syriac, which is loosely followed by the Armenian. They must have fallen out at an age prior to any of our Greek authorities. The epithet δικαία is altogether unsuited to φύσει; and, if the Greek text could be regarded as entire, I should suggest οἰκεία; comp. Euseb. de Laud. Const. 15, p. 652 τὸ θνητὸν της οἰκείας ηλευθέρου φύσεως, ib. p. 653 είς έλεγχον της οίκείας φύσεως, Clem. Alex. Strom. ii. 3 (p. 433) ἐνταῦθα φυσικήν ήγουνται την πίστιν οι άμφι

2. πίστιν καὶ ἀγάπην] A very frequent combination in this writer; e.g. § 14, 20, Magn. 1, 13, Rom. inscr. (v. l.), Philad. 11, Smyrn. inscr., 1, 13. He explains himself on this point, § 14 ἀρχὴ ζωῆς καὶ τέλος, ἀρχὴ μὲν πίστις τέλος δὲ ἀγάπη, Smyrn. 6 τὸ γὰρ ὅλον ἐστὶν πίστις καὶ ἀγάπη. See the simile in § 9. In Trall. 8 faith and love are said to be the flesh and blood of Christ respectively.

ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ κ.τ.λ.] The reading of the Syriac and Armenian may be explained by the interchange of a single letter in the Syriac, ¬ for ¬; see Clem. Rom. 60 (p. 292). Otherwise the following reasons are in its favour. (1) It has an exact parallel in Rom. inscr. κατὰ πίστιν καὶ ἀγάπην Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ; comp. below § 20 ἐν τῆ αὐτοῦ πίστει καὶ ἐν τῆ αὐτοῦ ἀγάπη. (2) It is more difficult than the other reading, and would therefore lend itself more easily to correction.

3. $\mu\iota\mu\eta\tau\alpha$ ì $\ddot{o}\nu\tau\epsilon s$ $\Theta\epsilon o\hat{v}$] i.e. 'in benevolence and love.' So also Trall, I; and see below § 10, where the point of μιμηταί του Κυρίου is ἐπιείκεια. The expression is borrowed from S. Paul, Ephes. v. I, thus exhibiting another coincidence with this same epistle: see the note on inscr. τη εὐλογημένη. Comp. Clem. Hom. xii. 26 χρή του φιλαυθρωπίαυ άσκοῦντα μιμητήν εἶναι τοῦ Θεοῦ, εὐεργετοῦντα δικαίους καὶ ἀδίκους, ώς αὐτὸς ὁ Θεὸς πᾶσιν ἐν τῶ νῦν κόσμω τόν τε ήλιον καὶ τοὺς ὑετοὺς αὐτοῦ παρέ- $\chi\omega\nu$. The same is the point here. This sentence, μιμηταλ...ἀπηρτίσατε, was apparently intended to be parenthetical, stating merely by the way that the Ephesians had been true to their nature and had exhibited their character in action: but it leads incidentally by a series of subordinate. clauses to the main topic, the visit of Onesimus, and so breaks up the grammar of the sentence. This very disjointed and ungrammatical preface is explained by the unfavourable circumstances under which the letter was dictated: Rom. 5. The grammar would be partially relieved, if there were authority enough for the insertion of kai before κατὰ πίστιν, for the parenthetical sentence would then begin less abruptly with καὶ κατὰ πίστιν; but the Syriac without the Armenian is valueless. Otherwise the kai might easily have dropped out in our main authorities owing to the repetition of the same letters—Kalakalkata.

ἀναζωπυρήσαντες] 'kindled into living fire,' in an intransitive sense, i.e. 'stimulated to activity.' The intransitive use is not uncommon; e.g. Gen. xlv. 27, 1 Macc. xiii. 7, the only passages where it occurs in the LXX. So also Clem. Rom. 27, Plut. Mor. p. 695 A, p. 888 F ἀναζωπυρείν νύκτωρ, καθάπερ τοὺς ἄνθρακας, etc.

ἐν αἴματι Θεοῦ] Tertull. ad Uxor. ii. 3 'sanguine Dei.' See also Acts xx. 28 τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡν περιεποιήσατο διὰ τοῦ αἴματος τοῦ ἰδίου, where Θεοῦ is most probably the correct reading; and comp. Rom. 6,

Θεοῦ, τὸ συγγενικὸν ἔργον τελείως ἀπηρτίσατε ἀκούσαντες γὰρ δεδεμένον ἀπὸ Cυρίας ὑπὲρ τοῦ κοινοῦ ὀνόματος καὶ ἐλπίδος, ἐλπίζοντα τῆ προσευχῆ ὑμῶν

For similar modes of expression in early Christian writers, see the notes on Clem. Rom. 2 τὰ παθήματα αὐτοῦ (with the Appendix, p. 402). It does not follow because a writer uses 'the blood of God' and 'the blood of Christ' as convertible expressions, that he would therefore speak of Christ as 'God' absolutely. This passage is therefore no exception to the rule as to the Ignatian usage laid down above on inscr. τοῦ Θεοῦ nuων. The 'blood of God' is the incentive which fans the natural benevolence of their character into a flame. On the energizing action of the blood of Christ, see the note on Philad. inscr.

I. συγγενικόν] 'natural,' literally 'connate,' 'congenital'; comp. Plut. Mor. p. 561 F κακίας όμοιότητα συγγενικήν έν νέω βλαστάνουσαν ήθει. So συγγενικον νόσημα, Plut. Vit. Pericl. 22. Here it refers back to δ κέκτησθε φύσει. The Ephesians had perfected in action the disposition which they possessed by nature. Zahn translates it fraternum, adding 'quod decebat vos præstare erga eum qui eidem genti a Christo redempti [redemptæ?] vobiscum adscriptus est.' But this, though a possible sense, does not suit either the context or the general usage of the word so well as the other, τοῦ κοινοῦ ὀνόματος] i.e. 'the Name of Christ which we all bear in common.' For this application of τὸ ὄνομα see the note on § 3 below.

2. ἀπὸ Συρίας] A condensed expression in place of 'hearing that I was come in bonds from Syria; see Winer Gramm. § lxvi. p. 776 (Moulton), Kühner II. p. 469 sq. For other similar constructions of prepositions comp. e. g. below, § 12 τῶν εἰς Θεὸν ἀναιρουμένων, § 14 εἰς καλοκαγαθίαν ἀκόλουθά ἐστιν, § 17 αἰχμαλωτίση...ἐκ τοῦ...ζῆν, and not unfrequently in Ignatius. For the particular expression here see Smyrn. II ὅθεν δεδεμένος (comp. below, § 21).

3. $\epsilon \lambda \pi i \delta os$ So δ 21 $\epsilon \nu$ 'I $\eta \sigma o \hat{\nu}$ X $\rho i \sigma \tau \hat{\rho} \kappa \rho i \nu \hat{\eta} \epsilon \lambda \pi i \delta \iota \hat{\eta} \mu \hat{\omega} \nu$, Philad. II: comp. Philad. 5. For $\hat{\eta} \epsilon \lambda \pi i s$ $\hat{\eta} \mu \hat{\omega} \nu$, applied to Christ, see the note Magn. II.

4. ἐπιτυχεῖν] A very common and characteristic expression in Ignatius. It occurs most frequently in the connexion ἐπιτυγχάνειν Θεοῦ; see the note on Magn. I. His martyrdom was the success, the triumph, to which he looked forward; see esp. Rom. 8 αἰτήσασθε περὶ ἐμοῦ, ἵνα ἐπιτύχω: comp. also Polyc. 7, Trall. 12, 13. So Mart. Ign. Ant. 5 τοῦ στεφάνου τῆς ἀθλήσεως ἐπιτύχη.

διὰ τοῦ ἐπιτυχεῖν] The genesis of the corruptions in the text is as follows. (1) The interpolator of the Long Recension has substituted δια τοῦ μαρτυρίου for διὰ τοῦ ἐπιτυχεῖν to save a needless repetition; and he has also helped out the μαθητής, which appeared to him bare and unmeaning, with the addition of τοῦ ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν ἐαυτὸν ἀνενεγκόντος Θεώ προσφοράν καὶ θυσίαν, borrowed from S. Paul, Ephes. v. 2. Both these changes are after his usual manner. But in doing so he has carelessly thrust out the end of the sentence, ίστορησαι ἐσπουδάσατε, and thus left ἀκούσαντες without any finite verb. (2) The genuine Ignatius has been corrupted from the text of the interpolator; but the work has not been done thoroughly, and the word ἐπιτυχεῖν has been allowed to stand. For a similar instance of interpolation in the Greek MS from the Long Recension see § 2 after κατηρτισμένοι. In both cases however we have the alternative of supposing conversely that the interpolation was made first in a MS of the genuine Ignatius and so passed into the Long Recension, but this is not probable. The Latin, Syriac, and Armenian Versions, when correctly read and interpreted, suggest the true restoration of the text, which however has been overlooked by the editors generally.

5. $\mu a \theta \eta \tau \dot{\eta} s$] 'a learner.' This also is an idea which has taken possession of Ignatius, and is repeated again and again by him. He does not set himself up as a teacher of others; at present he himself is only beginning to be a learner: see esp. § 3 νῦν γὰρ ἀρχὴν ἔχω τοῦ μαθητεύεσθαι; comp. Trall. 5, Rom. 5 (quoted below), and see Mart. Ign. Ant. Ι μήπω...έφαψάμενος...της τελείας τοῦ μαθητοῦ τάξεως. His discipleship will then only be complete, when he is crowned with martyrdom, Rom. 4; comp. Magn. 9, Polyc. 7. Hence he uses μαθητής elsewhere, as here, absolutely: Trall. 5 ου ... παρά τουτο ήδη καὶ μαθητής εἰμί, Rom. 5 νῦν ἄρχομαι μαθητής είναι. The Greek interpolator and the Syriac translator, not understanding this absolute use, have supplied genitive cases in different ways. This εἰρωνεία of Ignatius has a parallel in Socrates, who always professed himself merely a learner: see Grote's Plato I. p. 239.

 $i\sigma\tau\rho\rho\bar{\eta}\sigma a$] Comp. Gal. i. 18 (with the note). In restoring the Greek from the Versions, I have chosen this word, because the Syriac rendering seems to point to something more expressive than $i\partial\epsilon\hat{\iota}\nu$, which is generally supplied.

6. ἐπεὶ οὖν κ.τ.λ.] A resumption of the original sentence Ἀποδεξάμενος

ληφα έν 'Ονησίμω, τω έπ' άγάπη άδιηγήτω, ύμων δέ [έν σαρκί] έπισκόπω· δν εύχομαι κατά Ίησοῦν Χριστόν ύμας άγαπαν, και πάντας ύμας αυτω έν όμοιότητι είναι.

πολυπληθίαν G (so it reads certainly, though the word is written in a slovenly way; there is no authority for $\pi o \lambda v \pi \lambda \eta \rho l a v$ which has got into the common texts): see the $\dot{a}\pi\epsilon l\lambda\eta\phi\alpha$] GLAg; suscepimus Σ . $i \in \pi'$] g; $\in \nu$ (probably altered to conform to the following ἐν σαρκὶ) G; in L*; dub. ΣΑ. om. ΣA (so that they take $\delta \delta i \eta \gamma \dot{\eta} \tau \psi$ with $\delta \gamma \dot{\alpha} \pi \eta$). 2 έν σαρκὶ] GL; om. 'Ιησοῦν Χριστὸν] GLΣA; χριστὸν ἰησοῦν g. Add. Σ Ag: see the lower note. dominum nostrum Σ ; om. GLAg. 3 αὐτῷ ἐν ὁμοιότητι είναι] G; ipsi in similitudine esse L; ἐν ὁμοιώματι αὐτοῦ είναι g; sitis in similitudine ejus Σ; πολυπλήθειαν] 'your numerous body,' 'your large numbers'; comp. 2 Macc. viii. 16 την έθνων πολυπλή- $\theta \epsilon_{\iota a \nu}$, Valentinus in Epiph. Har. xxxi. 6 ών την πολυπλήθειαν πρός αριθμον έξειπείν ούκ αναγκαίον. expression is an incidental testimony to the flourishing condition of the Ephesian Church in the beginning of the second century. The word occurs occasionally in Classical writers, being found as early as Sophocles Fragm. 583; comp. Arist. Hist. An. v. 4 (p. 562) την πολυπλή- $\theta_{\epsilon \iota a \nu} a \dot{\nu} \tau \hat{\omega} \nu$. It is written both $\pi o \lambda v$ - $\pi \lambda \dot{\eta} \theta \epsilon \iota a$ and $\pi o \lambda \upsilon \pi \lambda \eta \theta \dot{\iota} a$. The former is more largely supported by analogy; but for the latter comp. Soph. Fragm. 342 κυκλεί δὲ πᾶσαν οἰκετῶν $\pi a \mu \pi \lambda \eta \theta i a \nu$, which however, as a poetical passage, does not go far to establish a prose usage.

ἀπείληφα] The martyr received the whole Church, when he received Onesimus, their representative; see Magn. 6 έπεὶ οὖν ἐν τοῖς προγεγραμμένοις προσώποις τὸ πᾶν πληθος έθεώρησα έν πίστει κ.τ.λ. Comp. also below, § 2 δι' ὧν πάντας ύμᾶς κατά αγάπην είδον, Magn. 2 ηξιώθην ίδειν ύμας δια Δαμα κ.τ.λ., Trall. Ι ώστε με τὸ πᾶν πληθος ὑμῶν ἐν αὐτῷ θεωρησαι.

I. ἐν 'Ονησίμω] This Onesimus seems to be a distinct person alike from S. Paul's convert the slave of Philemon, who, if still living, would be too old at this time, and from his later namesake the friend of Melito (Euseb. H. E. iv 26), who belonged to another generation and was obviously a layman. Chronologically this notice stands about mid-way between the two, being separated from each by about half a century. On the name Onesimus and the persons bearing it, see the introduction to the Epistle to Philemon in Colossians etc. p. 310 sq. The name occurs in an Ephesian inscription Boeckh C. I. G. no. 2983.

2. ἐν σαρκί] See the note on Rom. 9 τῆ όδῷ τῆ κατὰ σάρκα. But the words έν σαρκί here are highly suspicious, both as being absent from some authorities and as being unmeaning in themselves. They may have been added to relieve the apparent awkwardness of the connexion $\dot{\nu}\mu\hat{\omega}\nu$ δε. There is no reason to suppose that the Syriac translator had not the $\delta \hat{\epsilon}$ in his text, because he similes-estote ei A. 4 ἀξίοις] GLΣA; τοιούτοις g. οὖσιν] οὖσι Gs. 5 κεκτῆσθαι Ĝι κεκτῆσθαι ἐν χριστῷ g; om. ΣΑ. Similar omissions in Σ occur Rom. I εἶναι, Polyc. 6 σχεῖν (ἔχειν). The translator probably had κεκτῆσθαι in his text here but declined to translate it as a pleonasm. Σ stops here and resumes again § 3 ἀλλ' ἐπεὶ κ.τ.λ. 6 μου] GLA; ἡμῶν g. A read συμβούλου for συνδούλου. Βούρρου] G; burdo A (a confusion of the Syriac letters \P and \P , d and r). For the variations in the first vowel in Lg see Appx. All the authorities, except A, agree in the consonants here. See also the notes on Smyrn. 12, Philad. 11.

has not translated it. This free handling of connecting particles is habitual with him. If ἐν σαρκὶ be genuine, it would seem to imply a contrast to the great ἐπίσκοπος in heaven (Magn. 3). But such a contrast is out of place here, and Ignatius was not likely to speak of a bishop as a carnal officer. Zahn (I. v. A. p. 254) explains it otherwise; Onesimus belongs to all alike by virtue of love (ἐν ἀγάπη), though externally (ἐν σαρκί) he was connected with the Ephesians alone. But this antithesis is not suggested by the first clause. For ὑμῶν δὲ see Phil. ii. 25 ύμων δε ἀπόστολον; comp. Herod. vii. 8 'Αρισταγόρη τῷ Μιλησίω δούλω δε ήμετέρω. Onesimus had two recommendations in the eyes of Ignatius; he was beyond praise for his love, and he was their chief pastor.

κατὰ Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν] 'after the standard of Christ,' i.e. 'with a Christian love'; comp. Rom. xv. 5 τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν ἐν ἀλλήλοις κατὰ Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν.

3. αὐτῷ] i. e. 'Ονησίμῳ. For the dative after ὁμοιότης, comp. Plat. Phæd. 109 Α τὴν ὁμοιότητα τοῦ οὐρανοῦ αὐτοῦ ἐαντῷ, Phædr. 253 C εἰς ὁμοιότητα αὐτοῖς καὶ τῷ Θεῷ...ἄγειν: and for this case with substantives generally see Kühner Gramm. II. p. 372 sq. The interpolator has substituted a simpler construction and order, $\epsilon \nu$ $\delta \mu o \iota \omega \mu a \tau \iota a v \tau o v$.

4. ἀξίοις οὖσω] A favourite expression in Ignatius; § 2, Magn. 12, 14, Trall. 4, 13, Rom. 9, Smyrn. 9, 11, Polyc. 8. So also ἄξιος Θεοῦ §§ 2, 4, Rom. 10; comp. Ephes. 15.

II. 'As touching Burrhus the deacon, I entreat that he may be allowed to remain with me. Crocus too has refreshed me much, and I pray that God may refresh him. These, together with Euplus and Fronto, have been very welcome to me as your representatives. May I have joy of you always, if I deserve it. Ye ought therefore to glorify Jesus Christ, who glorified you, by submission to your bishop and presbyters, that ye may be perfectly sanctified.'

6. συνδούλου] This expression is with great propriety confined in Ignatius to deacons, since the function which the bishop had in common with them was ministration; Magn. 2, Philad. 4, Smyrn. 12. Similarly it was customary for bishops to address presbyters as 'compresbyteri'; see Philippians p. 228. So too Constantine was accustomed to speak of himself as a συνθεράπων of bishops, Euseb. V. C. ii. 69, iii. 12, 17, Socr. H. E. i. 9. For the relation of the Ignatian usage of σύνδουλος to S. Paul's see the note on Col. iv. 7. The limitation observed by Ignatius is not regarded in other early writers; e.g. Clem. Hom. Contest. 5, Ep. ad Iac. 2, 17, where presbyters and others are so addressed by a bishop.

Βούρρου] This person is mentioned again Philad. 11, Smyrn. 12. He was the amanuensis of both those letters, which were written from Troas; and is there represented as bearing a joint commission from the Churches of Ephesus and Smyrna to attend the saint. The request therefore which Ignatius prefers just below (εὔχομαι παραμεῖναι) was granted; and he accompanied him when he left Smyrna, whence the present letter was despatched. In the Syriac Decease of Saint John (Wright's Apocryphal Acts 11. p. 64) the Apostle is represented as giving his latest commands to one Birrus (Byrrhus). As the scene takes place at Ephesus, it is not improbable that the person intended was the same who is mentioned by Ignatius. The Greek copy however substitutes the name Εὐτυχη τὸν καὶ Οὐῆρον (Tischendorf Act. Apost. Apocr. p. 274). In the corresponding passage of pseudo-Abdias (Ap. Hist. v. 23) the name is Byrrhus, as in the Syriac.

2. εls τιμήν] A common Ignatian phrase, more especially with Θεοῦ etc. (see examples in the note on § 21 below); comp. also Polyc. 5 εἰς τιμὴν τῆς σαρκὸς τοῦ Κυρίου.

3. Κρόκος] mentioned likewise in the letter to the Romans § 10, which also was written from Smyrna, as τὸ ποθητόν μοι ὄνομα. It is a rare name.

Θεοῦ ἄξιος καὶ ὑμῶν] The same expression occurs also Rom. 10. For Θεοῦ ἄξιος see the note on § 1 ἀξίοις οὖσιν.

έξεμπλάριον] 'a pattern,' not merely 'a sample.' The Latin 'exemplar,' 'exemplarium,' is properly a copy, not in the sense of a thing copied from another, but a thing to be copied by others; Hor. Ep. i. 19. 17 'Decipit exemplar vitiis imitabile.' As a law term, it denoted one of the authoritative originals where a document was written in duplicate; see Heumann-Hesse Hand-lexicon des Römischen Rechts s.v. Hence Arnob. adv. Nat. vi. 13 'Phryna...exemplarium fuisse perhibetur cunctarum quæ in opinione sunt Venerum,' i. e. the original of all the statues of Venus held in repute. The older form is 'exemplar' ('exemplare,' Lucr. ii. 124); but even this would become έξεμπλάριον in Greek, just as Apollinaris becomes 'Απολλινάριος. The word occurs again Trall. 3 τὸ έξεμπλάριον της άγάπης ύμων, Smyrn. 12 έξεμπλάριον Θεοῦ διακονίας. It was natural that πλάριον της ἀφ' ὑμῶν ἀγάπης ἀπέλαβον, κατὰ πάντα 5 με ἀνέπαυσεν, ὡς καὶ αὐτὸν ὁ πατηρ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἀναψύξαι, ἄμα Ὀνησίμω καὶ Βούρρω καὶ Εὔπλω καὶ Φρόντωνι, δι' ὧν πάντας ὑμᾶς κατὰ ἀγάπην εἶδον· ὀναί-

GL; ἀναψύξει g (but refrigeret 1); dub. A. Βούρρ ω] G; cendaro A (to be explained by the confusion of similar letters in the Syriac). L*g* have variations in the first vowel as before. Εὔπλ ω] G; εỡπλοῖ g*; euplo L; euphathe A. 7 Φρόντωνι] φρόντονι G. ὁναίμην] ἀναίμην G.

a provincial, like Ignatius, should adopt from the Latin a word which was a law-term, just as he elsewhere adopts others which are military terms (Polyc. 6; see the note).

4. κατὰ πάντα κ.τ.λ.] The phrase κατὰ πάντα ἀναπαύειν occurs several times in Ignatius; Magn. 15, Trall. 12, Rom. 10, Smyrn. 9, 12 (comp. Smyrn. 10). The word ἀναπαύειν is similarly used by S. Paul of the 'refreshment' arising from the kindly offices of another: I Cor. xvi. 18, Philem. 7, 20.

5. ώς καὶ αὐτὸν...ἀναψύξαι] A reminiscence of 2 Tim. i. 16 πολλάκις με ανέψυξεν [6 'Ονησίφορος] καὶ τὴν άλυσιν οὐκ ἐπησχύνθη...δώη αὐτῷ ὁ Κύριος εύρεῖν κ.τ.λ. The Latin translator of the interpolated letters has been so possessed with this parallel, that he has added the words 'et catenam meam non erubuit' here, and substituted 'Onesiphoro' for 'Onesimo' just below. Ignatius exhibits another reminiscence of this context of S. Paul in Smyrn. 10 τὰ δεσμά μου â ούχ ... έπησχύνθητε ούδε ύμας έπαισχυνθήσεται ή τελεία πίστις, Ίησοῦς Χριστός, a passage which in thought closely resembles the one before us. For αναψύχειν comp. also Trall.

6. E $\rlap/v\pi\lambda\phi$] The name E $\rlap/v\pi\lambda o \upsilon s$ is found occasionally in the inscriptions, as is also the feminine E $\rlap/v\pi\lambda o \iota a$. In Boeckh C. I. 1211 we have the coincidence of names, Ευπλους 'Ovaσίμου. The other form of the dative Eυπλοϊ, which appears in the MSS of the interpolated epistles, is also legitimate, as πλοῦς is frequently declined τοῦ πλοός, τῷ πλοΐ, in later writers; see Lobeck Paral. p. 173 sq, Phryn. p. 453. In Alciphr. Ep. i. 18 I find it written Εὐπλόφ. This Euplus and Fronto are not mentioned again by name, though they are probably included among the 'many others' who are mentioned together with Crocus, as being in the saint's company at Smyrna, in Rom. 10. All these Ephesians, with the exception of Burrhus, appear to have parted from Ignatius at Smyrna, as they are not mentioned in the epistles written from Troas.

7. $\delta i' \, \delta v]$ i. e. 'as your representatives.' For the general sense see the note on $i \pi \epsilon i \lambda \eta \phi a$ I, and for $\delta i \dot{a}$ comp. Magn. 2 $i \delta \epsilon i v \, \dot{v} \mu \hat{a} s \, \delta i \dot{a}$ $\Delta a \mu \hat{a}$.

οναίμην] Again a Pauline phrase, Philem. 20 (see the note there). In Ignatius it occurs several times in this same phrase or in similar connexions, Magn. 2, 12, Polyc. 1, 6; comp. Rom. 5. The clause occurs again almost word for word in Magn. 12. The spurious Ignatius has caught up this expression and repeats it, Mar. 2, Tars. 8, 10, Ant. 14, Hero 6, 8, Philipp. 15. There may possibly be a play on the name μην ύμῶν διὰ παντός, ἐάνπερ ἄξιος ὧ. πρέπον οὖν ἐστιν κατὰ πάντα τρόπον δοξάζειν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν τὸν δοξάσαντα ύμᾶς Ἱνα ἐν μιᾳ ὑποταγᾳ κατηρτισμένοι, ὑποτασσόμενοι τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ καὶ τῷ πρεσβυτερίῳ, κατὰ πάντα ἦτε ἡγιασμένοι.

Ι πρέπον οὖν] txt GL; add. ὑμᾶs g; add. νοδίs A. 3 κατηρτισμένοι] L; ἢτε κατηρτισμένοι τῷ αὐτῷ νοὰ καὶ τῷ αὐτῷ γνώμη καὶ τὸ αὐτὸ λέγητε πάντες περὶ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἴνα Gg (from 1 Cor. i. 10). This addition is wanting not only in L, but also in A, where however the syntax is rearranged; perfectos fieri in omni submissione; ergo submissi estote episcopo etc. 4 ὑποτασσόμενοι] ἐἀνπερ ἄξιος ὧ] This doubt about his 'worthiness' is common in Ignatius; Magn. 12, 14, Trall. 4, 13, Rom. 9, Smyrn. 11. See also the note on ἢξιώθην, Magn. 2.

'Oνήσιμος here, as there seems certainly to be in S. Paul; but this is not probable.

πρέπον... ἐστιν] This phrase appears again, Magn. 3, 4, Rom. 10, Philad. 10, Smyrn. 7; while πρέπει occurs in § 4 below, Magn. 3, Trall. 12, Smyrn. 11, Polyc. 5, 7.

2. δοξάζειν...τὸν δοξάσαντα] See Philad. 10 δοξάσαι τὸ ὄνομα...καὶ ὑμεῖς δοξασθήσεσθε. For similar turns of expression see the note on Smyrn. 5 μάλλον δὲ κ.τ.λ.

κατηρτισμένοι 'joined together,' 'settled'; comp. Philad. 8 είς ένωσιν κατηρτισμένος, Smyrn. Ι κατηρτισμένους έν ακινήτω πίστει. The Latin translator has rendered it here, as elsewhere, by 'perfecti,' which would be ἀπηρτισμένοι. The prominent idea in this word is 'fitting together'; and its force is seen more especially in two technical uses. (1) It signifies 'to reconcile factions,' so that a political umpire who adjusts differences between contending parties is called καταρτιστήρ; e.g. Herod. v. 28 ή Μίλητος...νοσήσασα ές τὰ μάλιστα στάσι μέχρι οὖ μιν Πάριοι κατήρτισαν' τούτους γάρ καταρτιστηρας έκ πάντων Έλληνων είλοντο οί Μιλήσιοι. (2) It is a surgical term for 'setting bones': e.g. Galen Op. ΧΙΧ. p. 461 (ed. Kühn) καταρτισμός έστι μεταγωγή όστοῦ ή όστων έκ τοῦ παρά φύσιν τόπου είς τὸν κατά φύσιν. The use of the word here recalls its occurrence in I Cor. i. 10 ίνα τὸ αὐτὸ λέγητε πάντες, καὶ μὴ ή ἐν ὑμῖν σχίσματα, ήτε δέ κατηρτισμένοι έν τῷ αὐτῷ νοΐ καὶ έν τη αὐτη γνώμη. From this passage of S. Paul the Ignatian interpolator has introduced the words which I have here spaced into our text (see the upper note); and from the interpolated epistles they have passed into the Greek MS of the genuine epistles. The versions are our authorities for ejecting them. For a similar instance see the note on § Ι διὰ τοῦ ἐπιτυχεῖν.

4. πρεσβυτερίω] This is a common word in Ignatius; see below, §§ 4, 20, Magn. 2, 13, Trall. 2, 7, 13, Philad. 4, 5, 7, Smyrn. 8, 12. In the Apostolic writings it occurs only once of a Christian presbytery, 1 Tim. iv. 14.

III. 'I do not venture to use the tone of authority. I am only a learner with you. I need to be trained by you for the contest. Nevertheless love would not allow me to be silent. I could not refrain from urging obedience to your bishop.

III. Οὐ διατάσσομαι ὑμῖν, ὡς ϣν τι εἰ γὰρ καὶ δέδεμαι ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι, οὕπω ἀπήρτισμαι ἐν Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ νῦν [γὰρ] ἀρχὴν ἔχω τοῦ μαθητεύεσθαι καὶ προσλαλῶ ὑμῖν ὡς συνδιδασκαλίταις μου ἐμὲ γὰρ ἔδει

The bishops abide in the mind of Christ, just as Christ is the Mind of the Father.'

6. Οὐ διατάσσομαι κ.τ.λ.] Trall. 3 ΐνα ὢν κατάκριτος ώς ἀπόστολος ὑμῖν διατάσσωμαι, Rom. 4 οὐχ ώς Πέτρος καὶ Παῦλος διατάσσομαι ύμιν. For the general sentiment comp. Barnab. Ι έγω δε ούχ ως διδάσκαλος άλλ' ως είς έξ ύμων ύποδείξω ολίγα κ.τ.λ., ib. 4 έρωτῶ ύμᾶς ώς εἶς έξ ύμῶν ὧν, and again οὐχ ώς διδάσκαλος άλλ' ώς πρέπει άγαπωντι...γράφειν έσπούδασα, περίψημα ύμῶν, Polyc. Phil. 12 'nihil vos latet; mihi autem non est concessum modo.' For the reading TI, rather than Tis, comp. I Cor. iii. 5, 7, τί οὖν ἐστιν ᾿Απολλώς; τί δέ ἐστιν Παῦλος;...οὔτε ὁ φυτεύων ἐστίν τι $\kappa.\tau.\lambda.$, where similarly, $\tau is...\tau is$ is substituted for \(\tau_i \dots \tau in \) some copies; see also Gal. ii. 6, vi. 3, εἶναί τι, and I Cor. xiii. 2, 2 Cor. xii. 11, οὐδέν είμι.

καὶ δέδεμαι] 'Even my bonds do not perfect me; even my bonds do not make me a full disciple, much less a teacher'; comp. Magn. 12 εἰ γὰρ καὶ δεδέμαι, πρὸς ἔνα τῶν λελυμένων ὑμῶν οὐκ εἰμί, Trall. 5 καὶ γὰρ ἐγὼ οὐ καθότι δεδέμαι...παρὰ τοῦτο γδο καὶ μαθητής εἰμι, πολλὰ γὰρ ἡμῦν λείπει κ.τ.λ. For the additional dignity and authority which are conferred by his bonds, see the notes on § 11 below, Magn. 1.

7. ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι 'the Name,' i.e.

of Christ. The Name is again used absolutely below § 7 τὸ ὄνομα περιφέρειν, Philad. 10 δοξάσαι τὸ ὄνομα; comp. Acts v. 41 ύπερ τοῦ ονόματος άτιμασθηναι, 3 Joh. 7 ύπερ τοῦ ονόματος εξηλθαν. So too [Clem. Rom.] ii. § 13 τὸ ὄνομα δι' ὑμᾶς μὴ βλασφημήται...βλασφημείται τὸ ὄνομα, Hermas Sim. viii. 10 τὸ ὄνομα ήδέως έβάστασαν, ix. 13 έαν τὸ ὄνομα μόνον λάβης, ίδ. ἐὰν τὸ ὄνομα φορής, ίδ. τὸ μέν όνομα έφόρεσαν, ix. 28 οἱ πάσχοντες ενεκεν τοῦ ὀνόματος, Apollon. in Euseb. H. E. v. 18 κέκριται...οὐ διὰ τὸ ὄνομα, ἀλλὰ δι' ας ἐτόλμησε ληστείας, Clem. Alex. Strom. iii. 6 (p. 532). There is a tendency in later transcribers, who did not understand this absolute usage, to supply a genitive: e.g. αὐτοῦ in Acts v. 41; Christi, bonorum, in § 7 below; Domini, etc., in Philad. 10; τοῦ Κυρίου, τοῦ Χριστοῦ, in [Clem. Rom.] ii. 13. Similarly the versions interpolate here.

8. $\mu a \theta \eta \tau \epsilon \dot{\nu} \epsilon \sigma \theta a i$] 'of becoming a learner.' For the idea see the note on § I $\mu a \theta \eta \tau \dot{\eta} s \epsilon \dot{i} \nu a \iota$; for the verb, the note on § 10 $\mu a \theta \eta \tau \epsilon \nu \theta \dot{\eta} \nu a \iota$.

9. συνδιδασκαλίταις μου] 'my schoolfellows.' I cannot find either διδασκαλίτης or συνδιδασκαλίτης elsewhere; but there is a close analogy in compedagogita or conpedagogita which appears in some Latin inscriptions (Fabretti Inscr. Ant. p. 361 sq, Orelli ύφ' ύμων ύπαλειφθήναι πίστει, νουθεσία, ύπομονή, μακροθυμία. ἀλλ' ἐπεὶ ἡ ἀγάπη οὐκ ἐᾳ με σιωπῶν περὶ ύμων, διὰ τοῦτο προέλαβον παρακαλεῖν ὑμῶς, ὅπως

1 ὑφ' ὑμῶν] G; π αρ' ὑμῶν [g]. ὑπαλειφθῆναι] G; suscipi (ὑποληφθῆναι) L; accipere a vobis fidem etc. A; ὑπομνησθῆναι g. 2 ἀλλ' ἐπεὶ κ.τ.λ.] Σ has Inscr. Lat. 2818, 2819), and which points to the meaning. These compedagogitæ are the slaves trained under the same pedagogus or in the same pedagogium, and are called elsewhere pueri compedagogii (see Fabretti l.c.). The word is a mongrel (con-παιδαγωγίτης), like sullibertus (συν-libertus) which also is found in some inscriptions. Similarly συνδιδασκαλίται are those who have had the same διδάσκαλος or διδασκαλία or διδασκαλείον. Their common διδάσκαλος, contemplated here, is not S. Paul or any Apostle, but Christ; see § 15 είς οὖν διδάσκαλος κ.τ.λ. Some would explain the word 'joint-teachers' (comp. August. Conf. i. 9 'condoctore suo'), and this meaning certainly suits the following ὑπαλειφθηναι well (comp. Plut. Vit. Pericl. 4 τω δέ Περικλεί συνήν, καθάπερ ἀθλητῆ, τῶν πολιτικών άλείπτης καὶ διδάσκαλος); but it seems to be inadmissible on several grounds. (1) There is no reason why Ignatius should not have used συνδιδάσκαλος, which occurs in Cyril Alex. Ep. lxvii (x. p. 336, ed. Migne). (2) Analogy shows that the termination -ίτης signifies 'one who has to do with' anything, e.g. 'Aρεοπαγίτης, έγκρατίτης, ὁπλίτης, πολίτης, σωρίτης, τεχνίτης, παλαιστρίτης (Maca. Magn. iii. 26), πρωτοκαθεδρίτης (Hermas Vis. iii. 9), etc. So συμφυλακίτης, not 'a fellow-jailor,' but 'a fellow-prisoner'; συζυγίτης 'a yokefellow, husband' (συζυγία); συνορίτης 'a neighbour' (συνορία); συνοδίτης 'a fellow-traveller' (συνοδία); etc. (3) The συν- would be pointless otherwise; since there is no reason for representing the Ephesians as a board or council of teachers.

 $\dot{\epsilon}\mu\dot{\epsilon}$ γὰρ ἔδει] This sentence must be connected with οὐ διατάσσομαι $\dot{\nu}\mu\hat{\iota}\nu$ κ.τ.λ., not with the words immediately preceding, if συνδιδασκαλίταις is rightly interpreted 'school-fellows'; and to such a connexion the imperfect ἔδει 'it were meet' (not δεί) points. See the language of Ignatius to the Romans § 3.

1. ὑπαλειφθηναι] 'to have been anointed,' as an athlete preparing for the contest. Compare the metaphor in Polyc. 2, 3, νηφε, ώς Θεοῦ ἀθλητής ...τὸ θέμα ἀφθαρσία...μεγάλου ἐστὶν άθλητοῦ τὸ δέρεσθαι καὶ νικαν. For the meaning of ὑπαλείφειν see Com. in Plut. Vit. Pomp. 53 ώς ἄτερος πρὸς τὸν ἔτερον ὑπαλείφεται τῶ χείρε θ' ὑποκονίεται. This duty of oiling the athlete fell to the trainer, hence called ἀλείπτης (see e.g. Epict. Diss. iii. 10. 8, iii. 20. 10, iii. 26. 22); and Ignatius here says that the Ephesians were the proper persons to perform this office for him. The metaphor is variously applied: e.g. ἐπαλείφειν ἐπί τινα 'to incite against a person,' Polyb. ii. 51. 2 (see Wesseling on Diod. Sic. II. p. 138); ἀλείφειν πρός τι, ἀλείφειν ἐπί τι, 'to educate to a thing' Philo Leg. ad Cai. 24 (II. p. 569), Quis rer. div. her. 24 (I. p. 490), Clem. Alex. Strom. ii. 15 (p. 436). For its application to a moral and godly life generally, see Philo Omn. prob. lib. 12 sq (II. p. 458 sq) τὸ ηθικον εθ μάλα διαπονούσιν, άλείπταις χρώμενος τοις πατρίοις νόμοις...τοιού-

Strom. vii. 3 (p. 839) οὖτος ὁ άθλητης άληθως δ έν τω μεγάλω σταδίφ τῷ καλῷ κόσμφ τὴν ἀληθινὴν νίκην κατά πάντων στεφανούμενος τών παθών...περιγίνεται ὁ πειθήνιος τώ άλείπτη γενόμενος; comp. ib. vii. II (p. 872) ή ἀγάπη ἀλείφουσα καὶ γυμνάσασα κατασκευάζει τὸν ἴδιον $\dot{a}\theta\lambda\eta\tau\dot{\eta}\nu$. But it came to be applied more especially, as here, to the struggle for the martyr's crown. Hence the vision of Perpetua on the eve of her martyrdom, Act. SS. Perp. et Fel. 10 (Ruinart p. 84) 'et cœperunt me fautores mei oleo defrigere quomodo solent in agonem,' Tertull. ad Mart. 3 'Christus Jesus...vos spiritu unxit et ad hoc scamma produxit.' So too Basil. Ep. clxiv (II. p. 255, Garnier) ὅτε μέντοι εἴδομεν τὸν άθλητήν, έμακαρίσαμεν αὐτοῦ τὸν άλείπτην δς παρά τῷ δικαίω κριτή κ.τ.λ. And in later writers this application becomes common. Chrysostom, in his homily on Ignatius, repeats the saint's own metaphor; Op. II. p. 598 B (ed. Bened.) αί γὰρ κατὰ τὴν ὁδὸν πόλεις συντρέχουσαι πάντοθεν ήλειφον τον άθλητην καὶ μετά πολλών έξέπεμπον τῶν ἐφοδίων.

3. προέλαβον] i.e. 'I did not wait for you,' 'I took the initiative,' 'I lost no time.' For the infinitive after προλαμβάνειν comp. Mark xiv. 8.

4. συντρέχητε] 'concur, combine, agree,' and below § 4; as e.g. Clem, Hom. xx, 22 συνέδραμον αὐτοῦ τῷ βουλήματι (comp. i. 10). The sense is not uncommon in later writers.

τῆ γνώμη τοῦ Θεοῦ] This expression is characteristic of Ignatius: Rom. 8, Smyrn. 6, Polyc. 8. So too γνώμη Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ here and Philad. inscr.

5. ἀδιάκριτον] 'inseparable'; comp. Magn. Ι Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ διὰ παντὸς ἡμῶν ζῆν. The word has various meanings. In the active sense it signifies; (1) 'Unhesitating, unwavering, single-minded, steadfast'; e.g. James iii. 17 ή ἄνωθεν σοφία... άδιάκριτος, άνυπόκριτος, where it is best explained by a previous expression, i. 6 μηδεν διακρινόμενος. So elsewhere in these epistles, Magn. 15 κεκτημένοι άδιάκριτον πνεθμα, Trall. Ι ἄμωμον διάνοιαν καὶ ἀδιάκριτον; comp. Heracleon in Orig. in Ioann. xiii. § 10 (IV. p. 220) την αδιάκριτον καὶ κατάλληλον τῆ φύσει ξαυτής πίστιν, Clem. Alex. Pæd. ii. 3 (p. 190) àôiaκρίτω πίστει: see the note on άδιακρίτως Rom. inscr. (2) 'Undiscriminating, indiscriminate, indiscreet, reckless'; e.g. Clem. Hom. iii. 5 τοις διά τὸ ἀδιάκριτον ἀλόγοις ζώοις παρεικασθείσι. (3) 'Impartial,' e.g. Clem. Alex. Strom. ii. 18 (p. 474) ἀγάπη... αμέριστός έστιν έν πασιν, αδιάκριτος, κοινωνική. So the adverb, Test. Duod. Patr. Zab. 7 άδιακρίτως πάσι σπλαγχνιζόμενοι έλεατε. Its passive senses are; (4) 'Inseparable, inseparate,' as here; comp. Aristot. de Somn. 3 (p. 458) διὰ δὲ τὸ γίνεσθαι ἀδιακριτώτερον τὸ αίμα μετὰ τὴν τῆς τροφῆς προσφοράν ὁ υπνος γίνεται, έως αν διακριθή του αίματος τὸ μὲν καθαώς καὶ οἱ ἐπίσκοποι οἱ κατὰ τὰ πέρατα ὁρισθέντες ἐν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ γνώμη εἰσίν.

ή γνώμη] This term here takes the place of the more usual λόγος or σοφία, as describing the relation of Christ to the Father. On this account γνώμη is employed in the one clause, and ἐν γνώμη in the other; though some authorities obliterate the distinction.

1. τὰ πέρατα] 'the farthest parts,' i.e. of the earth: comp. Rom. 6 οὐδέν μοι ὦφελήσει τὰ πέρατα τοῦ κόσμου, ib. βασιλεύειν τῶν περάτων τῆς γῆς. The expression [τὰ] πέρατα used absolutely as here occurs, Ps. lxv (lxiv). 9 οἱ κατοικοῦντες τὰ πέρατα: comp. also Philo Leg. ad Cai. 3 (p. 548) οἱ μέχρι περάτων, ib. 27 (p. 571) ἀπὸ περάτων αὐτῶν, Celsus in Orig. c. Cels. viii. 72 ἄχρι περάτων νενεμημένους. Ignatius would be contemplating regions as distant as Gaul on the one hand and Mesopotamia on the other. The bishops, he says in effect, however wide apart, are still united in the mind of Jesus Christ; see Liturg. D. Marc. p. 16 (Neale) της έκκλησίας της άπὸ γῆς περάτων μέχρι τῶν περάτων αὐτῆs, comp. Liturg. S. Basil. p. 164. Zahn objects that τὰ πέρατα cannot mean τὰ πέρατα τῆς γῆς, and himself conjectures τὰ ποίμνια (I. v. A. p. 564) or τον πάτερα (ad loc.), and Markland suggests τὴν χάριτα; but the passages which I have quoted amply justify the absolute use of $[\tau \dot{a}]\pi \epsilon \rho a \tau a$. Zahn rightly objects (I. v. A. p. 299) to Pearson's interpretation 'episcopatum fuisse ab apostolis ex voluntate Christi institutum' (V. I. p. 271), adopted also by Rothe and Uhlhorn. Ignatius is speaking here, not of episcopacy as instituted by Christ, but of the bishops themselves as sharing the mind of Christ.

IV. 'Act in concert with your bishop, as you are now doing. Your presbytery stands in the same relation to the bishop, as the strings to the lyre. The theme of your song is Jesus Christ. The several members of the Church will form the choir. God will give the scale. Thus one harmonious strain will rise up from all and reach the ears of the Father. He will recognise your good deeds; and by your union among yourselves you will unite yourselves with him.'

(see also Legg. ii. p. 655). The term χρώματα 'hues' applied to sounds is only one illustration of the very common transference, by analogy, of ideas derived from one sense to another (see Farrar Chapters on Language p. 297 sq). The word χρώμα then, as a musical term, designated an interval between two full tones; comp. Aristid. Quint. p. 18 ώς γάρ τὸ μεταξύ λευκοῦ καὶ μέλανος χρώμα καλείται, ούτω καὶ τὸ διὰ μέσων άμφοῖν θεωρούμενον χρώμα προσείρηται. Hence it gave its name to the chromatic scale, which was called χρωματικόν γένος, or χρώμα simply, as distinguished from the two other scales used by the Greeks, the diatonic (διατονικόν γένος or διάτονον) and enharmonic (έναρμόνιον γένος or άρμονία); see Aristoxenus Harm. pp. 19, 23 sq, 44, Euclid. Such subdivisions or modifications of any of the three great $\gamma \epsilon \nu \eta$ were called χρόαι, 'colorations' or 'shadings'; e.g. Aristox. Harm. p. 24 κατά τά γένη τε καὶ τὰς χρόας (see Marquardt's note), comp. ib. p. 69 καθ' έκάστην χρόαν έφ' έκάστου γένους. These subdivisions (χρόαι) of the χρώμα were also themselves called χρώματα: see Euclid. l. c. Ignatius may have been led to choose a term which pointed chiefly to the chromatic scale, because this scale was especially adapted to the instrument which suggested this elaborate metaphor, the κιθάρα: comp. Philochorus in Athen. xiv. p. 637 sq Λύσανδρος ό Σικυώνιος κιθαριστής πρώτος μετέστησε την ψιλοκιθαριστικήν χρώματά τε εύχροα πρώτος έκιθάρισε κ.τ.λ., Plut. Mor. p. 1137 Ε τῷ χρωματικῷ γένει . . . κιθάρα . . . έξ ἀρχῆς ἐχρήσατο: see Westphal p. 131 sq. The Latin translator here roughly renders χρώμα by melos.

The Latin has not per quem (as it has hitherto been read), but per quæ; and the Armenian translates in bonis laboribus vestris. For εὖ πράσσειν in the sense, not of 'faring well,' but of 'acting well,' comp. Smyrn. 11.

See Pollux Onom. v. 113 έπιτηδείως ἀνακέκραμαι πρὸς αὐτόν, where he gives συγκέκραμαι as a synonyme, but not έγκέκραμαι; and so again, viii. 151: comp. also Bekker Anecd. p. 391 'Ανακραθέντες' άνακερασθέντες, όλοψύχως κολλώμενοι. 10. $\mu\eta\delta\epsilon$ is $\pi\lambda\alpha\nu\acute{a}\sigma\theta\omega$] As Smyrn. 6. So too the Apostolic phrase (S. Paul and S. James) $\mu\dot{\eta}$ $\pi\lambda\alpha\nu\acute{a}\sigma\theta\epsilon$, § 16 below, Magn. 8, Philad. 3 (see the note).

11. τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου The same expression occurs again Trall. 7 ό έντὸς θυσιαστηρίου ῶν καθαρός έστιν κ.τ.λ. The θυσιαστήριον here is not the altar, but the enclosure in which the altar stands, as the preposition evros requires. This meaning is consistent with the sense of the word, which (unlike βωμος) signifies 'the place of sacrifice'; and it is supported also by examples of its use as applied to Christian churches; e.g. Conc. Laod. Can. 19 μόνοις έξου είναι τοις ιερατικοίς είσιέναι είς τὸ θυσιαστήριον (i.e. the sacrarium), compared with Can. 44 ov δεί γυναίκας έν τῷ θυσιαστηρίω εἰσέρχεσθαι (Labb. Conc. I. pp. 1533, 1537, ed. Colet.). This seems also to be its sense in Rev. xi. Ι μέτρησον τὸν ναὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ τὸ θυσιαστήριον καὶ τοὺς προσκυνούντας έν αὐτ ώ, καὶ τὴν αὐλὴν την έξωθεν τοῦ ναοῦ έκβαλε έξωθεν, καὶ μη αὐτην μετρήσης, ὅτι ἐδόθη τοῖς έθνεσιν; comp. xiv. 17, 18 άλλος άγγελος έξηλθεν έκ τοῦ ναοῦ...καὶ άλλος άγγελος [έξηλθεν] έκ τοῦ θυσιαΘεοῦ]. εἰ γὰρ ἐνὸς καὶ δευτέρου προσευχὴ τοσαύτην ἰσχὺν ἔχει, πόσω μᾶλλον ή τε τοῦ ἐπισκόπου καὶ πάσης τῆς ἐκκλησίας. ὁ οὖν μὴ ἐρχόμενος ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ οὖτος ἤδη ὑπερηφανεῖ καὶ ἑαυτὸν διέκρινεν γέγραπται γάρ, ἡπερηφάνοις ὁ Θεὸς ἀντιτάς ςεται. σπουδά-5 στηρίου. (For the ναός, as confined to the holy place and distinguished from the court of the altar, see Clem. Rom. 41.)

The reference here is to the plan of the tabernacle or temple. The θυσιαστήριον is the court of the congregation, the precinct of the altar, as distinguished from the outer court. The application of this imagery, which Ignatius had in view, appears from the continuation of the parallel passage already quoted, Trall. 7 6 8è έκτὸς θυσιαστηρίου ών οὐ καθαρός έστιν, τουτέστιν, ό χωρίς ἐπισκόπου καὶ πρεσ-Βυτερίου καὶ διακόνου πράσσων τι, οδτος οὐ καθαρός ἐστιν τῆ συνειδήσει. The man who separates himself from the assembly of the faithful, lawfully gathered about its bishop and presbyters, excludes himself, as it were, from the court of the altar and from the spiritual sacrifices of the Church. He becomes as a Gentile (Matt. xviii. 17); he is impure, as the heathen is impure. See esp. Clem. Alex. Strom. vii. 6 (p. 848) έστι γοῦν τὸ παρ' ἡμῖν θυσιαστήριον ένταῦθα τὸ ἐπίγειον τὸ άθροισμα τών ταις εύχαις άνακειμένων, μίαν ώσπερ έχον φωνήν την κοινήν καὶ μίαν γνώμην κ.τ.λ. (with the whole context). Thus θυσιαστήριον, being at once the place of sacrifice and the court of the congregation, was used metaphorically for the Church of Christ, the θυσιαστήριον ἔμψυχον, as S. Chrysostom terms it. Somewhat similarly in Polyc. Phil. 4 γινωσκούσας ὅτι εἰσὶν θυσιαστήριον Θεοῦ, it is applied to a section of the Church, the body of 'widows'; see also Apost. Const. iii. 6, 14, iv. 3.

Thus S. Ignatius does not here refer to a literal altar, meaning the Lord's table. Too much stress perhaps has been laid on the fact that the early Christians were reproached by the Gentiles with having no temples and no altars, and that the Apologists acknowledged the truth of the charge, explaining that their altars, temples, and sacrifices alike were spiritual: e.g. Minuc. Fel. Oct. 32, Orig. c. Cels. viii. 17. But, independently of this, the literal interpretation will not stand here, because the place for the Christian laity would not be έντὸς τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου. In fact the imagery here is explained by the following words, where ὁ ἐπίσκοπος καὶ πᾶσα ή ἐκκλησία corresponds to θυσιαστήριον, while ή προσευχή is the spiritual sacrifice therein offered; as e.g. Clem. Al. I.c. ή θυσία της έκκλησίας λόγος ἀπὸ τῶν ἁγίων ψυχῶν αναθυμιώμενος, Orig. l. c. αναπέμπεται άληθώς καὶ νοητώς εὐώδη θυμιάματα αί προσευχαὶ ἀπὸ συνειδήσεως καθαρᾶς. For the prayers of the Christians, as taking the place which the sacrifices held under the old dispensation, see the note on Clem. Rom. 44 προσενεγκόντας τὰ δώρα. In Philad. 4 θυσιαστήpion seems to be used (see the note

τοῦ ἄρτου τοῦ Θεοῦ] i.e. 'the spiritual sustenance which God provides for His people.' There is probably a reference to the eucharistic bread here, as there is more plainly in Rom. 7 (see the note there). The eucharistic bread however is not exclusively or directly contemplated, but only taken as a type of the spiritual nourishment which is dispensed through Christ. This reference (like Rom. 7) seems to be inspired by Joh. vi. 31 sq, where also the eucharistic bread furnishes the imagery, while at the same time a larger application is contemplated, ό ἄρτος τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐστιν ὁ καταβαίνων έκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ κ.τ.λ. If so, the metaphor reverts ultimately to the manna, and thus harmonizes with the preceding θυσιαστήριον. The manna was the bread provided by God for the congregation of Israel. For a more direct reference to the eucharistic bread, or at least to the agape, see below § 20; and for a different application and meaning of артоs, Rom. 4. It will be seen from the authorities that the words τοῦ Θεοῦ are somewhat doubtful. Perhaps they should be omitted: see an exactly parallel case, Rom. 4 καθαρὸς

4. ἐαυτὸν διέκρινεν] 'separates himself then and there.' He pronounces, as it were, the sentence of excommunication on himself. For this force of the acrist see Gal. v. 4 (note), and comp. Winer Gramm. xl. p. 345 (Moulton). The Latin condemnavit does not imply a different reading κατέκρινεν (as Zahn), but is a mere mistranslation, just as this same version renders κατηρτισμένοι perfecti (§ 2), as if it were ἀπηρτισμένοι, and ἀδιάκριτον (§ 4) incomparabile, as if it were ἀσύγκριτον.

5. 'Υπερηφάνοις κ.π.λ.] A quotation from Prov. iii. 34. It is quoted also I Pet. v. 5, James iv. 6, Clem. Rom. 30; see the note on the last passage. In all alike [δ] Θεὸς is substituted for Κύριος of the LXX; but Ignatius is alone in placing ὑπερηφάνοις first.

6. ὧμεν Θεοῦ κ.τ.λ.] 'we may be God's by our subjection'; comp. § 8 ὅλοι ὅντες Θεοῦ, Magn. 10 οὐκ ἔστιν τοῦ Θεοῦ, Philad. 3 ὅσοι Θεοῦ εἰσὶν... οὖτοι Θεοῦ ἐσονται, Rom. 7 ἐμοῦ (v. l. ἐμοῦ) γίνεσθε, τουτέστιν τοῦ Θεοῦ so obvious, and almost inevitable, that I have adopted the genitive against the preponderance of authorities.

σιγῶντα] Ignatius returns to this subject again § 15, without however mentioning the bishop. Similarly he commends the quiet and retiring disposition of the bishop of Philadelphia (Philad. 1), who is not named; and he deprecates any one presuming on the youth of Damas the bishop of Magnesia (Magn. 3).

2. ὁ οἰκοδεσπότης] Apparently an allusion to the parable in Matt. xxi. 33 sq. The words εἰς τὴν ἰδίαν οἰκονομίαν are a condensed expression for εἰς τὴν οἰκονομίαν τοῦ ἰδίου οἴκου (or ἀμπελῶνος).

8. $\pi \in \mathcal{P}(\kappa, \tau, \lambda)$ I have ventured so to emend the text, as the Armenian Version suggests, and as the sense seems to require, substituting HTEpiincoy for hmepincoy; see the faulty reading of A, ωσπερ for ώς περί, in [Clem. Rom.] ii. § I. Compare Philad. 6 έαν δε άμφότεροι περί Ίησοῦ Χριστοῦ μὴ λαλώσιν, οὖτοι έμοι στήλαί είσιν κ.τ.λ., and similarly Trall. 9 κωφωθήτε οὖν, ὅταν ύμιν χωρίς Ίησοῦ Χριστοῦ λαλή τις. Another simple emendation would be 'Ιησοῦν Χριστόν: comp. Magn. 10 ἄτοπόν ἐστιν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν λαλεῖν καὶ ἰουδαίζειν, Rom. 7 μη λαλείτε Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν κόσμον δὲ ἐπιθυμεῖτε. The Latin aliquem amplius quam Iesum Christum loquentem is ambiguous, and might represent the accusative as well as the genitive.

XIII. p. 21); λαθραιόδηκτος, Photius in Oecum. ad Phil. iii. 2; λαθροδάκνης, Antiphanes in Anthol. Græc. II. p. 189 (Jacobs); λαθροδάκνος (?), Nilus Epist. i. 309, p. 196 A (Migne). The recognised classical equivalent was λαίθαργος (λάθαργος), e.g. Arist. Eq. 1068. Phrynichus (Bekker Anecd. p. 50) οη λάθαργος κύων says, τοῦτο δὲ οἱ πολλοὶ παραφθείραντες λαθροδήκτην καλοῦσιν.

For the constant recurrence of the combination σάρξ and πνεθμα in Ignatius in various relations, see the note on § 10 below. The expressions σαρκικός, γεννητός, έν ανθρώπω, έν θανάτω, έκ Μαρίας, παθητός, here are introduced to emphasize the reality of Christ's humanity against the phantom theory of the Docetics: see the note on Trall. 9. For the use of πνεθμα in early Christian writers. as opposed to σάρξ and expressing the Divine nature of Christ as the Λόγος, see 2 Clem. § 9 Χριστὸς ὁ Κύριος...ῶν μὲν τὸ πρῶτον πνεῦμα, έγένετο σάρξ, with the note. alternative is that σαρκικός κ.τ.λ. should be taken closely with larpos 'a physician for flesh and spirit alike'; but the antitheses which follow seem to require the other explanation.

For this sentence of antitheses compare Polyc. 3 τὸν ἀόρατον, τὸν δί

It is worth while observing that in the immediate context Tertullian quotes the incident from Luke xxiv. 39, which Ignatius elsewhere (Smyrn. 3) gives from another source. Comp. also Melito Fragm. 13 (ed. The words γεννητὸς καὶ ἀγέννητος are here used to signify 'create and increate,' in which sense the more careful dogmatic language of a later age would have employed in preference the forms γενητὸς καὶ ἀγένητος with the single ν. See the excursus at the end of this epistle.

 $\dot{\epsilon}\nu$ $\dot{\alpha}\nu\theta\rho\dot{\omega}\pi\dot{\omega}$ Θεόs] This reading is demanded alike by the great preponderance of authorities and by the antithetical character of the sentence. The substitution $\dot{\epsilon}\nu$ σαρκὶ γενόμενος Θεός may have been due to the fear of

trine that the Logos took the place of the human vovs in Christ.

ἐν θανάτφ κ.τ.λ.] For His death is our life, His passion is our resurrection; comp. e.g. Smyrn. 5 τὸ πάθος ὅ ἐστιν ἡμῶν ἀνάστασις. Here again there is reference to His two natures. He died as man: He lives and gives life as the Eternal Word.

2. ¿k Mapías] See below § 18, Trall. 9, and comp. Smyrn. 1.

πρῶτον] He might have said with equal truth πρῶτον ἀπαθὴς καὶ τότε παθητός, as in Polyc. 3 (already quoted) τὸν ἀπαθῆ, τὸν δὶ ἡμᾶς παθητόν, but in these antitheses he commences with the humanity, as being the point attacked by the Docetic teachers.

VIII. 'Suffer not yourselves to be led astray; for now ye are wholly given to God. So long as ye are free from any evil craving, ye live after God. I would gladly devote myself for the renowned Church of Ephesus. Carnal men are incapable of spiritual things, as spiritual men are incapable of carnal things. With you, even the things done after the flesh are spiritual, for they are done in Christ.'

5. οντες Θεοῦ See the note on δ τνα ωμεν Θεοῦ.

ἐπιθυμία] The combination of authorities leaves no doubt that this is the correct reading; comp. Ephes. iv. 22 κατὰ τὰς ἐπιθυμίας τῆς aπaτης. For the connexion of unrestrained desire (ἐπιθυμία) with false teaching see 2 Tim. iii. 6 αἰχμαλωτεύοντες γυναικάρια... άγόμενα έπιθυμίαις ποικίλαις, 2 Pet. ii. 18 δελεάζουσιν έν ἐπιθυμίαις σαρκός (comp. ver. 10), Jude 16, 18. The reading fpis, though not inappropriate in itself (comp. Clem. Alex. Strom. vii. 16, p. 894, ἔριν ην ἐν ταις αιρέσεσι προκριτέον), must be rejected here. It may have found its way into the text from a marginal note attempting to give a derivation of ένείρισται.

6. ἐνήρεισται] 'is inherent, is fixed.' So it is necessary to read

τ ἄρα] ἆρα G (so certainly). $περίψημα ὑμῶν καὶ ἀγνίζομαι] G (but with a smooth breathing ἀγνίζομαι); peripsima vestri et castificer (i.e. ἀγνίζωμαι, but the MSS eastificet) a vestra etc. L*; gaudeo in vobis et supplico pro vobis <math>\Sigma A$. In for ἐνείρισται, in which the editors generally have acquiesced, but which they do not attempt to justify. The frequent itacisms in the MS render the change obvious. Bunsen (Br. p. 88) saw that ἐνείρισται was impossible, but substituted ἐνεργῆται. Zahn first introduced the correct word into the text. For ένερείδειν (-δεσθαι) comp. Dioscorid. ii. 23 (p. 367, Kühn) $\tau \hat{\omega} \nu$ ένηρεικότων στομάχω καὶ κοιλία χολωδων, a use that would be appropriate to the metaphor at the close of the preceding section; see also Plut. Mor. p. 327 Β βέλει ἀπὸ τόξου τὸ στέρνον ἐνερεισθέντι, ib. p. 344 C τοις περί τὸν μαστὸν ἐνερεισθέντος ὀστέοις καὶ καταπαγέντος. Comp. Clem. Alex. Strom. ii. 20 (p. 487) ἀπάτη συνεχῶς έναπερειδομένη τη ψυχή, whence έναπερείσματα 'impressions' in the context. For the form of the perfect see Lobeck Phryn. p. 33, Veitch Greek Verbs s. v. ἐρείδω; and for the indicative with orav, Winer xlii. p. 388 sq. Merx would read έρρίζωται or ένερρίζωται (p. 41), because the Syriac and Armenian have 'plantata est,' but this seems to be only a loose rendering of ενήρεισται.

I. $\pi\epsilon\rho(\psi\eta\mu\alpha\dot{\nu}\mu\hat{\omega}\nu]$ sc. $\epsilon l\mu\iota$. For the omission of the substantive verb, and for the general form of the sentence, comp. Rom. 4 ἀπελεύθερος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ (sc. ἔσομαι) καὶ ἀναστήσομαι ἐν αὐτῷ ἐλεύθερος. Otherwise we might read $\pi\epsilon\rho(\psi\eta\mu\acute{\alpha}\ \epsilon l\mu\iota\ \dot{\nu}\mu\acute{\omega}\nu$, as $\epsilon l\mu\iota$ in this position might easily have dropped out amidst the recurrence of similar letters.

Περίψημα, literally 'filth, scum, offscouring,' was used like κάθαρμα, περικάθαρμα, especially of those criminals, generally the vilest of their class, whose blood was shed to expiate the sins of the nation and to avert the wrath of the gods. Photius, Lex. s.v., says ούτως ἐπέλεγον τῷ κατ' ένιαυτον έμβαλλομένω τη θαλάσση νεανία έπὶ ἀπαλλαγή τῶν συνεχόντων κακών Περίψημα ήμων γενού, ήτοι σωτηρία καὶ ἀπολύτρωσις, καὶ οὕτως ένέβαλον τη θαλάσση, ώσανεὶ τῷ Ποσειδώνι θυσίαν ἀποτίννυντες: comp. Amphiloch. cxxxiii. (Op. I. p. 731, ed. Migne), where Photius well explains the force of the word as used by S. Paul. In Athenian language these persons were called φαρμακοί, Arist. Ran. 731 καὶ πουηροίς κάκ πουηρών είς απαντα χρώμεθα, ύστάτοις άφιγμένοισιν, οἷσιν ή πόλις πρὸ τοῦ οὐδὲ φαρμακοίσιν είκη ραδίως έχρησατ' άν. On these human victims see Hermann Griech. Alterth. Gottesdienst. § 60. Hence the idea in the word as used here is twofold: first, 'I am as the meanest among you, and secondly, 'I devote my life for you.' For its biblical use see Jer. xxii. 28 (Symm.) μη περίψημα φαῦλον καὶ ἀπόβλητον ὁ ἄνθρωπος; Tobit v. 20 (LXX) ἀργύριον ... περίψημα τοῦ παιδίου ήμων γένοιτο, I Cor. iv. 13 ώς περικαθάρματα τοῦ κόσμου έγενήθημεν, πάντων περίψημα έως άρτι. See also below § 18 περίψημα τὸ ἐμὸν πνεῦμα τοῦ σταυροῦ, Barnab. 4 γράφειν ἐσπούδασα ἐγώ περίψημα ύμων, ib. 6 έγω περίψημα της αγάπης ύμων. Hence Origen in Ioann. xxviii. § 14 (IV p. 393), explaining the prophecy of Caiaphas, applies the term to our Lord with an apology for so using it. In the middle of the οί σαρκικοί τὰ πνευματικὰ πράσσειν οὐ δύνανται οὐδὲ οί πνευματικοί τὰ σαρκικά, ὥσπερ οὐδὲ ἡ πίστις τὰ τῆς 5 ἀπιστίας οὐδὲ ἡ ἀπιστία τὰ τῆς πίστεως. ά δὲ καὶ third century, as appears from Dionysius of Alexandria (Euseb. H.E. vii. 22), περίψημά σου had become a common expression of formal compliment 'your humble and devoted servant' (see Heinichen on Euseb. 1. c. Melet. xv.). This expression, he says, which with others was a mere form of speech, had been actually fulfilled in the case of those devoted Christians who had caught the plague and died, while nursing others into health. Thus περίψημα is closely allied in meaning to avriduyov, which is also a favourite Ignatian word (see below § 21), but superadds to the idea of 'self-devotion,' which is common to both, the further idea of 'abasement, vileness.'

άγνίζομαι κ.τ.λ.] 'I am devoted to your Church'; comp. Trall. 13 ayviζεται [άγνίζετε ΜS], ύμῶν τὸ ἐμὸν πνεῦμα. It appears to mean literally 'I make myself a ἄγνισμα, a piacular offering, for your Church.' The verb άγνίζειν sometimes means 'to sacrifice,' 'to devote' (see esp. εφαγνίζειν, καθαγνίζειν); and ἄγνισμα is 'an expiatory victim,' e.g. Æsch. Eum. 315. Of the genitive case after ayviζομαι I can find no other instance: but it might fall under the category of verbs of admiration, affection, and the like; and, as τρύχεσθαι, ἐπιτύφεσ- θai , etc., are found with this case (see Kühner II. p. 324), it can hardly be considered out of place after ayviζεσθαι, when this secondary sense predominates. Several corrections have been suggested; e.g. the substitution of $"ayvi\sigma\mu a"$ for $"ayvi\"\chi\"\eta\"$

E. iii. 36, in which last passage it is used of Ignatius himself, ὁ παρὰ πλείστοις εἰσέτι νῦν διαβόητος Ἰγνάτιος. It is found also occasionally in late classical writers, e.g. Plutarch and Dion Chrysostom. Compare also περιβόη-Tos, Clem. Rom. 1, 47. For the dative see Xen. IX. 'At the same time I learn that certain false teachers from a distance have been passing through your city; but ye stopped your ears and did not suffer them to sow the seeds of evil in you. For ye are stones of a temple, prepared for the building of God, hoisted up by the Cross of Christ, the Spirit being the rope and your faith the engine, while love is the way leading to God. Ye all take your part in the holy procession, bearing each his God and his Christ, his shrine and his sacred things, dressed in the festive robes of Christ's precepts, while I by letter am permitted to share your rejoicing and to congratulate you on your unalloyed love of God.'

3. παροδεύσαντας SC. την "Εφεσον. They had taken Ephesus on their way, though they had not settled there; see § 6 εν ύμιν οὐδεμία αίρεσις κατοικεί (with the note). These are the itinerant false-teachers who are described in § 7 as δόλω πονηρώ τὸ ὄνομα περιφέροντες. The interpretation of Baur (I. B. p. 29) and Hilgenfeld (p. 191), who take $\pi a \rho o$ δεύσαντας metaphorically, 'taking a by-path,' 'going out of the direct way,' cannot stand. The word always signifies 'to pass by,' 'to pass through on the way,' e.g. Plut. Mor. p. 973 D τοίς συνήθως παροδεύουσι τον τόπον, Lucian Scyth. 10 σιωπη παροδεύσας τηλικαύτην πόλιν. It is used several times in the LXX, and always in this sense: Ezek. xxxvi. 34, Wisd. i. 8, ii. 7, v. 15, vi. 24, x. 8. See also the note on Rom. 9 παροδεύοντα.

ἐκείθεν] 'from yonder'; comp. Mart. Polyc. 20 τοις έπέκεινα άδελφοις. The martyr uses the same reticence here as regards place, which he uses elsewhere as regards persons; Smyrn. 5 τὰ δὲ ὀνόματα αὐτῶν, ὄντα ἄπιστα, οὐκ έδοξέν μοι έγγράψαι, άλλα μηδε γένοιτό μοι μνημονεύειν κ.τ.λ. But what place is meant? Bunsen (I. v. A. p. 38) says 'from Smyrna,' translating it 'from here'; but ἐκεῖθεν could not have this sense. Baur (I. B. p. 29) answers 'from Ephesus'; and this, if I understand him rightly, is the view of Zahn also (I. v. A. pp. 258 sq, 356 sq, and ad loc.), who takes the whole sentence to mean 'I learnt that certain persons passed through where I was (at Philadelphia) from Ephesus.' But neither again could a writer well use ἐκεῖθεν of the place to which he addressed his letter. The reference in ἐκεῖθεν therefore must remain uncertain: but, if it were necessary to name any place, Philadelphia would answer the conditions. It appears from notices in the Epistle to the Philadelphians (see the introduction), that Ignatius had passed through their city on his way to Smyrna, so that he would know the facts; and we also gather from the same 5 βύσαντες τὰ ὧτα εἰς τὸ μὴ παραδέξασθαι τὰ σπειρόμενα ὑπ' αὐτῶν· ὡς ὄντες λίθοι ναοῦ προητοιμασμένοι εἰς οἰκοδομὴν Θεοῦ πατρός, ἀναφερόμενοι εἰς τὰ ὑψη διὰ τῆς μηχανῆς Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὅς ἐστιν σταυρός, σχοινίω letter, that heresy had been busy there (§§ 2, 3, 6, 7, 8). The substitutions for $\epsilon \kappa \epsilon i \theta \epsilon \nu$ in the Armenian Version and in the interpolator's text are mere expedients to get rid of an obscure expression.

4. σπείραι] See the metaphor of βοτάνη below, § 10. Here the 'sowing' is regarded as taking place through the ear.

5. βύσαντες τὰ ὧτα] Ps. Ivii. (Iviii). 4 ἀσπίδος κωφης καὶ βυούσης τὰ ὧτα αὖτῆs. It was an action expressive of horror, when any blasphemy was uttered; Acts vii. 57 συνέσχον τὰ ὧτα αὐτῶν, Iren. in Euseb. H. E. v. 20 έμφράξας τὰ ὧτα αὐτοῦ (of Polycarp, when he heard any heresy talked), Iren. Hær. iii. 4. 2 'si aliquis annuntiaverit ea quæ ab hæreticis adinventa sunt...statim concludentes aures longo longius fugient,' Clem. Recogn. ii. 37 'aures continuo obcludens, velut ne blasphemia polluantur' (comp. ib. ii. 40, 52). In Clem. Alex. Protr. 10 (pp. 73, 83) ἀποβύειν τὰ ὧτα is used of resisting good influences; comp. Clem. Hom. i. 12 βύοντες των σώζεσθαι θελόντων τὰς ἀκοάς. For the purport comp. Trall. 9 κωφώθητε οὖν κ.τ.λ.

6. λίθοι ναοῦ] The metaphor, and in part even the language, is suggested by Ephes. ii. 20—22; comp. I Pet. ii. 5. The metaphor is elaborately carried out in Hermas Sim. ix. See below § 15 (note). The transition in the metaphor is violent, after the manner of Ignatius. It can hardly be bridged over, I think, by a reference to the idea of seed sown on rocky ground (Matt. xiii. 4), as Zahn suggests.

προητοιμασμένοι] So I have ventured to substitute for πατρὸς ήτοιμασμένοι, i.e. προητοιμαςμένοι for TPCHTOIMACMENOI. This was Markland's conjecture, but it had occurred to me without knowledge of the fact. Certainly πατρός is awkward, where Θεοῦ πατρός follows so closely; while προητοιμασμένοι gives another coincidence with the same Epistle of S. Paul (Ephes. ii. 10 οἷς προητοίμασεν ὁ Θεός, comp. Rom. ix. 23 σκεύη έλέους â προητοίμασεν είς δόξαν) which has so largely influenced this letter, and more especially this context. An alternative correction would be to substitute πνς for πρς, πνεύματος for $\pi \alpha \tau \rho \delta s$; see the note on Smyrn. 13. For ναοὶ πνεύματος comp. I Cor. vi. 19. But the mention of the Spirit comes in properly at a later stage.

8. μηχανῆς] See Hippol. de Antichr. 59 (p. 31 Lagarde) κλίμαξ ἐν αὐτῆ εἰς τψος ἀνάγουσα ἐπὶ τὸ κέρας εἰκὼν σημείου πάθους Χριστοῦ, ἔλκουσα τοὺς πιστοὺς εἰς ἀνάβασιν οὐρανῶν (comp. Clem. ős] by attraction for $\tilde{\eta}$; see on Magn. 7, and Winer \S xxi. p. 206 sq.

 ἀναγωγεὺς] 'a lifting engine.' No other example of this sense of the word is given in the lexicons earlier than Eustath. Opusc. p. 328 (ed. Tafel) "Αργον...ον ή ποιητοῦ πλαστική εἰς πολλούς ήνοιξεν όφθαλμούς και βρύειν ώσπερ πολλαίς εποίησεν όψεσιν, είς μυρία όμματα κατατρήσασα, ώς διαρρείν οθτω τὸ ὀπτικὸν τοῦ ὅλου σώματος, ώς ότε πολυτρήτου τινὸς ἀναγωγέως ὕδωρ πολύρρουν έξακοντίζεται. This comparison to the many eyes of Argus seems to show that the αναγωγεύς described by Eustathius is, as a friend suggests to me, an engine like Barker's Mill. The avaywyevs contemplated by Ignatius may not have been of the same kind, for the word itself is not special; but there would be no anachronism in this identification, since (as I am informed on competent authority) the principle of Barker's Mill was known before his time. I have not found the word in the Mathematici Veteres, where it might have been expected to occur.

The metaphor is extravagant, but not otherwise ill-conceived. The framework, or crane, is the Cross of Christ; the connecting instrument, the rope, is the Holy Spirit; the motive power, which sets and keeps the machinery in motion, is faith; the path (conceived here apparently as an inclined plane), up which the spiritual stones are raised that they may be fitted into the building, is love.

3. ἐστὲ οὖν κ.τ.λ.] The mention of the 'way' suggests a wholly different image to the writer. The members of the Ephesian Church are now compared to a festive procession, in which each person bears some sacred vessel or emblem, a statue of a god, a model of a shrine, and the like; comp. Epist. Jer. 4 νυνὶ δὲ όψεσθε έν Βαβυλώνι θεούς άργυροῦς καὶ χρυσοῦς καὶ ξυλίνους ἐπ' ἄμοις αίρομένους. How large a place these religious festivities occupied in the life of a Greek may be inferred from Aristoph. Lys. 641 sq έπτὰ μὲν ἔτη γεγώσ' εὐθὺς ήρρηφόρουν...κάκανηφόρουν ποτ' οὖσα παῖς καλή κ.τ.λ. Hence such words as ἀνθοφόρος, δαδοφόρος, έρρηφόρος, θυρσοφόρος, κανηφόρος, κιστοφόρος, λικνοφόρος, παστοφόρος, ύδροφόρος, etc. At Ephesus itself the saint's imagery would have an especially vivid illustration in the fact that treasures belonging to the temple of Artemis were solemnly borne in procession into the city by one road and taken back by another at stated times, as we learn from a recently found inscription: see Wood's Discoveries at Ephesus Inscr. vi. 1, pp. 32, 34, 42 (see above, p. 17 sq). A description of such a procession in Ephesus at an έπιχώριος έορτη of Artemis is given also in Xenoph. Ephes. i. 2, παρήεσαν δε κατά στίχον οί πομπεύοντες πρώτον μέν τὰ ίερὰ καὶ δᾶδες καὶ κανᾶ καὶ θυμιάματα, ἐπὶ δὲ τούτοις ίπποι καὶ κύνες καὶ σκεύη κυνηγετικά κ.τ.λ. Accordingly elsewhere (C. I. G. no. 2963 c) we read of oi τον...κόσμον βαστά[ζοντες] της μεγάλης θεᾶς ['Αρτέμι]δος πρὸ πόλ[εω]ς ίερεις [καὶ ίερ]ονεικαι. Again there is a mention in another inscription (Wood's Discoveries Inscr. vi, 19, p. 68) of a δειπνοφοριακή πομπή in this same city. Again we read of yet another Ephesian festival, the καταγώγια, in which persons went along ρόπαλά τε έπιφερόμενοι καὶ εἰκόνας εἰδώλων (Mart. S. Timoth. in Ducange Gloss. Graec. p. 607: see Lobeck Aglaoph. p. 177). But indeed this was not characteristic of one or two special occasions. At all the great festivals of Ephesus, the Taupeia, in honour of Poseidon, the 'Aμβρόσια, in honour of Dionysus, etc., the same sight would probably Ignatius is not the only writer, to whom this characteristic feature of a heathen religious ceremonial suggests the image in the text: comp. Philo Leg. ad Cai. 31 (II. p. 577) ἐν ταῖs ψυχαίς άγαλματοφορούσι τὰς τῶν διατεταγμένων εἰκόνας, i.e. they carry the commandments in their souls, as the pagans bear the images of their gods on their shoulders. So again de Mund. Opif. 23 (I. p. 16) προς ένα τὸν τῶν ὅλων ἐκείνον, ὡς ἃν ἀρχέτυπον, ό ἐν ἐκάστω [νοῦς] τῶν κατὰ μέρος ἀπεικονίσθη, τρόπον τινὰ θεὸς ὢν τοῦ φέροντος καὶ ἀγαλματοφοροῦντος αὐτὸν, ib. 47 (I. p. 33) οἶκος γὰρ ἡ νεώς ίερὸς ἐτεκταίνετο ψυχης λογικης ην έμελλεν άγαλματοφορήσειν, άγαλμάτων τὸ θεοειδέστατον, and so frequently in Philo, who however in some passages attaches also a secondary meaning to ἄγαλμα, 'an image' or 'representation' in its philosophical sense. From Philo the application of ἀγαλματοφορείν is borrowed by the Christian fathers. See also Epictet. Diss. ii. 18. 12 sq θεὸν περιφέρεις, τάλας, καὶ ἀγνοείς δοκείς με λέγειν ἀργυροῦν τινα ἢ χρυσοῦν ἔξωθεν; ἐν σαυτῷ φέρεις αὐτὸν κ.τ.λ. Similarly Clem. Alex. Protr. 4 (p. 53) ἡμεῖς γάρ, ἡμεῖς ἐσμὲν οἱ τὴν εἰκόνα τοῦ θεοῦ περιφέροντες ἐν τῷ ζῶντι καὶ κινουμένῳ τούτῳ ἀγάλματι, τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ κ.τ.λ. See also the note on άγιοφόρος below.

σύνοδοι] 'companions on the way.' This word occurs several times in Epictetus, Diss. ii. 14. 8, iii. 21. 5, iv. 1. 97 (and so it should be written in iii. 13. 13). Similarly πάροδος 'a wayfarer,' LXX 2 Sam. xii. 4, Ezek. xvi. 15, 25; πρόοδος 'a precursor,' Clem. Hom. iii. 58, viii. 2, xvi. 18, xx. 13, 14, 18; ἔφοδος 'a patrol,' e.g. Polyb. vi. 36. 6.

 $\theta\epsilon$ οφόροι κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'each carrying his God, his shrine, his Christ, his holy things.' On this word $\theta\epsilon$ οφόρος see the note, inscr. above.

ναοφόροι] 'shrine bearers.' The metaphor is taken from the portable shrines (containing the image of some patron deity), which were made either to be carried about in processions, or to be purchased by pilgrims to any famous sanctuary as reminiscences of their visit and worn about the person as amulets. For the former see e.g. Herod. ii. 63 τὸ δὲ ἄγαλμα ἐὸν ἐν νηῷ μικρῷ ξυλίνῷ κατακεχρυσωμένῷ προεκκομίζουσι κ.τ.λ., Diod. Sic. i. 97 τῶν ναῶν

Of the latter the miniature representations of the shrine of the Ephesian Artemis furnish the best illustration, and we may suppose that Ignatius had these more or less in mind; see Acts xix. 24 (with the passages collected by commentators). Comp. Amm. Marc. xxii. 13 'deae caelestis argenteum breve figmentum, quocumque ibat, efferre solitus.' See also the conjectural reading of Wordsworth on the Scholiast of Aristides, Athens and Attica p. 108 Παλλαδίων...τών περιαυτοφόρων καλουμένων. The application of the metaphor is to the body of the Christian, as the shrine of the Spirit; see below § 15 ίνα ωμεν αὖτοῦ ναοί (with the note).

I. χριστοφόροι] Comp. 2 Cor. iv. 10 πάντοτε τὴν νέκρωσιν τοῦ Ἰησοῦ ἐν τῷ σώματι περιφέροντες, Magn. 12 Ἰησοῦν γὰρ Χριστὸν ἔχετε ἐν ἐαυτοῖς. The saint himself is called χριστοφόρος in Mart. Ign. Ant. 5. So Phileas in Euseb. H. E. viii. 10 οἱ χριστοφόροι μάρτυρες. Other compounds of Χριστὸς in Ignatius are χριστομαθία Philad. 8, χριστόνομος Rom. inscr.

άγιοφόροι] 'bearers of holy things,' such as sacred treasures, votive offerings, and the like, which it was customary to carry in procession. They are the divinarum bajuli caeremoniarum, Firmic. Matern. Astron. iii. 11. 9. The word occurs again, Smyrn. inscr.; comp. ίεροφόρος С. I. G. 1793 b, ієрафороѕ ib. 2384 b (Appx.). So too the Latin 'sacra ferre' (e.g. Virg. Æn. iii. 19) of priests. But see esp. Plut. Mor. 352 Β τοις άληθώς καὶ δικαίως ίεραφόροις καὶ ἱεροστόλοις προσαγορευομένοις οδτοι δέ είσιν οί τὸν ίερὸν λόγον...έν τη ψυχη φέροντες, ωσπερ έν κίστη, καὶ περιστέλλοντες (with Wyttenbach's note), Virg. Georg. ii. 476 'Quorum sacra fero ingenti percussus amore'; in both which passages the image is applied as here.

κεκοσμημένοι 'adorned, decorated,' as with festive robes, chaplets, trinkets, and the like; comp. I Pet. iii. 3 ων έστω οὐχ ὁ έξωθεν ἐμπλοκῆς τριχών καὶ περιθέσεως χρυσίων ἡ ἐνδύσεως ίματίων κόσμος κ.τ.λ., I Tim. ii. 9 sq μετά αίδους και σωφροσύνης κοσμείν έαυτας...δι' ἔργων ἀγαθῶν. See Xenoph. Ephes. i. 2 έδει δὲ πομπεύειν πάσας τας έπιχωρίους παρθένους κεκοσμημένας πολυτελώς καὶ τοὺς ἐφήβους, describing a sacred procession at Ephesus. Mention is made of certain officers as χρυσοφοροῦντες in connexion with these festive processions in honour of Artemis; Wood's Discoveries Inscr. vi. pp. 32, 34 (comp. iii. p. 20). This seems to mean deranging the connexion of the words). 4 κατ' ἀνθρώπων βίον κ.τ.λ.] κατ' ἄλλον βίον κ.τ.λ. GL; see the lower note. My conjecture is supported by the paraphrase in g οὐδὲ κατὰ σάρκα ἀγαπᾶτε ἀλλὰ κατὰ θεόν. The text was early corrupted, as appears from the confused rendering of A, alium quendam non diligitis sed eum qui secundum deum vivit. 6 καὶ ὑπὲρ τῶν ἄλλων δὲ] GLg; et pro aliis A; super omnibus Σ. The fondness of the Ephesians for fine dresses is commemorated by the Ephesian Democritus quoted in Athenæus xii. p. 525; it is rebuked by S. Paul, I Tim. ii. 9, 10. The interpretation of Hilgenfeld (A. V. p. 250), 'durch die Gebote Christi organisirt, geordnet,' seems to me quite impossible, whether the preposition $\hat{\epsilon} \nu$ be retained or not.

2. οἶs καὶ κ.τ.λ.] 'wherein also rejoicing I was permitted to associate with you by letter, and to congratulate you, that ye love nothing after the common life of men, but God only.' The reading αγαλλιώμενος should probably be adopted on the ground of external authority; and if so, ois is more naturally taken as a neuter with ἀγαλλιώμενος. It may however be a masculine governed by προσομιλησαι and explained afterwards by ὑμῖν: see Winer Gramm. § xxii. p. 184 sq. For the whole expression comp. Magn. I ἀγαλλιώμενος προειλάμην έν πίστει Ίησοῦ Χριστοῦ προσλαλησαι ὑμῖν καταξιωθεὶς γαρ κ.τ.λ.; and for αξιοῦσθαι, a characteristic expression of Ignatius, the note on Magn. 2.

4. κατ' ἀνθρώπων βίον] So I have ventured to emend, ανών for αλλον; or perhaps read ανίνον = ἀνθρώπινον;

comp. Rom. 8 οὐκέτι θέλω κατὰ ἀνθρώπους ζῆν, Trall. 2 φαίνεσθέ μοι οὐ κατὰ ἀνθρώπους ζῶντες. In this case εἰ μὴ will be 'but only.' In other words it will not refer to the whole of the foregoing sentence, but to οὐδὲν ἀγαπᾶτε alone; comp. Matt. xii. 4, Luke iv. 26, 27, etc., and see the note on Gal. i. 19. The commentators fail to make anything of κατ' ἄλλον βίον. Zahn accepts Markland's conjecture καθ' ὅλον βίον, but this is a violent change and does not yield a very good sense.

X. 'Pray also for unbelievers. There is hope of their repentance. Let them learn from your deeds, if they will learn from nothing else. Requite them with good for evil; with meekness for their wrath, with humility for their boastfulness, with prayers for their revilings, with staunchness in the faith for their errors, with gentleness for their wrath. Show yourselves their brothers by your conduct. Imitate not them but the Lord. Vie with each other who shall suffer rather than do the most wrong. Let no rank weed of the devil spring up in you; but live in chastity and soberness.'

6. ἀδιαλείπτως] See I Thess. v. 17, where also we have the expression ἀδιαλείπτως προσεύχεσθε; comp. Hermas Sim. ix. 11. The same adverboccurs also Rom. i. 9, I Thess. i. 3, ii. 13, in connexion with prayer and thanksgiving. See also Polyc. I προσευχαίς σχόλαζε άδιαλείπτοις. The Syriac and Armenian have simply 'pray' here and simply 'be constant in prayer' in Polyc. I. In the passage before us therefore the ἀδιαλείπτως is highly suspicious, and may easily have been inserted from St Paul. In Polyc. I it is not quite so clear that the word is unrepresented in the text of the Syriac translator (followed by the Armenian), because the Syriac proof 'be constant' might be intended to cover both σχόλαζε and άδιαλείπτοις. On the other hand, supposing that the word was in the Greek text used by the Syriac translator, he may have rejected it on account of its apparent extravagance.

ἔστιν γὰρ κ.τ.λ.] Comp. Herm.

 quoted by Zahn.

2. κầν κ.τ.λ.] 'at all events from your works, if they will not listen to your words.' This use of $\kappa \hat{a} \nu$ is elliptical for $\kappa \hat{a} \nu \dots \mu a \theta \eta \tau \epsilon \upsilon \theta \hat{\omega} \sigma \iota \upsilon$: comp. Mark vi. 56, Acts v. 15, 2 Cor. xi. 16, 2 Clem. ii. 7, 18. See Winer Gramm. § lxiv. p. 730 (Moulton).

3. ὑμιν μαθητευθήναι] 'to be your disciples,' 'to go to school to you'; a legitimate and not uncommon construction with μαθητεύειν (-εσθαι), e.g. Plut. Mor. 832 Β μαθητεύσας τῷ πατρί, ἦν γὰρ σοφιστής, ῷ καὶ 'Αλκιβιάδην φασιν ἔτι παίδα ὄντα φοιτήσαι, ib. 837 C, 840 F, Orig. c. Cels. iii. 29 aί...Χριστῷ μαθητευθείσαι ἐκκλησίαι, Euseb. H.  $\pi\rho$ òs τὰs ὀργὰs κ.τ.λ.] See Matt. v. 44, Luke vi. 27, 28, Rom. xii. 14 sq. Comp. also I Pet. ii. 21, 22, where our Lord's example is dwelt upon as here.

βλασφημίαs] Not 'blasphemies,' but 'slanderings,' 'railings'; comp.
 Luke l. c. προσεύχεσθε ὑπὲρ τῶν ἐπηpatietur et opprimetur et defraudabitur. After ἀθετηθη it omits everything till the last sentence of § 14 οὖ [γὰρ νῦν] ἐπαγγελίας κ.τ.λ. The corresponding words in A are sed (in) mansuetudine state et similes dei studeamus fieri, the sentence τίς πλέον...ἀθετηθη being omitted. The Syriac Version (S) was probably corrupted at an early date, and hence the aberrations of ΣΑ. εὐρεθῶμεν] So G. Dressel prints εὐρηθῶμεν (after other editors) and does not notice any variation from his text in G. 9 τοῦ Κυρίου] GΣ; τὸν κύριον g (with a different construction); dei LA (comp. § 1). 10 ἀδικηθη...ἀποστερηθη...ἀθετηθη αδικηθεί...ἀποστερηθη...ἀθετηθοῦ G; injustum patiatur... fraudetur... contemnatur L; def. A. The construction is changed in [g], but the words ἀδικηθείς, ἀποστερηθη, ἀθετηθη appear. The rendering of Σ (see above) points to the reading adopted in the text.

ρεαζόντων ὑμᾶς. For this meaning of βλασφημία, which indeed is more common than the other in the N.T., see the note on Col. iii. 8.

τὰς προσευχάς] The interpolator has supplied this ellipsis by ἀντιτά-ξατε; the Syriac translator has rendered it by a verb 'be ye praying.' For the elliptical sentence, which is much more forcible, see Winer lxiv. p. 734 sq. A. Buttmann p. 337 sq.

6. έδραῖοι τῆ πίστει] Comp. Col. i. 23 εἴ γε ἐπιμένετε τῆ πίστει τεθεμελιωμένοι καὶ ἑδραῖοι κ.τ.λ. (comp. I Cor. xv. 58), Polyc. Phil. 10 'firmi in fide et immutabiles.' So too Smyrn, 13 ἑδρᾶσθαι πίστει.

8. ἀντιμιμήσασθαι] 'requite them by imitating their conduct to you,' i.e. 'retaliate,' a rare word. It occurs Appian Bell. Civ. v. 41; comp. ἀντιμίμησις, Thuc. vii. 67.

αδελφοὶ αὐτῶν κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'The right way of showing our brother-hood with them is not by imitating their conduct, but by evincing our regard. Our imitation must be of Christ, not of them.' The word ἐπιείκεια, as denoting the spirit of concession and forbearance, which contrasts with strict justice, strict retaliation, is highly appropriate here; see the notes on Phil. iv. 5, Clem. Rom. 59 (p. 284). It was moreover especially characteristic of Christ (2 Cor. x. I), whose example is enforced here.

9. τίς κ.τ.λ.] This describes the proper aim of their rivalry. They should try to imitate Christ and show 'who can suffer more wrong than his neighbour.' The words are dependent on μιμηταί; comp. § 19 τ αραχή... π όθεν κ.τ.λ. For the conjunctive in indirect questions, see Kühner § 394 (II. p. 187). It is unnecessary to emend the sentence τίς πλέον ήδικήθη κ.τ.λ. (Markland), or τίς πλέον ἀδικηθείς (Hefele), or οῦ τίς πλέον άδικηθη (Pearson), or καν τις π λέον ἀδικηθη (Dressel). The whole passage is a reminiscence of I Cor. νί. 7 διατί οὐχὶ μᾶλλον ἀδικεῖσθε; διατί ούχὶ μᾶλλον ἀποστερείσθε; κ.τ.λ.

1. βοτάνη 'weed.' Though the word is quite neutral in itself and is often used in a good sense (e.g. Heb. vi. 7), yet it has a tendency to take a bad meaning, 'a rank or noxious herb,' 'a weed'; e.g. Hermas Sim. v. 2 είδεν τον άμπελώνα βοτανών πλήρη όντα...καὶ πάσας τὰς βοτάνας τὰς οὔσας έν τῷ ἀμπελῶνι ἐξέτιλλεν κ.τ.λ., ib. ix. 26 ώς γὰρ ἄμπελος... ὑπὸ τῶν βοτανῶν έρημοῦται κ.τ.λ.; comp. Clem. Hom. χίχ. 15, 20, βοτάναι θανάσιμοι, κακαί, Clem. Alex. Strom. vi. 7 (p. 770) ἄγριαι βοτάναι. Hence βοτανίζειν 'to weed,' e.g. Theophrast. C. P. iii. 20. 9. This sense it gets, because its leading idea is the absence of culture. On the other hand \(\lambda\gamma\) ava is used more especially for 'garden herbs,' 'vegetables.' Accordingly βοτάνη, as a metaphor, is especially applied, as here, to vice or to heresy; comp. Trall. 6, Philad. 3. It is opposed to the planting, the φυτεία τοῦ πατρός (Trall. 11, Philad. 3). It is the rank growth which springs up of itself in the soil of man's unregenerate nature; or it is the malicious sowing of the devil, as here, where there is probably a reference to the parable in Matt. xiii. 25.

2. άγνεία καὶ σωφροσύνη] The same combination is found in Clem. Rom.

σαρκικῶς κ.τ.λ.] Comp. 2 Cor. vii. I καθαρίσωμεν ἐαυτοὺς ἀπὸ παντὸς μολυσμοῦ σαρκὸς καὶ πνεύματος. This conjunction of 'flesh and spirit,' as comprehending the whole nature of man, is very common in Ignatius; Magn. I, 13, Trall. inscr., 12, Rom. inscr., Smyrn. I, 12, 13, Polyc. I, 5. But see esp. Polyc. 2 διὰ τοῦτο σαρκικὸς εἶ καὶ πνευματικός κ.τ.λ. In one place only there is a triple division Philad. II σαρκί, ψυχῆ, πνεύματι. See also the note on § 7, above.

XI. 'The end of all things is at hand. Let us therefore stand in awe of the judgment, or, if we do not fear the coming wrath, let us value the present grace. From the one motive or the other may we be found in Jesus Christ. In Him I wear these bonds; these jewels in which I hope also to be decorated at the resurrestion through your prayers. This is my hope; that I may be united in one destiny with the glorious Church of Ephesus, which was ever a devoted follower of the Apostles.'

4. ἔσχατοι καιροί] See I John ii. 18 ἐσχάτη ὥρα ἐστίν, and esp. I Cor. vii. 29 ὁ καιρὸς συνεσταλμένος ἐστὶν τὸ λοιπὸν ἵνα κ.τ.λ. So also Magn. 6 ἐν τέλει ἐφάνη.

Something like this may have been the reading of A which translates τὴν ἐνεστῶσαν χάριν κ.τ.λ. gratiam quam habemus in hoc mundo; unless indeed in hoc mundo represents ἐνεστῶσαν, but if so ἔν τῶν δύο is omitted. Perhaps ἔν τῶν δύο was first corrupted into ἐν τῷ νῦν, and βίφ added afterwards as a gloss; see the lower note. 8 εὐρεθῆναι] G, and so too g (but inserting words ἔστω δὲ κ.τ.λ. to help out the construction); invenitur L*; εἰρεθῶμεν Dam-Rup; inveniamur A. ἀληθινὸν] GLA; ἀληθινῶς [g]. 9 ἐν ῷ] Lg; cujus causa A; ἐν τῷ G.

λοιπόν] 'for what remains,' and so 'henceforth'; comp. Smyrn. 9 εὔλογόν ἐστιν λοιπὸν ἀνανῆψαι. For the occurrence of λοιπόν οτ τὸ λοιπόν at the beginning of the sentence see 2 Cor. xiii. II, Phil. iii. I, iv. 8, 2 Thess. iii. I, 2 Tim. iv. 8, Clem. Rom. 58; and it should probably be taken with what follows in I Cor. l.c. So too I have punctuated it here, as this is by far the most usual position of λοιπόν and the most forcible in this place.

5. κρίμα] For the accent of this word, see the note on Gal. v. 10. The Greek MS however accentuates it κρίμα here.

6. γένηται] 'it turn,' sc. ή μακροθυμία τοῦ Θεοῦ.

7. ἐν τῶν δύο] See Phil. iii. 13 ἐν δέ, τὰ μὲν ὀπίσω κ.τ.λ.; compare the classical use of δυοῖν θάτερον, and for examples of similar constructions see Kühner II. p. 244 sq, Winer § lxvi. p. 774. See also Magn. I τὸ δὲ κυριώτερον, Magn. 3 τὸ δὲ τοιοῦτον. The reading ἐν τῷ νῦν βίω is shown from the authorities to have been as early as the 4th century, but cannot be correct.

μόνον κ.τ.λ.] i.e. μόνον [οῦτω ποιήσω-μεν ωστε] εὐρεθῆναι. For similar elliptical uses of the infinitive see Kühner II. p. 590. There is a tendency to ellipsis with μόνον: comp. Rom. 5 μόνον ἵνα Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐπιτύχω, Smyrn. 4 μόνον ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ κ.τ.λ., and see the note on Gal. ii. 10.

8. $\zeta \hat{\eta} \nu$] 'life'; the infinitive being treated as a substantive, as above, § 3, and below, § 17, Magn. 1, 5. This very phrase $\tau \hat{o}$ $\hat{a} \lambda \eta \theta \iota \nu \hat{o} \nu \zeta \hat{\eta} \nu$ occurs in Trall. 9, Smyrn. 4.

9. τούτου] i.e. Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

ύμῦν πρεπέτω] 'glitter in your eyes,' i.e. 'have any attraction for you'; as e.g. Pind. Pyth. x. 105 πειρῶντι δὲ καὶ χρυσὸς ἐν βασάνω πρέπει καὶ νόος ὀρθός. The word is thus a preparation for the imagery of 'the spiritual pearls' which follows. Ignatius would say 'Do not value any decoration apart from Christ.'

 $\pi\epsilon\rho\iota\phi\dot{\epsilon}\rho\omega$] He uses the same word of his bonds again, Magn. 1, Trall. 12. It suggests the idea of ostentation. He is proud of this decoration, with which his Sovereign has invested him. On the prominent

I. τους πνευματικούς κ.τ.λ.] Clem. Hom. xiii. 16 τιμίους μηργαρίτας περικείται, τους σωφρονίζοντας λόγους. See also a similar image in Polyc. Phil. 1, where, referring apparently to Ignatius and his companions, he says, τούς ένειλημένους τοίς άγιοπρεπέσι δεσμοίς, ἄτινά ἐστιν διαδήματα τῶν ἀληθως ύπὸ Θεοῦ καὶ τοῦ Κυρίου ήμων έκλελεγμένων. So too in the Epistle of the Gallican Churches, Euseb. Η. Ε. ν. Ι ώστε καὶ τὰ δεσμὰ κόσμον εύπρεπή περικείσθαι αὐτοίς, ώς νύμφη κεκοσμημένη έν κροσσωτοίς χρυσοίς πεποικιλμένοις, Cyprian. 'rigentium pondera catenarum quasi quaedam monilia pervidebat, quia non fuerunt illa vincula, sed potius ornamenta'; see Cotelier ad loc., Pearson V. I. p. 588, and comp. Magn. I (note).

ἀναστῆναι] He can hardly mean that he desired literally to rise in his chains; but that he hoped through the prayers of the Ephesians to remain steadfast to the end, and so to appear at the resurrection invested with the glory of discipline and suffering, of which his chains were the instrument and the symbol, For other references to his condition at the resurrection see Rom. 4, Polyc. 7 (v. l.).

3. ἐν κλήρφ] Comp. Philad. 5 το ἀν ἀ κλήρφ ἢλεήθην ἐπιτύχω, Ερ. Vienn. § 7 in Euseb. H. E. v. 1 [ἐν] τῷ κλήρφ τῶν μαρτύρων προσετέθη. Voss, followed by some later editors, reads ἐνὶ (for ἐν), but this poetic form would hardly be possible in a writer like Ignatius.

4. τοῖs ἀποστόλοιs] S. Paul and S. John primarily, for these resided and taught at Ephesus; possibly S. Peter as well, for he corresponded with the Churches of Asia Minor, if he did not visit them (I Pet. i. I); perhaps also S. Andrew and S. Philip, whom early tradition represents as living in these parts; see Colossians p. 44 sq. The interpolator names Paul, John, and Timothy; but Timothy was not an Apostle: see Galatians p. 96.

συν ηνεσαν] I have, with some hesitation, preferred this reading to συν ησων, only because letters were more likely to have dropped out than to have been inserted.

9 ἡγιασμένου] So G; not ἀγιασμένου as stated in Dressel.

in whose footsteps I would fain tread, and who makes mention of you in all his letters.'

6. ἐγὼ κ.τ.λ.] See a similar passage in Rom. 4 Οὐχ ὡς Πέτρος καὶ Παῦλος διατάσσομαι ὑμῖν' ἐκεῖνοι ἀπόστολοι, ἐγὼ κατάκριτος κ.τ.λ., and comp. Trall. 3 ἴνα ὧν κατάκριτος ὡς ἀπόστολος ὑμῖν διατάσσωμαι. In all these passages his civil status, as κατάκριτος, is an emblem of his spiritual status: 'I am under sentence of condemnation; while ye have obtained mercy and are pardoned.'

 ἔτι γὰρ ὑπὸ κίνδυνόν εἰμι. He alludes to the danger of his flinching before the terrors of death, or otherwise yielding to the allurements of the world.

 πάροδός ἐστε] 'ye are a way of transit.' They had escorted S. Paul first, and now they were escorting Ignatius on his way to martyrdom. Their spiritual position, he seems to say, corresponds to their geographical position. As they conducted the martyrs on their way in the body, so they animated their souls with fresh strength and courage. The reference to S. Paul will hardly be satisfied by the interview with the Ephesian elders in Acts xx. 17 sq, for he was not then on his way to death, if (as is most probable) he was liberated from his first captivity: but the notices in the Pastoral Epistles show that he was again at Ephesus shortly before his final trial and martyrdom (I Tim. i. 3, 2 Tim. i. 18). Probably Ignatius was thinking of other martyrs also of whom we know nothing. See e.g. Polyc. Phil. I συνεχάρην ὑμιν προπέμψασιν...τοὺς ἐνειλημένους τοῖς ἁγιοπρεπέσι δεσμοῖς κ.τ.λ., and ib. 9 ἀσκεῖν πᾶσαν ὑπομονὴν καὶ εἴδετε κατ ὀφθαλμούς, οὐ μόνον ἐν τοῖς μακαρίοις Ἰγνατίω καὶ Ζωσίμω καὶ Ῥούφω κ.τ.λ.

τῶν εἰς Θεὸν κ.τ.λ.] 'who are slain unto God,' a condensed expression for 'who are put to death and thus conducted to God'; comp. § 1 δεδεμένον ἀπὸ Συρίας (with the note). The word ἀναιρουμένων is a παρὰ προσδοκίαν, where we should look for some such expression as προπεμπομένων.

9. Παύλου συμμύσται] i.e. 'fellowrecipients, fellow-students, of the mysteries, with Paul.' For the word see Orig. in Ies. Naue Hom. 7 (II. p. 413) 'Paulum nobis communiter adhibeamus magistrum; ipse enim est symmystes Christi,' Hippol. in Daniel. p. 174 (Lagarde) ώς συμμύσται καὶ θεοσεβεῖς ἄνδρες (i.e. coreligionists), Constantine in Theodt. Η.Ε. i. 19 ὁ τῆς τυραννικῆς ωμότητος συμμύστης. This was signally true of the Ephesians, among whom S. Paul resided for an exceptionally long time (Acts xix. 10 sq, xx. 31), with whom he was on terms of the most affectionate intimacy (Acts xx. 18 sq, 36), and who were the chief, though probably not the sole, recipients of the most profound of all his

epistles. The propriety of the language here is still further enhanced by the fact that S. Paul, in the Epistle to the Ephesians more especially, dwells on the Gospel dispensation as μυστήριον (i. 9, iii. 3, 4, 9, v. 32, vi. 19). Elsewhere (Phil. iv. 12) he speaks of himself as μεμυημένος. In later ecclesiastical lan-guage the words μυστήριον, μύστης, μυστικός, ἄμυστος, ἀμύητος, etc., were used with especial reference to the sacraments, more particularly to the eucharist (Bingham Christ. Ant. I. iv. 2). But there is no trace of this meaning in Ignatius, who still uses these terms, as they are used by S. Paul, of the doctrines and lessons of Christianity. For the force and significance of this use in the Apostle, see the notes on Col. i. 26.

If it be asked why S. John also is not mentioned here, the answer is simple. Ignatius is speaking of the relations of the Ephesians with martyrs (τῶν εἰς Θεὸν ἀναιρουμένων); but S. John died peaceably in extreme old age at Ephesus. He is doubtless included in the ἀπόστολοι mentioned before: but here there is no place for him. It should be added also, that the life of S. Paul had a peculiar attraction for Ignatius, owing to the similarity of their outward circumstances. He too, like Paul, had been an ἔκτρωμα; he too, like Paul, was journeying from Asia to Rome, there to win the crown of martyrdom. If Ignatius shows a full knowledge and appreciation of the teaching of S. John, his heart clings to the example of S. Paul.

τοῦ μεμαρτυρημένου] 'attested,' and hence 'approved,' 'of good report'; as e.g. Acts vi. 3, x. 22, xvi. 2, xxii. 5, I Tim. v. 10. So Clem. Rom. 47 ἀποστόλοις μεμαρτυρημένοις; see also Clem. Rom. 17 (note), 18, 19, 44, and Philad. 5, 11. It must not however be confined to the opinion of the Church, but will refer rather to the testimony of God as given in S. Paul's own life and work: comp. Heb. xi. 2, 4, 5, 39 μαρτυρηθέντες διὰ της πίστεως. Thus indirectly it may refer to his martyrdom; because this is God's chief act of attestation. But the Anglo-Latin translator is wrong in rendering it martyrizati, i.e. 'put to death as a martyr'; because the passive is not used in this sense even in very late Greek. 'To be a martyr' is not μαρτυρείσθαι, but μαρτυρείν 'to bear testimony.' Even in Latin the passive martyrizari is a solecism, though a common one; and martyrizare is the more correct word. On the use of these words, μάρτυς, μαρτυρείν, etc., as referring especially to the testimony borne by the death of the witness, see the note on Clem. Rom. 5.

ύπὸ τὰ ἴχνη Comp. I Pet. ii. 21, and esp. Mart. Polyc. 22 Πολύκαρπος οδ γένοιτο έν τη βασιλεία Ίησοῦ Χριστοῦ πρὸς τὰ ἴχνη εύρεθηναι ήμας. In the Mart. Ignat. Ant. § 5 it is related that the saint on his journey to Rome desired to follow in the Apostle's foot-prints, not only figuratively, but literally also, κατ' "χνος βαδίζειν έθέλων τοῦ ἀποστόλου Παύλου: but adverse winds prevented him from landing at Puteoli and so entering Rome by the Appian Way as S. Paul had done. Υπὸ τὰ ἴχνη here stands for the more usual κατά τά ίχνη or έν τοις ίχνεσιν. With the accusative ὑπὸ often signifies 'close to,' e.g. Thuc. v. 10 ύπὸ τὰς πύλας, Soph. El. 720 ύπ' αὐτὴν ἐσχάτην στήλην (see the note on ὑπεναντίος, Pelop. 16 μικρον δὲ ὑπὸ τὰ ἔλη νεώς ἐστιν 'Απόλλωνος. It almost universally refers to objects which are more or less raised. Comp. Ov. Met. iii. 17 'subsequitur pressoque legit vestigia gressu.' The Armenian translates ὑπὸ τὰ ἄχνη 'under his footstool.'

2. Θεοῦ ἐπιτύχω] A phrase used especially of his martyrdom; see the

έν πάση ἐπιστολη in every epis-Besides the epistle which bears their name, S. Paul refers to Ephesus and the Ephesian Christians, either alone or with others, in Romans (xvi. 5), 1 Corinthians (xv. 32, xvi. 8, 19), 2 Corinthians (i. 8 sq), and the two Epistles to Timothy. These references would be quite sufficient to explain the hyperbole in the text; comp. e.g. I Thess. i. 8 ἐν παντὶ τόπω, Col. i. 23 έν πάση κτίσει τῆ ὑπὸ τὸν οὐρανόν. But, as Ignatius must have been born before the Apostle's death, it is not improbable that he had oral information respecting the Apostle's relations to the Ephesian Church, which has not come down to us and by which his language here is coloured. Others would translate ἐν πάση ἐπιστολη 'throughout his letter,' supposing him to refer to the 'Epistle to the Ephesians'; e.g. Pearson V. I. p. 487 sq, and ad loc. But for the omission of the definite article with $\pi \hat{a}s$ in this sense no example has been produced which is analogous. The instances alleged are either proper names, as Matt. ii. 3 πάσα Ἱεροσόλυμα, Rom. xi. 26 πάς 'Ισραήλ (quoted by Hefele); or they are highly poetical passages, as Eurip. Med. 114 πας δόμος έρροι (quoted by Jacobson); or they are false readings, as Ephes. 5 καὶ πάσης ἐκκλησίας (quoted by Pearson V. I. p. 488, who has taken the incorrect text of Voss, the MS having καὶ πάσης τῆς ἐκκλησίας); or they are misinterpreted, as 2 Tim. iii. 16 πᾶσα γραφή (quoted also by Pearson V. I. l.c. and wrongly explained 'tota scriptura'); or they illustrate wholly different uses of παs, as Soph. Aj. 275 κεινός τε λύπη πας ελήλαται κακή (again quoted by Pearson, l. c.); or they are false Latin analogies, as e.g. Cicero's 'omne corpus' which might stand quite as well for πâν τὸ σῶμα as for $\pi \hat{a} \nu \sigma \hat{\omega} \mu a$, and which therefore fails in the main point (quoted also by Pearson, l. c.). It is strange that no one has adduced Ephes. ii. 21 where πασα οἰκοδομή is the best supported reading; but even though this reading be accepted, the context (esp. $\sigma v \nu o i \kappa o \delta o \mu \epsilon i \sigma \theta \epsilon$) shows that many οἰκοδομαί are required to make up the one temple (comp. Matt. xxiv. I. Mark xiii. I, 2), and that therefore 'every building' is the right render-

3. μνημονεύει] 'makes mention.' This would be singularly unmeaning, if not untrue, supposing the reference to be to the Epistle to the Ephesians. Hence Valois and others would import into the word more than it contains, 'vos cum laude memorat.' The interpolator has changed what seemed to him a very awkward expression, and substitutes δs πάντοτε έν ταῖς δεήσεσιν αὐτοῦ μνημονεύει ὑμῶν. An anonymous critic (see Lardner Credibility Pt. ii. c. 5) conjectured μνημονεύω; and this is now found to be the reading of the Armenian Version. This would be true to fact, for Ignatius does mention the Ephesians in five of the six remaining epistles, Magn. 15, Trall. 13, Rom. 10, Philad. 11, Smyrn. 12. Some the parallelism of the clauses, as well as the general tenour of sentence, shows that S. Paul, not Ignatius, is the subject here.

XIII. 'Gather yourselves together more frequently for eucharistic praise. By your frequent gatherings the powers of Satan are frustrated. The concord of your faith is their ruin. Nothing is better than peace, which vanquishes the antagonism of all enemies, spiritual and carnal.'

1. πυκνότερον] As Polyc. 4 πυκνότερον συναγωγαί γινέσθωσαν, [Clem. Rom.] ii. 17 πυκνότερον προσερχόμενοι πειρώμεθα προκόπτειν κ.τ.λ., Doctr. Apost. 16 πυκνώς δὲ συναχθήσεσθε; see also Magn. 4 διὰ τὸ μὴ βεβαίως κατ' ἐντολὴν συναθροίζεσθαι (with the note). Compare for similar injunctions in early times, Heb. x. 25 μη έγκαταλείποντες την έπισυναγωγήν έαυτών, Barnab. 4 έπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ συνερχόμενοι συνζητεῖτε κ.τ.λ., Clem. Hom. iii. 69 πρὸ δὲ πάντων, εἰ καὶ δεῖ ὑμῖν λέγειν, συνεχέστερον συν- $\epsilon \rho \chi \epsilon \sigma \theta \epsilon$. The meaning of πυκυότερον is not 'in larger numbers,' as it is taken by some (e.g. Pearson, here and on Polyc. l.c.; Zahn I. v. A. p. 345, and ad loc.), but 'more frequently,' which sense is demanded alike by the passage Polyc. l.c. and by the common usage of the adverb in later Greek (e. g. Acts xxiv. 26). The former rendering would have been more correct, if the reading had been πυκνότεροι.

2. εὐχαριστίαν] 'thanksgiving.' The word is quite general in itself, but doubtless refers indirectly to the Holy Communion, which was the chief εὐχαριστία of the Church, and which elsewhere Ignatius regards as the special bond of union; Philad. 4 (see the note there). The genitive Θεοῦ must be supplied also with δόξαν.

5. πᾶs πόλεμος κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'every antagonism which wars against the Church.' It is not the war between the powers of heaven and the powers of earth, but the war of his spiritual (ἐπουράνιοι) and his carnal (ἐπίγειοι) enemies alike against the Christian, of which Ignatius speaks. For ἐπουράνιοι, as applied to the powers of evil, comp. Ephes. vi. 12 πρὸς τοὺς κοσμοκράτορας τοῦ σκότους τούτου, πρὸς τὰ πνευματικὰ τῆς πουηρίας ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, a passage which the interpolator has introduced into his text here.

I. εἰς καλοκαγαθίαν κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'attend upon these and lead to perfection.' For this pregnant use of the preposition see the note on § I δεδεμένον ἀπὸ Συρίας. The word καλοκαγαθία does not occur in the LXX or N. T., but seems here to denote Christian perfection (τελειότης, Heb. vi. I).

 φανερὸν κ.τ.λ.] Matt. xii. 33 ἐκ γὰρ τοῦ καρποῦ τὸ δένδρον γινώσκεται; comp. Luke vi. 44.

5. οὐ γὰρ νῦν κ.τ.λ.] 'for now (i.e. in these evil times, in this season of persecution) the Work is not a mere matter of profession.' For this absolute use of τὸ ἔργον, meaning 'the preaching and practice of the Gospel,' comp. Rom. 3 οι πεισμονῆς τὸ ἔργον ἀλλὰ μεγέθους ἐστὶν ὁ χριστιανισμός, ὅταν μισῆται ὑπὸ κόσμου, a passage which explains the force of νῦν here. See also Acts xv. 38, Phil. ii. 30 (with the note). Similarly we have τὸ ὄνομα (see note § 3 above), [τὸ] θέλημα (see note § 20 below), ἡ χάρις

(e.g. Smyrn. 12), and the like.

6. ἀλλ' ἐν δυνάμει κ.τ.λ.] 'but is realised only if a man be found in the power of faith (with an effective faith) to the end.' The words ἐν δυνάμει πίστεως are sometimes attached to the preceding clause, and πιστός is understood with $\epsilon \hat{v} \rho \epsilon \theta \hat{\eta}$; but the construction which I have adopted seems simpler. It is not uncommon to throw some of the dependent words forward with ear and similar particles, for the sake of emphasis; e.g. John x. 9 δι' έμοῦ έάν τις εἰσέλθη, I Cor. vi. 4 βιωτικά μέν οὖν κριτήρια έὰν ἔχητε, χί. 15 γυνη δὲ ἐὰν κομᾶ. The connexion εύρεθη είς τέλος however is possible in itself (comp. Rom. 2 εύρεθηναι είς δύσιν).

7. "Αμεινόν κ.τ.λ.] Iren. ii. 30. 2 οὐκ ἐν τῷ λέγειν, ἀλλὶ ἐν τῷ εἶναι, ὁ κρείττων δείκνυσθαι ὀφείλει: comp. Rom. 3 ἵνα μὴ μόνον λέγω ἀλλὰ καὶ θέλω, and see the note on Clem. Rom. 38. This is an indirect defence of their bishop Onesimus, on whose quiet and retiring disposition men were apt to presume: see above § 6.

9. καὶ ἐγένετο] 'and it came to pass,' taken from Ps. xxxii (xxxiii). 9, where the LXX has εἶπεν καὶ ἐγενήθησαν, but ἐγένετο would be a more literal translation of the original. Thus Ignatius says in effect, 'It is true of Christ's work on earth, as the Psalmist says of God's work in the universe, that the word was equivalent to the deed'; comp. Euseb. H. E. x. 4 (p. 469). This reference explains the following clause; 'The effects of His silence also, not less than of His speech, are worthy of the Father.'

å σιγῶν δὲ κ.τ.λ.] 'yea, and what He hath wrought by His silence,' etc. i.e. His retirement in childhood and youth, His refusal to allow His miracles or His kingship to be published, His withdrawal for the purpose of prayer, His silence before His accusers, and the like; in short, the passive side of our Lord's life. The impression which His silence at His trial more especially made on His followers may be inferred from Matt. xxvi. 63, xxvii. 14, Luke xxiii. 9, John xix. 9, Acts viii. 32, 1 Pet. ii. 23. There is no reference here to the silence before the Incarnation, as in § 19. The silence here contemplated relates not to the counsels of God, but to the life of Christ.

10. δ λόγον κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'He, who has truly mastered the spoken precepts of Christ, is best able to appreciate and copy His silence.' ' $\lambda\lambda\eta\theta\hat{\omega}s$ is best taken with κεκτημένος.

12. " $va \delta i$ " $\delta v \lambda a \lambda \epsilon i \kappa . \tau . \lambda .$] i.e. 'that, when he has thus appropriated both the word and the silence of Christ, his speech may be as operative as action and his silence as significant as speech.' For the latter clause comp. Clem. Al. Pad. ii. 7 (p. 202) δ $\delta \epsilon$

The meaning of Philo Quis rer. div. 53 (I. p. 511) quoted by Zahn, ὁ προφήτης, καὶ ὁπότε λέγειν δοκεί, πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ήσυχάζει, is somewhat different, 'When he seems to speak, it is God who speaks and not himself.' The force of γινώσκηται seems to be 'may be recognized, understood by others, as if he were speaking.' Otherwise γινώσκηται might refer to recognition by God (a meaning suggested by the words following οὐδὲν λανθάνει κ.τ.λ.); but this is hardly so appropriate.

'Ημῶν, which is added in some texts, interferes slightly with the sense. See the note on $\S 9 \hat{\epsilon} \sigma r \hat{\epsilon} o \hat{v} \nu \kappa.\tau.\lambda$. above.

5. δικαίωs] 'rightly,' i.e. 'as in duty bound'; comp. Magn. 9 δν δικαίως ἀνέμενον, I Cor. xv. 34 ἐκνήψατε δικαίως. Hence it sometimes signifies 'truly'; see Lobeck on Soph. Aj. 547.

οἱ οἰκοφθόροι]. The whole passage is founded on S. Paul's language in the First Epistle to the Corinthians; comp. iii. 16 ovk oiδατε ὅτι ναὸς Θεοῦ ἐστε, καὶ τὸ πνεθμα του Θεού οἰκεὶ ἐν ὑμῖν; εἴ τις τὸν ναὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ φθείρει, $\phi\theta\epsilon\rho\epsilon\hat{\iota}$ τοῦτον ὁ Θεός, combined with vi. 9, 10, 19, μη πλανᾶσθε' οὔτε πόρνοι.....οὔτε μοιχοί......βασιλείαν Θεοῦ κληρονομήσουσιν...οὐκ οἴδατε ότι τὸ σῶμα ύμῶν ναὸς τοῦ ἐν ύμῖν άγίου πνεύματός έστιν; Hence οἰκοφθόρος must be interpreted from S. Paul. It denotes those who violate the temple of their hearts and bodies, which is God's house, by evil thoughts or evil habits. In classical Greek οἰκοφθόρος, οἰκοφθορεῖν, οἰκοφθορία, commonly refer to the squandering of property, e.g. Plato Phæd. 82 C; but occasionally they designate the ruin of a house by offences of another kind, as in Plut. Mor. 12 Β γυναικών οἰκοφθορίαι γαμετών, and perhaps in Orac. Sibyll. ii. 258 δόλιοί τ' οἰκοφθόροι aivoi; comp. Orig. c. Cels. vii. 63 νοθεύειν την ύπο των νόμων έτέρω προκαταληφθείσαν γυναίκα καὶ φθείρειν τον άλλου ανθρώπου οἶκον. Whence Hesychius explains οἰκοφθόροι by μοιyoi. The word therefore would lend itself easily to the application which Ignatius here makes of it. If the explanation which I have adopted be correct, the following ἀπέθανον will probably refer to the incident in Numbers xxv. 1-9, to which also S. Paul alludes in the same epistle, x. 8 μηδε πορνεύωμεν, καθώς τινες αὐτῶν έπόρνευσαν, καὶ έπεσαν κ.τ.λ. The interpolator has got altogether on a wrong track, for he paraphrases εὶ δὲ οί τους ανθρωπίνους οίκους διαφθείροντες θανάτω καταδικάζονται, πόσω μαλλον οἱ τὴν Χριστοῦ ἐκκλησίαν κ.τ.λ.

This last passage illustrates the force of κατά σάρκα in the text. The excuse for such language lies in the fact that the early heresies, which these writers combat, were in many cases highly immoral in their tendency, maintaining in direct terms the indifference of sins of the flesh. See the note on [Clem. Rom.] ii. 9, where also the sanctity of the bodily temple is maintained against such pernicious teaching.

For this objective sense of $\pi l \sigma \tau u$ see Galatians p. 155, and the notes on i. 23, iii. 23, vi. 10. This use is so fully recognised when Ignatius writes, that the definite article is dispensed with, as e.g. in $\theta \epsilon \lambda \eta \mu a$ (see the note on § 20).

As on that occasion 'the whole house was filled with the odour of the ointment,' so to all time the Church is perfumed with the fragrance of incorruptibility shed from the Person of Christ. Somewhat similarly Clem. Alex. Paed. ii. 8 (p. 205), speaking of this same incident, says δύναται δὲ τοῦτο σύμβολον είναι της διδασκαλίας της κυριακής καὶ τοῦ πάθους αὐτοῦ ' μύρφ γαρ εὐώδει αλειφόμενοι κ.τ.λ., where Clement explains the anointed feet of the Lord to mean the Apostles who received the fragrant chrism of the Holy Spirit. For ὅ, where we should expect ῆτις, see the note on Col. iii. 14 τὴν ἀγάπην ὅ ἐστιν σύνδεσμος τῆς τελειότητος (the correct reading). It is not uncommon in these epistles; Magn. l.c., Trall. ७, Rom. ७. The reading however is doubtful here; see the upper note.

XVIII. 'I am the devoted slave of the Cross. It is a scandal to the unbeliever, but salvation and life to us. In it the boast of this world's wisdom comes to nought. Such was God's scheme for our redemption. Jesus Christ our God was born as a man. He was Himself baptized that by His passion He might cleanse the waters of baptism for us.'

I. Περίψημα] 'the offscouring'; see the note on § 8. Here also the idea is twofold, abasement and self-sacrifice; 'My spirit bows itself at the foot of the Cross,' and 'My spirit devotes itself for the sake of the Cross.' 'I am content,' Ignatius would say, 'to give up everything, and to become myself as nothing, for that Cross in which others find only a stumbling-block.' Zahn points out a passage in Ephraem Syrus Op. Syr. III. p. 494 E 'crucem tuam adoravi,' which seems to be a reminiscence of the Syriac version of $\pi\epsilon\rho i\psi\eta\mu a \ \tau \delta \ \epsilon \mu \delta \nu$ $\pi\nu\epsilon\hat{\nu}\mu a \ \tau o\hat{\nu} \ \sigma\tau a \nu \rho o\hat{\nu}$ here, 'adorat spiritus meus crucem tuam.'

2. ὅ ἐστιν σκάνδαλον] A reminiscence of I Cor. i. 18, 23, 24; comp. Gal. v. II. The Cross was still a stumblingblock, as it had been in the Apostolic age; but the persons who stumbled at it were different. The stumblers, to whom Ignatius seems especially to allude in σκάν-δαλον here, are the Docetics; see on Philad. 8, and I. p. 359 sq. 568 sq.

3. ποῦ σοφός κ.τ.λ.] An inexact quotation from I Cor. i. 20 ποῦ σοφός; ποῦ γραμματεύς; ποῦ συνζητητής τοῦ αλώνος τούτου; which words themselves are a free paraphrase of Isaiah xxxiii. 18. The following clause, ποῦ καύχησις των λεγομένων συνετών, is Ignatius' own; but it is suggested by the quotation from Isaiah xxix. 14, ἀπολῶ τὴν σοφίαν τῶν σοφῶν καὶ τὴν σύνεσιν τῶν συνετῶν ἀθετήσω, which S. Paul introduces into his context (i. 19), combined with other expressions of the Apostle in this neighbourhood (i. 31 ὁ καυχώμενος έν Κυρίω καυχάσθω, a condensed quotation of the passage in Jeremiah ix. 23, 24,

5. ἐκυοφορήθη] 'was borne in the womb.' For the word comp. Clem. Rom. 20. It is found once in the LXX, Eccles. xi. 5, and occurs several times in late classical writers.

κατ' οἰκονομίαν] 'according to a dispensation.' The word οἰκονομία came to be applied more especially to the Incarnation (as here and below § 20 ής ήρξάμην οἰκονομίας κ.τ.λ.), because this was par excellence the system or plan which God had ordained for the government of His household and the dispensation of His stores. Hence in the province of theology, οἰκονομία was distinguished by the fathers from θεολογία proper, the former being the teaching which was concerned with the Incarnation and its consequences, and the latter the teaching which related to the Eternal and Divine nature of Christ. The first step towards this special appropriation of οἰκονομία to the Incarnation is found in S. Paul; e.g. Ephes. i. 10 είς ολκονομίαν τοῦ πληρώματος τῶν καιρῶν. See the note on that passage, where the history of the word is more fully traced. In this passage of Ignatius it is moreover connected with the 'reserve' of God (§ 19 ἐν ἡσυχία Θεοῦ ἐπράχθη). Thus 'economy' has already reached its first stage on the way to the sense of 'dissimulation,' which was afterwards connected with it, and which led to disastrous consequences in the theology and practice of a later age.

6. ἐκ σπέρματος Δανείδ] This is the way in which Ignatius delights to represent the human nature of our Lord; comp. § 20 below, Trall. 9, Rom. 7, Smyrn. 1. It is generally counterbalanced by a reference to His Divine nature, as here (ὁ Θεὸς ἡμῶν, πνεύματος ἀγίου); except where, as in Trall. 9, his object is merely to assert the reality of the human nature against the Docetics. See esp. Tertull. Carn. Chr. 21.

 ἐγεννήθη] not 'begotten,' but 'born,' as in Trall. 9; comp. Smyrn.

να τῷ πάθει κ.τ.λ.] The baptism of Christ might in a certain sense be said, in the language of our liturgy, to 'sanctify water to the mystical washing away of sin' (comp. Tertull. adv. Jud. 8, de Bapt. 9); but it was the death of Christ which gave their purifying effect to the baptismal waters. The baptism was only the inauguration of this sanctifying process.

XIX. 'This divine economy was hidden from the prince of this world. The virginity of Mary, her child-bearing, the death of the Lord -these three mysteries, though destined to be proclaimed aloud, were wrought in the silence of God. announcement was first made to all the ages by the appearance of a star, which outshone all the celestial lights, and to which sun and moon and stars did obeisance. They were terrified at this strange apparition. Magic vanished before it; ignorance was done away; the ancient kingdom of evil was destroyed, when God appeared in the form of Man. Thus the eternal counsel of God was inaugurated. And the whole universe was confounded because the dissolution of death was purposed.'

I. Καὶ ἔλαθεν κ.τ.λ. This passage is more frequently quoted by the fathers than any other in the Ignatian Epistles. It is cited or referred to by Origen (Hom. in Luc. vi, Op. III. p. 938 A), by Eusebius (Quaest. ad Steph. 1, Op. IV. p. 881, ed. Migne), by Basil (Hom. in Sanct. Chr. Gen. 3, Op. II. p. 598 B), by Jerome (Comm. in Matt. i. § 1, Op. VII. p. 12 B), by Jovius Monachus (de Oecon. vii, in Phot. Bibl. ccxxii, p. 622), by Andreas Cretensis (Hom. in Nativ. B. Virg. ii, in Pearson V. who has quoted also the previous context. Of these writers however, Basil and Jerome have obviously taken the reference, not from Ignatius himself, but from Origen, whose comment they mix up with the statement of Ignatius, as Cotelier has pointed out. The passage was apparently also in the mind of the commentator who bears the name of Theophilus of Antioch (in Evang. i, p. 280 Otto), of Ephrem Syrus (Hymn. 19, quoted by Merx, p. 74 sq), of S. Ambrose on Luke i. 27 (Op. 1. p. 1281 'ut virginitas Mariæ falleret principem mundi'), of Cyrillonas the Syrian poet (Bickell Consp. Rer. Syr. Lit. pp. 34, 35, quoted by Zahn I. v. A. p. 187), of Anastasius (de Rect. Ver. Dogm. quoted by Pearson V. I. p. 81), and certainly of a Syrian Commentator on S. John (Cureton C. I. p. 285; this was either Harith-bar-Sisin, or Lazarus of Beth-Kandasa; see Wright Catal. Syr. Manuscr. Brit. Mus. pp. 608, 610).

The idea that the Deceiver was himself deceived by God's mysterious reserve is found in many connexions in the early fathers; see for instance, besides the passages already quoted, Justin Martyr in Iren. v. 26. 2 Saτανας...μηδέπω είδως αύτου την κατάκρισιν, Hippol. Op. p. 38 (Lagarde) ίδου δ Κύριος παραγίνεται λιτός, μόνος, γυμνός, ἀπροστάτευτος, ἔνδυμα ἔχων τὸ ἀνθρώπινον σῶμα, κρύπτων δὲ τὸ της θεότητος άξίωμα ίνα λάθη τοῦ δράκοντος τὸ πανούργημα...άλλα καὶ ώς άνθρωπος λιτός καὶ ὑπόχρεως άμαρτιῶν έκλινεν την κεφαλήν αὐτοῦ βαπτισθήναι κ.τ.λ. In one of the two MSS (Σ_2) of the Curetonian text this clause is omitted, and the words run 'the virginity of Mary and the birth of our Lord and the three mysteries of a cry.' Thus the three mysteries are dissociated from the virginity and child-bearing. This reading has been adopted by Cureton (C. I. p. 284 sq), Lipsius (Aecht. p. 128 sq, S. T. pp. 9, 36, 194), and others, as the text of the original Ignatius; and is adduced as an argument for preferring the Curetonian letters to the Vossian. The reasons urged in favour of this view are twofold. (1) It is said that the earliest writers who quote or refer to the passage (Origen and Theophilus of Antioch) stop short of the death of The answer is, that they Christ. were speaking of the virginity of Mary and the birth of Christ alone, and therefore quoted, or referred to, just so much only of Ignatius' words as served their purpose. In the case of Origen the argument is suicidal; for he ends with ή παρθενία Maρίας, so that the testimony of his silence would be equally valid against o Toκετὸς αὐτης as against ὁ θάνατος τοῦ Κυρίου. Again Theophilus of Antioch (if indeed we could venture to consider this commentary his genuine work) does not directly refer to the passage at all, and therefore any allusion to the death would be altogether out of place. Eusebius, the next writer in point of time who quotes the passage, quotes the clause kai o θάνατος κ.τ.λ. also. Cureton alleges likewise the Pseudo-Ignatius (Philipp. 8), who mentions the virginity and birth alone as being hidden from Satan; but here again the answer is the same. This writer is not concerned at all with the death of Christ. Moreover this very instance shows the fallacy of the argument from silence; for this Ignatian forger certainly had καὶ ὁ θάνατος τοῦ Κυρίου in his text here, as his own recension shows. (2) It is urged that the statement involved in ὁ θάνατος τοῦ Κυρίου is false; for, since Satan is represented in the Gospels as prompting Judas to the betrayal (Luke xxii. 3, John xiii. 2), he could not have been ignorant of the death. Nor is the answer given by Uhlhorn (p. 48) and Hefele, that this ignorance of Satan applied to the predeterminate counsel of God and not to the historical event, satisfactory. It is not however the fact of the death, but the significance and effects of the death, to which Ignatius refers. The prince of this world instigated the death of Christ, not knowing that it was ordained to be the life of mankind. Thus the deceiver was himself deceived. See esp. 1 Cor. ii. 7 sq \aλοθμεν Θεοθ σοφίαν έν μυστηρίω, την άποκεκρυμμένην, ην προώρισεν ο Θεος πρό των αιώνων είς δόξαν ήμων, ήν ούδεις των άρχόντων τοῦ αίωνος τούτου έγνωκεν εί γὰρ έγνωσαν, οὐκ αν τον Κύριον της δόξης έσταύρωσαν κ.τ.λ., where, as here, the reference is to the mystery of the atonement through the cross of Christ, and on which passage Chrysostom says τὸ δὲ Οὐκ ἔγνωσαν ἐμοὶ δοκεῖ οὐ περὶ Χριστοῦ ένταθθα εἰρῆσθαι ἀλλὰ περὶ αὐτῆς τοῦ πράγματος της οἰκονομίας, οἶον, τί έβούλετο ὁ θάνατος καὶ ὁ σταυρός, ουκ ήδεισαν. As Ignatius has quoted the context of this passage of S. Paul just before, we must suppose that he had the Apostle's words in his mind here. It is probable indeed that by οί ἄρχοντες τοῦ αἰώνος τούτου S. Paul means earthly rulers, such as Pilate and Herod; but very many ancient commentators (e.g. Marcion in Tertull. adv. Marc. v. 6; Origen Sel. in Psalm. ii, II. p. 538; twés in Chrysost. on I Cor. ii. 6; Ambrosiaster ad loc.), and some modern, have interpreted the words of spiritual powers, and Ignatius is likely to have done the same. Even if he did not, he would still regard the earthly rulers as acting under the ἄρχων τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου in this crime. Indeed the mention of the 'death of Christ' is required by the context. Here, as elsewhere in Ignatius, the $\pi \acute{a} \theta_{os}$ is the centre round which his thoughts revolve. The Incarnation has its importance mainly in the fact that it leads up to the Passion. It is only the beginning of the end $(\vec{a}\rho\chi\dot{\eta}\nu\ \delta\dot{\epsilon}\ \dot{\epsilon}\lambda\dot{a}\mu\beta a\nu\epsilon\nu)$. The whole passage opens and closes with the death of Christ. It opens with the mention of the 'Cross' which is 'salvation and life eternal' (§ 18 beginning); it closes with the reference to the 'dissolution of death' through the sacrifice of Calvary (§ 19 end).

Both these passages, it will be observed, appear in the Curetonian letters themselves. And, while the mention of Christ's death is thus suggested by the parallel in S. Paul and required by the context of Ignatius himself, this mode of regarding it entirely accords with the language of other fathers, who speak in the same way of Satan's ignorance respecting it; e.g. Orig. Sel. in Psalm. xxxiv. 8 (commenting on the words έλθέτω αὐτοῖς παγὶς ἡν οὐ γινώσκουσι κ.τ.λ., Op. II. p. 650) νομίζω περί τοῦ σταυροῦ λέγειν αὐτόν, εἰς ὅν ἐμπέπτωκεν ό διάβολος άγνοῶν κ.τ.λ., Comm. in Matt. T. xiii § 6, Op. 111. p. 583 (comp. Comm. in Matth. T. xiii & 9, Op. III. p. 583, ίν' οἱ παραλαβόντες αὐτὸν...έκ τοῦ Κυρίου ἐκμυκτηρισθῶσιν, εἰς κατάλυσιντης ίδίας βασιλείας καὶ ἀρχης παρά προσδοκίαν παραλαβόντες...δι' ον έν καινότητι ζωής περιπατούμεν). Marcionites used similar language of the demiurge, Adamant. Dial. de Rect. Fid. ii ὁ δημιουργὸς...ἐπεβούλευσεν αὐτῶ, μὴ εἰδὼς ὅτι ὁ θάνατος τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ σωτηρία ἀνθρώπων ἐγένετο. grounds of external and internal criticism. (1) Though one of the two MSS (Σ_2) of the Syriac has the passage as given above, the other (Σ_3) reads it 'the virginity of Mary and her child-bearing and the death of the Lord (mbase milase) and the three mysteries of crying,' thus only differing in sense from the Greek text by the insertion of 'and' before τa $\tau \rho ia$ $\mu \nu \sigma \tau \eta \rho \mu a$ (an insertion which a thoughtless transcriber would readily make). It is said indeed, that this MS (Σ_3) must have been corrected from the Greek text. But such a solution is highly improbable in itself; for elsewhere Σ_3 follows the Curetonian text closely in all the omissions and divergences from the Greek. In the only other passage of importance in which it exhibits a variation, Rom. 9 καὶ γὰρ αί μὴ προσήκουσαί μοι τῆ ὁδῷ, where with the Greek it retains the negative $\mu\dot{\eta}$, which Σ_2 omits, it clearly preserves the original reading (see the note there). Even in smaller matters it is not uncommonly more correct than Σ_2 (see Zahn I. v. A. p. 187). Again the Armenian Version, which was translated from the Syriac, has the clause here as in the Greek; and it is quoted or referred to in Syriac writers (see the references given above), who were scarcely likely to have got it from the Greek. Moreover the omission in Σ_0 is readily explained. The eye of the transcriber would be confused between words differing so slightly as and her child-bearing,' and monana 'and the death of,' so that the latter word might easily drop out; and as a matter of fact this same confusion is actually made in Rom. 6, where τοκετός is rightly translated in the Curetonian text dolores partus, but an extract elsewhere preserved gives it with the corrupt reading Khan for Ralas, and accordingly the Armenian version has dolores mortis (see the notes on the passage). (2) The reading of Σ_2 , which distinguishes the three mysteries from what has gone before, has never yet been adequately explained. What in this case are the 'three mysteries of crying'? Cureton altogether evades this difficulty when he says (C. I. p. 286) that they may 'refer to the song of the angelic host,' Luke ii. 14; for there is nothing in this song which explains such a reference. Ritschl (Entstehung p. 578, ed. 1) and Lipsius (Aecht. p. 133) agree that two of the three were (1) the voice at the baptism, (2) the voice at the transfiguration. For the third Lipsius suggests the angelic announcement of the conception as made either to Joseph (Matt. i. 20) or to the Virgin herself (Luke i. 26); while Ritschl supposes that Ignatius used some other Gospel containing a third proclamation similar to the two others. But, if the transfiguration is allowed a place here, why not the death? And again, in what sense can the announcements of Matt. i. 20, Luke i. 26 be called κραυγής, seeing that they were strictly private? Volkmar (see Lipsius S. T. p. 9 sq) finds all the three $\mu\nu\sigma\tau\dot{\eta}$ ρια κραυγης in S. Mark, explaining them of the voice at the baptism, the voice at the transfiguration, and the exclamation of the centurion at the crucifixion (Mark xv. 39). As he includes this last, it is difficult to see on what grounds he rejects o θάνατος τοῦ Κυρίου.

νότος έπὶ παρρησίαν ἀναγαγείν ώς έπὶ βασιλέων φιλοσόφων ἀπολογούμενον (comp. Luke i. 42 κραυγη μεγάλη, probably the correct reading). Comp. also Philad. 7 ἐκραύγασα, with the Here κραυγή is the correlative to ήσυχία, as revelation is to mystery. 'These mysteries,' Ignatius would say, 'were foreordained and prepared in silence by God, that they might be proclaimed aloud to a startled world.' It is an exaggerated expression of the truth stated in Rom. xvi. 25 τὸ κήρυγμα Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν μυστηρίου χρόνοις αλωνίοις σεσιγημένου φανερωθέντος δὲ νῦν κ.τ.λ., Ephes. iii. 9 τοῦ μυστηρίου τοῦ ἀποκεκρυμμένου ἀπὸ τῶν αἰώνων ἐν τῷ Θεῷ ... ίνα γνωρισθή νῦν ταίς ἀρχαίς καὶ ταις έξουσίαις έν τοις έπουρανίοις κ.τ.λ. (with the parallel passage Col. i. 26 sq); comp. also I Cor. ii. 7 sq (already quoted), 2 Tim. i. 10. For the use of μυστήριον in S. Paul as suggesting the idea of revelation, see the note on Col. i. 26. The expression µvστήρια κραυγής involves a studied contradiction in terms; for, as Chrysostom says (Op. II. p. 375), $\tilde{\epsilon}\nu\theta a \mu \nu$ στήρια, πολλή σιγή.

The substitution of φρικτὰ for κραυγῆς in Andreas Cretensis is not to be explained with Merx (p. 76) as a corruption of κρυπτά, this again being corrupted from κραυγῆς. It is merely the substitution, in a loose quotation, of a common epithet of μυστήριον (occurring in the liturgies) for a not very intelligible expression. The epithet φρικτὸν is found with μυστήριον, e.g. Joseph. B. J. ii. 8. 5, Hippol. p. 17 (Lagarde), Lit. D.

Marc. p. 16, Lit. S. Basil. p. 164 (ed. Neale). So in Chrysostom the μυστήρια (i.e. the eucharist) are styled φρικτά, φρικώδη, Ορ. VII. p. 310, VIII. p. 273, X. p. 393, and elsewhere. Bunsen would read ἐναργῆ for κραυγῆς.

I. τοιs alωσιν] 'to the ages' past and future, which are here personified. It seems probable that in S. Paul's expression, μυστήριον ἀποκεκρυμμένον ἀπὸ τῶν alώνων (Eph. iii. 9, Col. i. 26), the preposition should be taken as temporal (see the note on the latter passage); but Ignatius may have understood it otherwise. At all events this personification of 'the aeons' is a step towards the Valentinian phraseology, and affords another illustration of the Gnostic tinge which colours the language of Ignatius.

2. ἀστήρ] In the evangelical narrative (Matt. ii. 2 sq) the incident of the star is very simply told; but this simplicity was early overlaid by gross exaggerations. So we find it treated in the Protevangelium, § 21 εἴδομεν ἀστέρα παμμεγέθη λάμψαντα ἐν τοῖς ἄστροις τούτοις καὶ ἀμβλύνοντα αὐτούς, ὥστε τοὺς ἀστέρας μὴ φαίνεσθαι. [I may here mention by way of caution, that Lipsius (Aecht. p. 135)

erroneously quotes after Cureton as a separate authority, though closely allied, an extract from the MS, Brit. Mus. Add. 14, 484, which Cureton himself correctly gives as a Syriac translation of this passage in the Protevangelium (C. I. p. 286). See the account of the MS in Wright's Catal. p. 99.] Compare also Clem. Alex. Exc. Theod. 74 (p. 986) avéτειλεν ξένος ἀστήρ καὶ καινός, καταλύων την παλαιάν ἀστροθεσίαν, καινώ φωτί οὐ κοσμικῷ λαμπόμενος, ὁ καινάς όδους και σωτηρίους τρεπόμενος, αυτός ό Κύριος ἀνθρώπων όδηγὸς κ.τ.λ., where the resemblances to this passage of Ignatius are perhaps too great to be accidental. Still more extravagant is the extract which Cureton (C. I. p. 287) gives from the Syriac work called the Cave of Treasures, wrongly ascribed to Ephrem: 'For two years before the birth of Christ the star appeared to the magi; for they beheld the star in the firmament of heaven, which shone with a light, the appearance of which was greater than all the stars; and there was a girl in the midst of it holding a boy, and a crown was placed upon his head, etc.' This extract is taken from the MS Brit. Mus. Add. 25, 875: see Wright's Catal. p. 1064. A similar account of the appearance of the virgin and child in the star is found also in the Æthiopic Conflict of Adam and Eve, of which the Syriac Cave of Treasures is apparently only another recension (see Dillmann Das Christliche Adambuch des Morgenlandes p. 9 sq, in Ewald's Jahrbiicher no. v), but nothing is there said of the two years. The star however is there stated, as here, to have 'shone in the heavens in the midst of all the other stars' (Dillmann l. c. p. 135). Whether Ignatius derived his statement from some written narrative or from oral tradition, it would be impossible to say. In the only other passage where he seems to step outside of the Canonical Gospels, Smyrn. 3, either hypothesis is tenable.

3. ἀνεκλάλητον] Not a common word; see I Pet. i. 8, Iren. i. 14. 5.

The substantive occurs occasionally elsewhere in the sense which it has here; e.g. Polyb. xv. I7. I συγκινεῖ πως ἔκαστον ἡμῶν ὁ ξενισμός.

At least I do not remember any instance where ὑπερβάλλειν signifies 'to make to exceed.' From a comparison of the two last it seems to follow that the Syriac Version, of which Σ is a tumbled abridgment and from which A is a corrupt text of a secondary translation, must have run somewhat thus; solvebatur omnis magia et omne vinculum et error malitiae finiebatur et regnum vetus destruebatur, etc. The scribe of the ancestral MS of GG'L, having begun with a wrong punctuation, found when he got to the end of the sentence that he had no verb for παλαιά βασιλεία and inserted διεφθείρετο accordingly. Sev-Syr 5 quotes only the latter part of the sentence, ignorantia dissipabatur, regnum vetus corrumpebatur (destruebatur), where the last verb is a natural rendering of διεφθείρετο, which was perhaps already 4 μαγεία] μαγία G'. δεσμός $GG'L\Sigma$; θεσμός [g]; in his text. καθηρείτο] g; destruebatur A; καθηρήτο GG'; ablata est L. al. 4. μαγεία] The idea that magic was overthrown by the Advent of Christ is frequent in the fathers, and this overthrow was commonly connected, as here, with the visit and worship of the magi, as the symbol and assurance of its defeat. See e.g. Tertull. de Idol. 9, Orig. c. Cels. i. 60 (I. p. 374 sq) καθαιροῦνται αἱ τῶν δαιμόνων ενέργειαι μη δυνάμεναι άντιβλέψαι τῷ τῆς θεότητος φωτί, with other references given by Cotelier. The same too is said in Clem. Alex. Exc. Theod. 72 sq (p. 986) more especially of astrology; comp. Tertull. l. c. 'attamen cum magia punitur, cujus est species astrologia, utique et species in genere damnatur.' The large space which magic, witchcraft, astrology, and the like, occupied in the popular religion of the heathen, may be seen from the denunciations of the Christian fathers; e.g. Justin Apol. i. 14, Tertull. Apolog. 23, etc. See the account of Hadrian in Orac. Sibyll. viii. 56. The lapse of Julian into paganism was connected with magical rites; Eunapius Vit. Soph. p. 89 sq (comp. Greg. Naz. ακούσει τόνδε δέσμιον σέθεν (comp. ver. 318), Plat. Resp. ii. p. 364 C ἐπαγωγαίς τισὶ καὶ καταδέσμοις; comp. Justin Dial. 85 (p. 311 C) εξορκίζουσι καὶ θυμιάμασι καὶ καταδέσμοις χρώνται, Tertull. de Spect. 2 'vis homicidium ferro, veneno, magicis devinctionibus perfici?' Euseb. L.C. 13 § 4 καταδέσμοις τισίν ἀπειρημένης γοητείας.

I. παλαιά βασιλεία The ancient kingdom of the Evil One was replaced by the βασιλεία Θεού. The visit of the magi was regarded from the earliest times as the inauguration of a new kingdom, this being implied in Matt. ii. 2. Their gifts were the offerings of subjects to their sovereign. Compare Justin Dial. 78 (p. 304 D) οἱ γὰρ μάγοι, οἵτινες ἐσκυλευμένοι ήσαν πρός πάσας κακάς πράξεις τας ένεργουμένας ύπο τοῦ δαιμονίου έκείνου, έλθόντες καὶ προσκυνήσαντες τῷ Χριστώ φαίνονται ἀποστάντες της σκυλευσάσης αὐτοὺς δυνάμεως ἐκείνης, Iren. iii. 16. 4, Tertull. adv. Jud. 9, adv. Marc. iii. 13, etc.

Θεοῦ] i.e. 'when God thus appeared as a man to claim His own Kingdom.' The substitution of 'at the revelation of the Son' for Θεοῦ ἀνθρωπίνως φανερουμένου in the Curetonian text seems to be a capricious alteration made by the epitomator, who has abridged and transposed freely throughout this passage. This is shown by the reading of the Armenian, which follows the Greek.

2. εἰς καινότητα κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'so as to introduce a new order of things, which is everlasting life,' ζωη̂s being the genitive of apposition; comp. Winer § lix. p. 666. See Rom. vi. 4, where also καινότης ζωής means 'the new state which is life,' as opposed to the old state which was death. Comp. Magn. 9 είς καινότητα έλπίδος.

 $d\rho\chi\dot{\eta}\nu$ $\delta\dot{\epsilon}$ $\kappa.\tau.\lambda.$] i.e. 'the economy which had been perfected in the counsels of God long before began to take effect.' The appearance of the star was the beginning of the end.

3. τὰ πάντα κ.τ.λ.] These words may be compared with a passage in the Protevangelium, of striking power, but in its dramatic character singularly unlike the representations of the Canonical Gospels, where not the universal disturbance, but the universal hush, of nature is the consequence of this birth of the Victor of Death; § 18 καὶ ἀνέβλεψα εἰς τὸν άέρα καὶ εἶδον τὸν άέρα ἔκθαμβον καὶ ανέβλεψα είς τον πόλον τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ εἶδον αὐτὸν έστῶτα κ.τ.λ. So too Milton, 'The stars with deep amaze Stand fixt in stedfast gaze.'

4. θανάτου κατάλυσιν Comp. I Cor. χν. 26 έσχατος έχθρος καταργείται ό $\theta \dot{a} \nu a \tau o s$. The actual destruction of death is the last scene of all; but the appearance of the star was the signal for the commencement of the war destined so to end.

please the Lord to reveal it to me. Only let me hear that you all meet together in one in the faith of Jesus Christ, who is both Son of God and Son of Man, and that you are obedient to your bishop and presbyters, breaking one bread, which is the medicine of incorruptibility and the antidote against death.'

5. καταξιώση] A favourite Ignatian word; Magn. 1, Trall. 12, Rom. 2, Philad. 10, Smyrn. 11, Polyc. 1, 7, 8.

 $\vec{\epsilon} \nu \ \tau \hat{\eta} \ \pi \rho o \sigma \epsilon \nu \chi \hat{\eta} \ \hat{\nu} \mu \hat{\omega} \nu] \ i.e. 'through$ your prayers.' The same expression occurs in a similar context, Philad. 8, Smyrn. 11. Altogether the 'prayers' of his correspondents occupy a very prominent place in the letters of Ignatius. He either asks their prayers for himself (§ 1, 11, Magn. 14, Philad. 5, 8, Smyrn. 11) or for the Church at Antioch (Rom. 9, Trall. 13); or he gratefully acknowledges the effects of their prayers on behalf of the latter (Philad. 10, Smyrn. 4, Polyc. 7); or he gives them general injunctions respecting prayer (§ 5, 10, Magn. 7, Trall. 12, Smyrn. 6, Polyc. 1).

6. θέλημα] i.e. 'the Divine will.' It is used thus absolutely several times in Ignatius, either with the definite article (Polyc. 8 ώς τὸ θέλημα προστάσσει) or, as here, without it (Rom. 1 ἐἀνπερ θέλημα ἢ τοῦ ἀξιωθῆναί με κ.τ.λ., Smyrn. 1 νίὸν Θεοῦ κατὰ θέλημα καὶ δύναμιν, ib. 11 κατὰ θέλημα δὲ κατηξιώθην). Examples of both kinds appear also in S. Paul, Rom.

ii. 17 sq καυχᾶσαι ἐν Θεῷ καὶ γινώσκεις τὸ θέλημα, Ι Cor. xvi. 12 πάντως οὖκ ἦν θέλημα ἵνα νῦν ἔλθη; though in the former passage the fact is obscured by the proximity of $\Theta \in \hat{\omega}$, and in the latter $\theta \hat{\epsilon} \lambda \eta \mu a$ is almost universally misunderstood as applying to Apollos himself. So too Clem. Alex. Strom. vi. 18 (p. 826) θελήματι θέλημα καὶ τῷ ἁγίῳ πνεύματι τὸ ἅγιον πνεθμα θεωρείν εθίζοντες. On the other hand of the devil Heracleon said that he μὴ ἔχειν θέλημα, ἀλλ' ἐπιθυμίας, Orig. in Ioann. xx. § 20 (IV. p. 339). The translators and transcribers of Ignatius however, not understanding this absolute use, have in several instances supplied genitive cases: see the critical notes on Rom. I, Smyrn. I, II. Compare the absolute use of η χάρις, τὸ ὄνομα, etc.

 $\vec{\epsilon}\nu$ $\tau\hat{\phi}$ δευτέρ ϕ κ.τ.λ.] There is no reason to think that this design was ever fulfilled: see above, p. 18.

7. $\pi \rho o \sigma \delta \eta \lambda \dot{\omega} \sigma \omega \kappa.\tau.\lambda.$] 'I will go on to expound the economy (of the Incarnation) upon which I commenced.' See the note on § 18 kar' olkovoular.

8. εἰς τὸν καινὸν κ.τ.λ.] 'referring to the new Man, Jesus Christ,' the words being closely connected with οἰκονομίας. The καινὸς ἄνθρωπος of Ignatius is equivalent to the ἔσχατος 'Αδάμ, the δεύτερος ἄνθρωπος, of S. Paul (I Cor. xv. 45, 47). The Apostle himself seems to use ὁ καινὸς ἄνθρωπος in a different sense, Ephes. iv. 24 ἐνδύσασθαι τὸν καινὸν ἄνθρωπον, though

τῆ αὐτοῦ πίστει καὶ ἐν τῆ αὐτοῦ ἀγάπη, ἐν πάθει αὐτοῦ καὶ ἀναστάσει, μάλιστα ἐὰν ὁ Κύριός μοι ἀποκαλύψη: †ὅτι† οἱ κατ' ἄνδρα κοινῆ πάντες ἐν χάριτι ἐξ ὀνόματος συνέρχεσθε ἐν μιᾳ πίστει καὶ ἐνὶ Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ τῷ κατὰ σάρκα ἐκ γένους Δαυείδ, τῷ υἰῷ ἀνθρώπου καὶ υἰῷ 5

 $\dot{\epsilon}$ ν τη αὐτοῦ κ.τ.λ.] 'consisting in faith towards Him and love towards Him.' This again must be closely connected with οἰκονομίας; comp. I Tim. i. 4 οἰκονομίαν Θεοῦ τὴν ἐν πίστει, τὸ δὲ τέλος τῆς παραγγελίας ἐστὶν ἀγάπη. For the genitive case see the note on Rom. inscr. So again the following ἐν πάθει κ.τ.λ. must be similarly connected. This latter clause describes the objective element, as the former described the subjective element, which are the essential characteristics of the dispensation.

3. †őτι† κ.τ.λ.] 'for ye all meet together in common-every individual of you.' If the reading be correct, this must be the grammar and connexion of the clause. Hefele however follows Uhlhorn (p. 52) in connecting ὅτι with ἀποκαλύψη 'if the Lord reveal to me that etc.,' but this gives a sense altogether unworthy of the writer and entirely opposed to his mode of speaking elsewhere (e.g. §§ 3, 6, 9, 11, 12). But the reading is rendered suspicious by the fact that Theodoret has εἴ τι, while Gelasius treats συνέρ- $\chi \epsilon \sigma \theta \epsilon$ as an imperative. Moreover the dependent είς τὸ ὑπακούειν ὑμᾶς points to a preceding imperative or conditional statement. Zahn (I.v.A.p.569) for $\~\sigma\iota$ suggests $\~\varepsilon\iota$, or (as preferable) simply $\iota\iota$, which he reads in his text, connecting it with the preceding words. This latter conjecture has much to recommend it. For $\omicron\iota$ κατ' $\~\alpha v \~\rho ρ$ α, 'each individually,' see the note on \S 4, where it stands in the same relation to χορο΄s as it does to κοινῆ πάντες here; comp. Smyrn. 12 τοὺς κατ' ἄνδρα καὶ κοινῆ πάντας. In this passage it is further strengthened by εξ ενϵεμην; comp. Polyc. 4 (with the note), ε.

4. ἐνὶ Ἰησοῦ] or perhaps ἐν ἐνὶ Ἰησοῦ. The recurrence of the same letters εΝΕΝΙΙΗ (Μ. Κ.) would account for the omission. Comp. Magn. 7 εἶs ἐστὶν Ἰησοῦς Χριστός, ἐδ. συντρέχετε...ἐπὶ ε̃να Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν, Clem. Rom. 46 ἢ οὐχὶ...ἔχομεν...ἔνα Χριστόν; in which passages the application is the same as here. It is equivalent to S. Paul's appeal in 1 Cor. i. 13 μεμέρισται δ Χριστός; Here, as in § 12, Zahn suggests the impossible form ἐνί.

τῷ κατὰ σάρκα κ.τ.λ.] This is inserted as a protest against Docetic error, by which their unity was threatened. But this emphatic mention of the human nature requires a counterbalance. Hence he adds that Christ is not only 'Son of man,' but also 'Son of God': see above, the note on § 18 ἐκ σπέρματος Δανείδ.

Θεοῦ, εἰς τὸ ὑπακούειν ὑμᾶς τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ καὶ τῷ πρεσβυτερίῳ ἀπερισπάστῳ διανοίᾳ· ἔνα ἄρτον κλῶντες, ὅ ἐστιν φάρμακον ἀθανασίας, ἀντίδοτος τοῦ μὴ ἀποθανεῖν ἀλλὰ ζῆν ἐν Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ διὰ παντός.

7. ἀπερισπάστω] 'undistracted'; Wisd. xvi. 11, Ecclus. xli. 1. So ἀπερισπάστως, 1 Cor. vii. 35. The words are not uncommon in classical writers of the age of Polybius and later, more especially in Stoic circles; e.g. Epict. i. 29. 52, ii. 21. 22, etc., M. Antonin. iii. 6.

ένα ἄρτον κλώντες] The reference will be to the agape, but more especially to the eucharistic bread, in which the agape culminated, and which was the chief bond of Christian union; comp. Philad. 4 σπουδάσατε οὖν μιὰ εὐχαριστία χρῆσθαι μία γὰρ σὰρξ τοῦ Κυρίου κ.τ.λ., Smyrn. 8 τούς μερισμούς φεύγετε...έκείνη βεβαία εὐχαριστία ἡγείσθω, ἡ ὑπὸ τὸν επίσκοπον οὖσα...οὐκ εξόν εστιν χωρίς τοῦ ἐπισκόπου οὔτε βαπτίζειν οὖτε ἀγάπην ποιείν (see the note there). For κλάν ἄρτον comp. Acts ii. 46 (comp. ver. 42), xx. 7, 11, 1 Cor. x. 16, where it occurs as a synonyme for celebrating the eucharistic feast, apparently in all cases in conjunction with the agape.

 δ] The right reading rather than δ s. The δ may refer either to the whole preceding clause, 'this concord and unity in breaking bread,' or to δ ρτοs alone by attraction with ϕ δρμακον. The latter is the more probable; see Irenæus iv. 18. 5, v. 2. 3 (passages quoted by Jacobson), who argues that our fleshly bodies must inherit eternal life, because they partake of the eucharistic bread. We need not however suppose that Ignatius had this very material conception in view.

8. ἀντίδοτος] This word, when used as a substantive, is either ή ἀντίδοτος (sc. δύναμις, e.g. Strabo iii. 4. 14 ἀντίδότοις τισὶ δυνάμεσι; see E. A. Sophocles Lex. s. v.) οr τὸ ἀντίδοτον (sc. φάρμακον, e.g. Anthol. Ad. 80, III. p. 166, τοῦτο γάρ ἐστι κακῶν φάρμακον ἀντίδοτον); but never apparently ὁ ἀντίδοτος. The feminine is the more common, e.g. Clem. Hom. xi. 9. The dependent genitive commonly describes the thing counteracted and not, as here, the result of the counteraction.

XXI. 'I am devoted to you and your representatives at Smyrna, from which place I write. Remember me, and so will Christ remember you. Pray for the Church in Syria, whence I was carried in bonds to Rome, though all unworthy of the glorious destiny which awaits me. Farewell in God the Father and in Jesus Christ.'

10. 'Αντίψυχον] So too Smyrn. 10, Polyc. 2, 6. The interpolator has caught up the phrase, as characteristic of Ignatius, and introduces it freely, Tars. 8, Ant. 7, 12, Hero 9, Philipp. 14. 'Αντίψυχον is properly 'a life offered for a life,' 'a vicarious sacrifice'; as [Joseph.] Macc. 6 ἵλεως είς Θεοῦ τιμὴν εἰς Cμύρναν ὅθεν καὶ γράφω ὑμῖν εὐχαριστῶν τῷ Κυρίῳ, ἀγαπῶν Πολύκαρπον ὡς καὶ ὑμᾶς. μνημονεύετέ μου, ὡς καὶ ὑμῶν Ἰησοῦς Χριστός. προσεύχεσθε ὑπὲρ τῆς ἐκκλησίας τῆς ἐν Cυρία, ὅθεν δεδε-

I Kings xx. 39 καὶ ἔσται ή ψυχή σοῦ αντί της ψυχης αὐτοῦ, ib. ver. 42, 2 Kings x. 24, Clem. Rom. 49. Hence S. Athanasius uses it of our Lord in a sense nearly equivalent to avriλυτρον, e.g. de Incarn. Verb. 9 (I. p. 44); comp. I John iii. 16 ἐκεῖνος ὑπὲρ ήμων την ψυχην αὐτοῦ ἔθηκεν καὶ ήμεῖς βφείλομεν ύπερ των άδελφων τὰς ψυχὰς θείναι. The Syriac translator of Ignatius has employed the same phrase, 'I will be instead of thy soul,' which is found in the Peshito in the passages of the O. T. The expression means therefore properly 'I give my life for you,' 'I devote myself for you,' and is closely allied to περίψημα in meaning (see the note on § 8); but the direct idea of a vicarious death is more or less obliterated, and the idea of devotion to and affection for another stands out prominently. We cannot therefore press the allusion to his approaching martyrdom. See the similar Jewish use of כפרה (Buxtorf's Lex. s. v. p. 1078, to which Jacobson refers here). It is in a different sense that Anselm said of Osbern (Epist. i. 4, p. 313) 'anima ejus anima mea est,' and that Horace calls Mæcenas 'meæ partem animæ.' Even if there were any authority for this sense of ἀντίψυχον 'another self,' we should expect not ἀντίψυχον ὑμῶν έγώ, but ἀντίψυχόν μου ὑμεῖς.

ων i.e. ἐκείνων ούς, referring to Onesimus, Burrhus, Crocus, Euplus, Fronto, and others; see §§ I, 2. This is clearly the right reading, in place of which ôv would easily be substituted by careless transcribers: for (1) The earlier part of the epistle mentions several representatives of the Ephesian Church; (2) The grammar of ôv would be extremely harsh as well as ambiguous, since it might stand for either exelvou ov or exelvos ôv, and indeed the latter would be the more natural construction. (3) In the other letters written from Smyrna the Ephesian delegates are spoken of in the plural; Magn. 15, Trall. 13, Rom. 10.

They correspond to the Latin Salve and Vale respectively. Excursus on γεννητός καὶ ἀγέννητος § 7.

The Son is here declared to be γεννητὸς as man and ἀγέννητος as God, for this is clearly shown to be the meaning from the parallel clauses. Such language is not in accordance with later theological definitions, which carefully distinguished between γενητός and γεννητός, between ἀγένητος and ἀγέννητος; so that γενητός, ἀγέννητος, respectively denied and affirmed the eternal existence, being equivalent to κτιστός, ἄκτιστος, while γεννητός, ἀγέννητος, described certain ontological relations, whether in time or in eternity. In the later theological language therefore the Son was γεννητός even in His Godhead. See esp. Joann. Damasc. de Fid. Orth. i. 8 (I. p. 135 Lequien) χρη γὰρ εἰδέναι ὅτι τὸ ἀγένητον, διὰ τοῦ ἐνὸς ν γραφόμενον, τὸ ἄκτιστον ἢ τὸ μὴ γενόμενον σημαίνει, τὸ δὲ ἀγέννητον, διὰ τῶν δύο νν γραφόμενον, δηλοῖ τὸ μὴ γεννηθέν κ.τ.λ.; whence he draws the conclusion that μόνος ὁ πατὴρ ἀγέννητος, and μόνος ὁ νίὸς γεννητός.

There can be little doubt however that Ignatius wrote γεννητὸς καὶ αγέννητος, though his editors frequently alter it into γενητός και αγέvnros. For (1) The Greek Ms still retains the double v, though the claims of orthodoxy would be a temptation to scribes to substitute the single v. And to this reading also the Latin genitus et ingenitus points. On the other hand it cannot be concluded that translators who give factus et non factus had γενητός καὶ ἀγένητος; for this was after all what Ignatius meant by γεννητὸς κ.τ.λ., and they would naturally render his words so as to make his orthodoxy apparent. (2) When Theodoret writes γεννητὸς έξ ἀγεννήτου, it is clear that he, or the person before him who first substituted this reading, must have read γεννητος καὶ ἀγέννητος; for there would be no temptation to alter the perfectly orthodox γενητος καὶ ἀγένητος, nor (if altered) would it have taken this form. (3) When the interpolator substitutes ὁ μόνος ἀληθινὸς Θεὸς ὁ ἀγέννητος... τοῦ δὲ μονογενοῦς πατήρ καὶ γεννήτωρ, the natural inference is that he too had the forms in double ν , which he retained, at the same time altering the whole run of the sentence so as not to do violence to his own doctrinal views; see Bull Def. Fid. Nic. ii. 2 § 6 (Works v. p. 114 sq). (4) The quotation in Athanasius is more difficult. The MSS vary, and his editors write γενητὸς καὶ ἀγένητος. Zahn too, who has paid more attention to this point than any previous editor of Ignatius, in his former work (Ign. v. Ant. p. 564) supposed Athanasius to have read and written the words with a single v, though in his subsequent edition of Ignatius (p. 338) he declares himself unable to determine between the single and double v. I believe however that the argument of Athanasius decides in favour of the vv. Elsewhere he insists repeatedly on the distinction between κτίζειν and γενναν, justifying the use of the latter term as applied to the divinity of the Son, and defending the statement in the Nicene Creed γεννητον έκ της ουσίας του πατρος τον υίον όμοούσιον (De Synod. 54, I. p. 612). Although he is not responsible for the language of the Macrostich (De Synod. § 3, 1. p. 590), τον πατέρα μόνον αναρχον όντα καὶ αγέννητον γεγεννηκέναι ανεφίκτως καὶ πασιν ακαταλήπτως οίδαμεν' τον δε υίον γεγεννήσθαι προ αιώνων και μηκέτι όμοιως τω πατρί άγεννητον είναι καὶ αὐτόν, άλλ' άρχην έχειν τὸν γεννήσαντα πατέρα, and would have regarded it as inadequate without the ὁμοούσιον, yet this use of terms entirely harmonizes with his own. In the passage before us, ib. $$ 46, 47 (p. 607), he is defending the use of ὁμοούσιος at Nicæa, notwithstanding that it had been previously rejected by the Council which condemned Paul of Samosata, and he contends that both Councils were orthodox, since they used ὁμοούσιος in a different sense. As a parallel instance he takes the word aγέννητος, which, like ὁμοούσιος, is not a scriptural word, and like it also is used in two ways, signifying either (1) τὸ ὂν μέν, μήτε δὲ γεννηθὲν μήτε ὅλως ἔχον τὸν αἴτιον, or (2) τὸ ακτιστον. In the former sense the Son cannot be called αγέννητος; in the latter He may be so called. Both uses, he says, are found in the fathers. Of the latter he quotes the passage in Ignatius as an example; of the former he says, that some writers subsequent to Ignatius declare έν το αγέννητον ο πατήρ, καὶ εἶς ο έξ αὐτοῦ υίος γνήσιος, γέννημα άληθινόν κ.τ.λ. [He may have been thinking of Clem. Alex. Strom. vi. 7, which I shall quote below.] He maintains that both are orthodox, as having in view two different senses of the word ἀγέννητον; and the same, he argues, is the case with the Councils which seem to take opposite sides with regard to ὁμοούσιος. It is clear from this passage, as Zahn truly says, that Athanasius is dealing with one and the same word throughout; and, if so, it follows that this word must be αγέννητον, since ἀγένητον would be intolerable in some places. I may add by way of caution that in two other passages, de Decret. Syn. Nic. 28 (I. p. 184), Orat. c. Arian. i. 30 (I. p. 343), S. Athanasius gives the various senses of ἀγένητον (for this is plain from the context), and that these passages ought not to be treated as parallels to the present passage which is concerned with the senses of ἀγέννητον. Much confusion is thus created, e.g. in Newman's notes on the several passages in the Oxford translation of Athanasius (pp. 51 sq, 224 sq), where the three passages are treated as parallel, and no attempt is made to discriminate the readings in the several places, but 'ingenerate' is given as the rendering of ἀγένητον and ἀγέννητον alike. If then Athanasius also read γεννητὸς καὶ ἀγέννητος in Ignatius, there is absolutely no authority for γενητὸς καὶ ἀγέννητος. The earlier editors (Voss, Ussher, Cotelier, etc.) printed it as they found it in the Ms; but Smith substituted the forms with the single ν, and he has been followed more recently by Hefele, Dressel, and some others. In the Casanatensian copy of the Ms a marginal note is added, ἀναγνωστέον ἀγένητος τοῦτ' ἔστι μὴ ποιηθείς. Waterland (Works III. p. 240 sq, Oxf. 1823) tries ineffectually to show that ἀγέννητος was invented by the fathers at a later date to express their theological conception. He even 'doubts whether there was any such word as ἀγέννητος so early as the time of Ignatius.' In this he is certainly wrong.

The MSS of early Christian writers exhibit much confusion between γενητός and γεννητός, αγένητος and αγέννητος: see e.g. Justin Dial. 2 (p. 218) with Otto's note; Athenag. Suppl. 4 with Otto's note; Theophil. ad Autol. ii. 3, 4; Iren. iv. 38. 1, 3; Orig. c. Cels. vi. 66; Method. de Lib. Arbitr. p. 57 Jahn (see Jahn's note II. p. 122); Maximus in Euseb. Praep. Ev. vii. 22; Hippol. Haer. v. 16 (from Sibylline Oracles); Clem. Alex. Strom. v. 14, pp. 702, 718; and very frequently in later writers. Yet notwithstanding the confusion into which later transcribers have thus thrown the subject, it is still possible to ascertain the main facts respecting the usage of the two forms. The distinction between the two terms, as indicated by their origin, is that a yévntos denies the creation, and ayeventos the generation or parentage. Both are used at a very early date; e.g. ἀγένητος by Parmenides in Clem. Alex. Strom. v. 14 (p. 716) ώς αγένητον ἐον καὶ ανώλεθρόν ἐστιν, and by Agathon in Arist. Eth. Nic. vi. 2 (p. 1139) αγένητα ποιείν άσσ' αν η πεπραγμένα (comp. also Orac. Sibyll. prooem. 7, 17); and ἀγέννητος in Soph. Trach. 61 κάξ άγεννήτων άρα μῦθοι καλῶς πίπτουσιν (where it is equivalent to δυσγενών). Here the distinction of meaning is strictly preserved, and so probably it always is in Classical writers; for in Soph. Trach. 743 το γαρ φανθέν τίς αν δύναιτ' αγέννητον ποιείν we should after Porson and Hermann read δύναιτ' αν αγένητον ποιείν with Suidas. In Christian writers also there is no reason to suppose that the distinction was ever lost, though in certain connexions the words might be used convertibly. Whenever, as here in Ignatius, we have ἀγέννητος where we should expect αγένητος, we must ascribe the fact to the indistinctness or incorrectness of the writer's theological conceptions, not to any obliteration of the meaning of the terms themselves. To this early father for instance the eternal yévvnous of the Son was not a distinct theological idea, though substantially he held the same views as the Nicene fathers respecting the Person of Christ. The following passages from early Christian writers will serve at once to show how far the distinction was appreciated, and to what extent the Nicene conception prevailed in Antenicene Christianity; Justin Apol. ii. 6 (p. 44) ovopa δὲ τῷ πάντων πατρὶ θετόν, ἀγεννήτῳ ὄντι, οὐκ ἔστιν... ὁ δὲ νίὸς ἐκείνου ὁ μόνος λεγόμενος κυρίως υίός, ὁ λόγος πρὸ τῶν ποιημάτων καὶ συνών καὶ γεννώμενος κ.τ.λ., comp. ib. § 13 (p. 51); Athenag. Suppl. 10 ένα τὸν άγένητον καὶ ἀίδιον...ὑφ' οὖ γεγένηται τὸ πᾶν διὰ τοῦ αὐτοῦ λόγου...ἐρῶ δια βραχέων [τὸν νίὸν] πρώτον γέννημα είναι τῷ πατρί, οὐχ ώς γενόμενον κ.τ.λ. (comp. ib. 4); Theoph. ad Aut. ii. 3 εὶ γὰρ ἐγέννων καὶ έγεννωντο [θεοί], δήλον ότι έχρην καὶ έως τοῦ δεῦρο γίνεσθαι θεοὺς γεννητούς κ.τ.λ.; Tatian Orat. 5 ο λόγος εν άρχη γεννηθείς άντεγέννησε την καθ' ήμας ποίησιν (with the context); Rhodon in Euseb. Η. Ε. ν. 13 το δε πως έστι μία άρχή, μη γινώσκειν έλεγεν...μη επίστασθαι πῶς εἶς ἐστιν ἀγέννητος Θεός; Clem. Alex. Strom. vi. 7 (p. 769) έν μεν το αγέννητον ο παντοκράτωρ Θεός, εν δε και το προγεννηθεν δι οῦ τὰ πάντα ἐγένετο κ.τ.λ.; Orig. c. Cels. vi. 17 (p. 643) οἴτε γὰρ τὸν άγενητον καὶ πάσης γενητής φύσεως πρωτότοκον κατ αξίαν είδεναι τις δύναται, ώς ο γεννήσας αυτον πατήρ κ.τ.λ., ib. vi. 52 περί μεν γενέσεως κόσμου καὶ φθορᾶς, ἢ ώς ἀγένητος καὶ ἄφθαρτος, ἢ ώς γενητὸς μὲν ἄφθαρτος δέ κ.τ.λ.; Concil. Antioch. (A.D. 269) in Routh Rel. Sacr. III. p. 290 ότι δ Θεός αγέννητος, είς, αναρχος, κ.τ.λ..... τοῦτον δὲ τὸν υίον γεννητόν, μονογενή υίον κ.τ.λ.; Method. de Creat. 5 (p. 101 Jahn) γενητον το μή γενέσεως έχον άρχην φαίης αν; ου δητα· εί γαρ μη υποπίπτει γενέσεως άρχη, εξ ανάγκης αγένητον εστιν· εί δε γέγονεν, κ.τ.λ. In no early Christian writing however is the distinction more obvious than in the Clementine Homilies, x. 10 τοῦ μόνου ἀγενήτου, ὅτε τὰ λοιπὰ πάντα γενητά τυγχάνει ώς οὖν τοῦ ἀγενήτου ἴδιον τὸ θεὸς εἶναι, οὕτως πῶν ότιοῦν γενόμενον θεὸς τῷ ὄντι οὐκ ἔστιν, χνί. 16 τοῦ πατρὸς τὸ μὴ γεγεννήσθαί έστιν, υίου δε το γεγεννήσθαι γεννητον δε άγεννήτω ή καί αὐτογεννήτω οὐ συγκρίνεται κ.τ.λ. (where the distinction is employed to support the writer's heretical theology): see also viii. 16 εἴτε ἀγαθοὶ είτε κακοί οὐ γεννώμεθα άλλά γινόμεθα, and comp. xix. 3, 4, 9, 12. The following are instructive passages as regards the use of these words where the opinions of other heretical writers are given; Saturninus, Iren. i. 24. 1, Hippol. Haer. vii. 28; Simon Magus, Hippol. Haer. vi. 17, 18; the Valentinians, Hippol. Haer. vi. 29, 30, the Ptolemæus in particular, Ptol. Ep. ad Flor. 4 (in Stieren's Irenæus p. 935); Basilides, Hippol. Haer. vii. 22; Carpocrates, Hippol. Haer. vii. 32.

From the above passages it will appear that Antenicene writers were not indifferent to the distinction of meaning between the two words; and when once the orthodox Christology was formulated in the Nicene Creed in the words γεννηθέντα, οὐ ποιηθέντα, it became henceforth impossible to overlook the difference. The Son was thus declared to be γεννητός, but not γενητός. I am therefore unable to agree with Zahn (Marcellus pp. 40, 104, 223, Ign. von Ant. p. 565) that at the time of the Arian controversy the disputants were not alive to the difference of meaning. See for example Epiphanius, Haer. lxiv. 8 (p. 531) ώς γάρ τινες [i.e. the Arians] ήμας βούλονται σοφίζεσθαι καὶ λέγειν ίσον το γενητον είναι τω γεννητώ, ου παραδεκτέον δε επί Θεου λέγειν, άλλ' ή έπὶ τὰ κτίσματα μόνον ετερον γάρ έστι γενητὸν καὶ ετερόν ἐστι γεννητόν, κ.τ.λ.; where he is arguing against a passage of Origen which ran (at least as Epiphanius read it) τῷ πατρὶ τῶν ὅλων Θεῷ διὰ τοῦ σωτήρος ήμῶν καὶ ἀρχιερέως γενητοῦ Θεοῦ κ.τ.λ. But it had no special interest for them. While the orthodox party clung to the όμοούσιος as enshrining the doctrine for which they fought, they had no liking for the terms ἀγέννητος and γεννητός, as applied to the Father and the Son respectively, though unable to deny their propriety, because they were affected by the Arians and applied in their own way. To the orthodox mind the Arian formula οὖκ ην πρὶν γεννηθηναι, or some Semiarian formula hardly less dangerous, seemed always to be lurking under the expression Θεός γεννητός as applied to the Son. Hence the language of Epiphanius Haer. lxxiii. 19 (p. 866) ¿àv oi καινοί αίρετικοὶ προσδιαλεγόμενοι ἀγέννητον λέγουσι καὶ γεννητόν, ἐροῦμεν αὐτοῖς, Έπειδή κακουργήσαντες το της οὐσίας ὄνομα ἐν χρήσει τοῖς πατράσιν ύπάρχον ώς άγραφον ου δέχεσθε, ουδε ήμεις το άγεννητον άγραφον ον δεξόμεθα κ.τ.λ., i.e. 'As you refuse to accept our δμοούσιος because, though used by the fathers, it does not occur in the Scriptures, so will we decline on the same grounds to accept your ἀγέννητος.' Similarly Basil c. Eunom, i (1. p. 215 sq, p. 227 sq, p. 235), iv (p. 281), and especially ib. iv (p. 283 sq), in which last passage he argues at great length against the position of the heretics, εὶ ἀγέννητος, φασίν, ό πατήρ, γεννητὸς δὲ ὁ υίός, οὐ τῆς αὐτῆς οὐσίας. See also the arguments against the Anomeeans in [Athan.] Dial. de Trin. ii passim (Op. 11. p. 423 sq). This fully explains the reluctance of the orthodox party to handle terms which their adversaries used to endanger the όμοούσιος. But, when the stress of the Arian controversy was removed, it became convenient to express the Catholic doctrine by saying that the Son in His Divine nature was γεννητός but not γενητός. And this distinction is staunchly maintained in later orthodox writers, e.g. John of Damascus (quoted above p. 90).

TO THE MAGNESIANS.

AFTER leaving Ephesus, says Strabo, the first city is Magnesia (xiv. 1, p. 647 πρώτη δ' ἐστὶν ἐξ Ἐφέσου Μαγνησία). The sequence in the Ignatian Epistles is the same as the sequence in the geographer's itinerary.

Magnesia by the Mæander was said to have been originally a settlement of the Magnesians from Thessaly (Strabo xiv. 1, p. 636; Plin. N. H. v. 31). The site of the city was well chosen. The valley of the Cayster on the north is separated from that of the Mæander on the south by a mountain chain running for the most part nearly due east and west, but taking a more southerly direction in its western extremity and terminating in the promontory of Mycale opposite Samos. Indeed the lofty island of Samos itself is only a prolongation of this same mountain range which is broken by the intervening channel of the sea. There is a very marked depression in the chain towards its western extremity. The long range eastward of this depression, bounding the valley of the Mæander on the north during the greater part of its course, bore the name of Messogis; the shorter range to the west or seaward was called Mount Mycale. A few miles to the north of this depression in the valley of the Cayster stood the famous city of Ephesus; while to the south, immediately below the pass, on the ground overhanging the valley of the Mæander Magnesia was built. It thus commanded the pass through which ran the high road connecting the fertile and populous valley of the Mæander with the metropolis of Asia Minor.

Magnesia is occasionally designated the 'Asiatic' in earlier times to distinguish it from the Thessalian district of the same name; but in later writers, from Aristotle downwards, it is specified as 'Magnesia by' or 'on the Mæander', in contradistinction to another Asiatic city of the same name, which had risen meanwhile into importance, 'Magnesia under' or 'against Sipylus' (see the references given below p. 106). It was not however situated directly on the banks of the Mæander, as this name would suggest, but on a tributary, the Lethæus, at a distance of some four miles (6½ kilometres, Texier Asie Mineure III. p. 41) from the larger river; comp. Strabo xiv. 1, p. 647, Magnyaía πόλις Αἰολίς, λεγομένη δὲ ἐπὶ Μαιάνδρου πλησίον γὰρ αὐτοῦ ἴδρυται πολὺ δὲ πλησιαίτερον ὁ Ληθαῖος ἐμβάλλων εἰς τὸν Μαίανδρον. Hence Pausanias persistently speaks of Magnesia or the Magnesians 'on the Lethæus' (i. 35. 6, v. 21. 10, vi. 17. 3, x. 32. 6; comp. Nicander in Athen. xv. p. 683 Ληθαίου Μάγνητος ἐφ' ὕδασιν). But in coins, inscriptions, and all public documents, as well as in common parlance, it was designated by the nobler stream.

Earlier travellers (Smith, Chandler, Pococke, and others) had identified Magnesia ad Mæandrum with the modern town of Güzel-Hissar. Its true site was pointed out by W. R. Hamilton in 1803. Its modern representative is Inek-Bazar, or more properly Eyineh-Bazar (W. J. Hamilton's Researches in Asia Minor I. p. 535); whereas Güzel-Hissar, otherwise known as Aidin, is close to the site of the ancient Tralles, some eighteen miles from Magnesia. These latter identifications alone agree with the distances recorded in ancient books of travel, and they are rendered absolutely certain by inscriptions found on the respective sites (see Leake's Asia Minor p. 242 sq). The scenery and ruins of Magnesia are described in Arundell Seven Churches p. 58 sq; in Texier Asie Mineure III. p. 35 sq, p. 90 sq, and in some respects more fully in his smaller work of the same name in Didot's series L'Univers p. 346 sq; in Murray's Handbook for Turkey in Asia p. 305 sq; in Hamilton's Asia Minor I. p. 538 sq; and elsewhere. It stands on the right bank of the Lethæus and is built partly on the side of Mount Thorax, a spur or buttress of the main range, and partly in a plain girt with a background of hills (Strabo xiv. I, p. 647, κείται δ' εν πεδίφ προς όρει καλουμένω Θώρακι ή πόλις; comp. Diod. Sic. xiv. 36). The theatre, as usual, is situated on the hill-side; the principal ruin in the plain is the temple of Artemis Leucophryene1. The ravine of the Lethæus to author which seems to have been altogether overlooked, but which nevertheless contains the key to the solution of the difficulty.

The facts are these. (1) Xenophon (Hell. iii. 2. 14), speaking of the campaign of the east of the city, as it descends from its sources in Messogis to join the Mæander, is described as singularly beautiful.

¹ Though the question respecting the relation of Leucophrys and Magnesia has no direct bearing on my subject, I venture to discuss it briefly in a note, as this will give me an opportunity of calling attention to a passage in an ancient

Dercyllidas (B. C. 396) in Asia Minor, states that, a parley having been agreed upon between the generals of the contending armies, the Persians retired to Tralles and the Greeks 'to Leucophrys where was a temple of Artemis of peculiar sanctity (ἐς Λεύκοφρυν ἔνθα ἦν ᾿Αρτέμιδος ίερον μάλα άγιον) and a lake more than a stadium (in length), sandy and perennial, of warm water fit to drink'. In a later passage (ib. iv. 8. 17), where he is giving an account of the campaign of Thimbron (B.C. 391) in this same region, he speaks of his setting out from Ephesus and from 'the cities in the plain of the Mæander, Priene and Leucophrys and Achilleion.' [This last by the way cannot be the place bearing the same name in the Troad, as commentators seem to assume.] In neither passage does he mention Magnesia, though Magnesia had existed for centuries. (2) Strabo (xiv. 1, p. 647), speaking of the temple of the Mother of the Gods built by Themistocles, writes, 'Now however the temple does not exist (οὐκ ἔστι τὸ ἰερόν), because the city has been removed (μετωκίσθαι) to another place; but in the present city $(\vec{\epsilon} \nu \ \hat{o} \hat{\epsilon} \ \tau \hat{\eta} \ \nu \hat{v} \nu \ \pi \hat{o} \lambda \epsilon \iota)$ there is the temple of Artemis Leucophryene' etc.

Boeckh (C. I. G. II. p. 582) discerns the true solution. The city of Magnesia stood originally on another site, but was afterwards transferred to Leucophrys, so that the ancient temple of Artemis of Leucophrys was now within the city of Magnesia itself. This may perhaps be also the meaning of Texier (L'Univers pp. 349, 350), but I am not quite sure that I understand him. When then did this removal take place? Texier (p. 350) says, when it was rebuilt after its destruction by the Treres, a Cimmerian people (see Strabo l.c.). But this is quite impossible, as Boeckh had already pointed out (II. p. 700): for, though the age of this invasion of the Treres is doubtful, it certainly took place long before the time of Themistocles, and yet Magnesia was still on its ancient site in his time. Boeckh continues 'Addo eam (i.e. translationem) factam videri ante medium tertium saeculum Christianam praecedens epocham, nam vs. 84 nostri foederis Dianae Leucophryenae templum Magnesiae ad Maeandrum tribuitur'. [The words of the treaty (about B.C. 244) are ¿μ Μαγνησία τη πρός τῷ Μαιάνδρω ἐν τῷ τῆς ᾿Αρτέμιδος της Λευκοφρυήνης.] But indeed we are not dependent on conjecture, where direct evidence is forthcoming. He and others have overlooked a passage in Diodorus (xiv. 36) which gives the fact. Diodorus, speaking of an earlier campaign (B.C. 300) of the same Thimbron in these regions, says that, having taken Magnesia and made an unsuccessful attack on Tralles, he retired to Magnesia, ταύτης δ' οὔσης ἀτειχίστου, καὶ διὰ τοῦτο φοβούμενος μή ποτε χωρισθέντος αὐτοῦ κυριεύση της πόλεως ὁ Τισσαφέρνης, μετώκισεν αὐτὴν πρὸς τὸ πλησίον όρος ὁ καλοῦσι Θώρακα. Here then is the whole account of the matter. The position chosen by Thimbron exactly corresponds to the site of the later city as described by Strabo. In its original position it was defenceless and had been exposed to successive captures; but he removed it nearer to the hill-side, as the term λεύκοφρυς, 'White-brow' or 'White-cliff', itself suggests, so as at once to incorporate the ancient temple of Artemis and to make Mount Thorax serve as a natural fortress. A few years later (B.C. 391), during Thimbron's second campaign, Xenophon can still speak of Leucophrys, because the migration was still recent, perhaps was not yet complete; and the name of the old fortress had not yet been merged in the name of Magnesia.

Magnesia rose to very considerable importance at an early date. Its connexion with Themistocles, as his place of residence during his exile (Thuc. i. 138; Diod. Sic. xi. 57; Strabo xiv. 1, p. 647; Athen. i. p. 29; Plut. Vit. Them. 30, 31, 32; see Grote's History of Greece v. p. 385 sq), has given it a special renown. His descendants, one of whom bore his own name, enjoyed exceptional honours there even as late as the age of Ignatius (Plut. Vit. Them. 32). A more speaking testimony to its importance is the fact that the Persian satraps appear at one time to have chosen it as their place of abode (Herod. iii. 122, Diod. Sic. xiv. 36). Indeed, considering the advantages of its situation and the fertility of the country, the surprise is not that it was a considerable city but that it did not attain to even greater distinction. During the Roman period it appears to have declined somewhat in importance (Tac. Ann. iv. 55); but it continued to strike coins as late as the reign of Gallienus A.D. 260-268 (Mionnet Supplement VII. p. 256). Among the famous men, who were natives of Magnesia, Strabo especially mentions the orator Hegesias the founder of the florid Asiatic style of eloquence, and Simus the inventor of a licentious form of lyric poetry called Simodia after him, each in a different way the corruptor of his respective art (l.c. p. 648). Altogether its literary reputation did not redound much to its credit.

Themistocles is said to have erected at Magnesia a temple to the Mother of the Gods under the name Dindymene (of which his daughter or his wife became priestess), in consequence of an epiphany of this goddess which saved his life (Plut. Vit. Them. 30; Strabo xiv. 1, p. 647); but this temple no longer existed when Strabo wrote. The patron goddess of the city was Artemis Leucophrys or Leucophryne or Leucophryne, for the epithet is written in all these ways.

The name Λεύκοφρυς, I cannot doubt, refers primarily to the natural features of the ground (see Texier L' Univers p. 350), just as Tenedos was called λεύκοφρυς (Strabo xiii. 1, p. 604; Diod. Sic. v. 83; Plin. N.H. v. 39 (31); Pausan. x. 14. 3; Hegesianax in Athen. ix. p. 393). This account of the name seems far more probable than Boeckh's hypothesis (II. p. 582) that the worship of Artemis was imported hither from Tenedos. The goddess was properly called Λευκοφρυήνη or Λευκοφρύνη, but sometimes Λεύκοφρυς (Nicander in Athen. xv. p. 683, and frequently on coins, Mionnet III. p. 147 sq, Supplement VI. p. 236 sq). From being the name of the place it was transferred to the goddess, as we say S. Christopherle-Stocks, S. Peter-le-Cheap, S. John Lateran, etc. The story of the nymph Leucophryne who was buried at Magnesia (Zeno Myndius in Clem. Alex. Protr. 3, p. 39; comp. Arnob. vi. 6) is of course a legend founded on the name of the place.

Her name and effigy occur constantly on the coins (Mionnet III. p. 147 sq, Supplement vi. p. 236 sq); and her priestesses are mentioned in extant inscriptions (Boeckh C. I. G. 2914). She is commemorated also in Anacreon Fragm. 1 (Bergk) δέσποιν "Αρτεμι θηρών ή κου νῦν έπὶ Ληθαίου δίνησι θρασυκαρδίων ἀνδρῶν ἐσκατορᾶς πόλιν χαίρουσ' κ.τ.λ. The Ionic temple dedicated to her was one of the most famous in Asiatic Greece (Strabo xiv. 1, p. 647; Pausan. i. 26. 4; Tac. Ann. iii. 62; C. I. G. 3137. ii. 84, 11. p. 697; Vitruv. Archit. iii. 1, vii. præf.). Strabo (l. c.) commends it as exceeding in size all the temples in Asia but two, those of Ephesus and Didymi (Branchidæ); and, though inferior to the former in magnitude and in the costliness of its offerings, yet superior in the proportions and design of its cell. Very considerable ruins of this edifice still remain, which will be found described in Leake's Asia Minor p. 245, p. 349 sq, Texier Asie Mineure III. p. 40, p. 91 sq, L'Univers p. 350 sq. The site was excavated under the direction of Texier in 1836, when the sculptures of the friezes were removed to the Louvre1.

In the Epistles of S. Ignatius the Ephesians and Magnesians appear in close connexion (Magn. 15). This is accounted for by their near neighbourhood. The distance between Ephesus and Magnesia is given by Artemidorus (Strabo xiv. 2, p. 663) as 120 stadia (so too Diod. Sic. xiv. 36), by Pliny (N. H. v. 31) as 15 Roman miles. The distance between the modern railway stations of Ayasoulouk and Balachik, which are near to the sites of Ephesus and Magnesia respectively, is stated to be somewhat under 14 English miles. Owing to this proximity, the southern gate of Ephesus bore the name of the Magnesian Gate (Μαγνήτιδες πύλαι, Pausan. vii. 2. 9; Μαγνητική πύλη, Wood's Discoveries at Ephesus Inscr. vi. 1, pp. 32, 42). As an illustration of the saying οὐδὲν γειτονίας χαλεπώτερον (Arist. Rhet. ii. 21), we find the Ephesians and Magnesians at war in early ages (Strabo xiv. 1, p. 648; Hermippus in Diog. Laert. i. 117; Ælian V. H. xiv. 46, N. H. xi. 27; comp. Arist. Pol. ii. 3, p. 1289); and this state of things ended for the time in the Ephesians taking possession of the Magnesian territory (Strabo l. c., Athen. xii. p. 525). At a later date, under the Romans, we find the two cities making up their differences and striking coins to commemorate their friendly relations, with the legend ΜΑΓΝΗΤών και εφετίων ομονοία (Mionnet Supplement VI. p. 242). Among the not very numerous inscriptions recently discovered in the temple of Artemis at Ephesus, at least two record services rendered to the Ephesians by individual citizens of Magnesia (Wood's Discoveries etc. Inscr. ii. 3 'Απολλώνιος Κόνωνος Μάγνης, ib. 12 Θρασύμαχος Ποσειδωνίου Μάγνης).

Revue Archéologique Dec. 1887, giving an account of further very recent discoveries on the site of this temple.

¹ While the sheets for this second edition were passing through the press, a paper by De Villefosse appeared in the

This proximity of the two cities also answers another question. How and when was the Gospel first preached in Magnesia? When we read that during S. Paul's three years' residence in Ephesus (A. D. 54-57), 'all those who dwelt in Asia (the proconsular province) heard the word of God' (Acts xix. 10, comp. ver. 26), when we find the Apostle towards the close of his sojourn sending salutations to distant correspondents from 'the Churches of Asia' (I Cor. xvi. 19), when we learn that within two or three years of this date there were Christian congregations even in the comparatively distant towns of Hierapolis and Laodicea and Colossæ, we can hardly doubt that Magnesia, the nearest city of any importance, lying within four hours' walk of Ephesus, must have been among the earliest of these recipients of Christianity. If we were to hazard a conjecture regarding the agent in its conversion, we might mention Tychicus. The name Tychicus seems to have been especially common at Magnesia; see Boeckh C. I. G. 2918, Mionnet III. pp. 153, 154, 155, 157, Supplement VI. pp. 236, 245, 250, 255. The Apostle's companion bearing this name was a native of proconsular Asia (Acts xx. 2), and apparently of some place not far from Ephesus, if not of Ephesus itself (2 Tim. iv. 12). But, though less common than some of the New Testament names, it is not so rare that any great stress can be laid on the coincidence. The omission of any mention of Magnesia in the Apocalypse presents no difficulty on the supposition that this church had been founded during S. Paul's residence at Ephesus. The seven letters are addressed only to the principal churches in the respective districts. Ephesus was the centre of one district comprising Magnesia and Tralles and Miletus, just as Laodicea was the centre of another comprising Hierapolis and Colossæ; and ot the subordinate churches no mention is made in either case. Another link of connexion with S. Paul was the fact that the Pisidian Antioch, where he preached, was a colony of this Magnesia (Strabo xii. 8, p. 577).

At all events the Church of Magnesia seems to have been a flourishing community in the early years of the second century when Ignatius wrote. The Magnesians, like the Ephesians, had heard of his projected visit to Smyrna; and, like their neighbours, they had sent delegates to meet him there (§§ 1, 2, 6, 15). The Magnesian delegacy was an adequate representation of the Church. It comprised all orders of the ministry—the bishop Damas, the presbyters Bassus and Apollonius, the deacon Zotion (§ 2). It was in acknowledgement of the attention which the Magnesians had thus shown to him that he wrote this letter.

The main theme of the epistle is the exhortation to unity (§§ 1, 2--4, 6, 7, 13). The bond of unity is obedience to the bishop and to the other officers of the ministry. A warning is the more needed in their case, because some might be tempted to presume upon the youth of the bishop (§ 3).

The object of this exhortation appears in another part of the letter. Unity is the best safeguard against the intrusion of heresy (§§ 8—11). The heresy in question is described as a return to the old and unprofitable fables, the stale and sour leaven, of Judaism (§§ 8, 10). He expresses the substance of his warning to his correspondents in the exhortation not to 'sabbatize,' but to 'live after the Lord's day' (§ 6). It appears however from incidental expressions, that he is not contemplating Judaism of a pure Pharisaic type, for he affirms with emphasis the reality of Christ's birth, passion, and resurrection (§§ 9, 11), obviously having these same teachers in view. The heresy therefore is a Docetic Judaism. He acquits the Magnesians of any complicity therein as yet; but, while this false doctrine is abroad, he feels that the warning is not superfluous, and he counts on their obedience (§§ 11, 12, 14).

The Church of the Magnesians was not famous in later ecclesiastical history. The martyrdom of a certain Quadratus is said to have occurred at Magnesia, presumably the city on the Mæander; and one form of the legend identifies him with the celebrated Apologist bearing this name, who presented his defence of Christianity to the emperor Hadrian. it seems more probable that the martyr in question suffered during the persecution of Decius, if indeed the story of the martyrdom is not altogether a fiction (see Act. SS. Boll. 26 Maii, and comp. Tillemont Mémoires II. p. 236 sq, 589 sq). In the succeeding centuries we hear of the Magnesian Church from time to time, as represented by her bishops at the great Councils of the Church (see below p. 105), though they do not occupy any very distinguished position on these occasions. But, if we might assume that the Macarius, whose work has been recently recovered and published, owed his surname to this city, the Church of Magnesia is not left without a representative in the field of theological literature.

'IGNATIUS to the CHURCH OF MAGNESIA ON THE MÆANDER, abundant greeting in the Father and in Jesus Christ.'

'Knowing your harmony and love I was glad to hold converse with you. I glorify all those churches which preserve unity. Abiding in love, you will resist the assaults of the Evil One (§ 1). I rejoiced therefore to see you in the person of your bishop Damas, of your presbyters Bassus and Apollonius, of your deacon Zotion (§ 2). Let no man presume on the youth of your bishop. The presbyters recognise his wisdom and obey him. He who deceives his bishop plays false with God (§ 3). You must be Christians in reality and not in name only. It is not honest to be always talking of the bishop and yet always acting without him (§ 4). All things come to an end. The choice is between death and life. There are two coinages—the stamp of the world and the stamp of God. We must die into Christ's passion, if we would live in His life (§ 5). Having met you through your representatives, I intreat you to act in concert with the bishop, the priests, and the deacons. Allow nothing to make divisions among you (§ 6). As Christ did nothing without the Father, so do ye nothing without your bishop and presbyters. Let there be one prayer, one mind, one hope. You have one temple even God, and one altar even Christ (§ 7). Go not astray after the antiquated tales of Judaism. The prophets themselves bore witness to Christ. They were inspired so as to convince the unbelievers that there is one God who manifested Himself through His incarnate Word (§ 8). If those who were brought up in the old ordinances forsook them for Christ, how can we live apart from Him, of whom the prophets themselves were disciples (§ 9)? Let us not despise His goodness, nor forsake our Christianity. Put ye away the sour leaven, and be ye salted in Him. Jesus Christ and Judaism cannot exist side by side (§ 10). I say this to warn you against the snares of false doctrine. Be ye fully convinced that Christ was born and died and rose again in reality; for this is your only hope (§ 11).'

'I am not worthy to be compared to you. I say this, knowing that my praise will not puff you up, but rather put you to shame (§ 12). Stand steadfast, one and all, in the teaching of the Lord and His Apostles. Be obedient to your bishop and to one another (§ 13). A brief exhortation will suffice.'

'Pray for me and for the Syrian Church. We need your united prayer (§ 14). The Ephesians send greeting from Smyrna whence I write. So does Polycarp. The other Churches salute you. Farewell, and be united in Christ (§ 15).'

mpòc toyc én marnhcíal The proper Greek adjective corresponding to Μαγνησία is neither Μαγνησιεύς (the form in the MS of the genuine epistles) nor Μαγνήσιος (the form in the MSS of the interpolated epistles), but Máyvns, the feminine being sometimes Μαγνητις (e.g. C. I. G. 3381), sometimes Μάγνησσα (e.g. Theocr. xxii. 79), sometimes Máyνησις (Parthenius in Steph. Byz.). This is equally the case whether the Magnesia intended be the town on the Mæander or its namesake under Sipylus. Steph. Byz. s. v. Μαγνησία says explicitly, ὁ πολίτης Μάγνης ὁμωνύμως τῷ οἰκιστῆ. This statement is confirmed by all ancient remains. The legend of the coins is universally MAΓΝΗΤΕC Or MAΓΝΗΤωΝ: see Mionnet III. p. 142 sq, Suppl. VI. p. 231 sq, for the city on the Mæander, and Mionnet IV. p. 68 sq, Suppl. VII. p. 371 sq, for the city under Sipylus. The same is also the form which occurs in the inscriptions (C. I. G. 2913, 2919 b Appx., 2933; Wood's Discoveries at Ephesus Inscr. ii. 3, 12). It alone is found in classical writers of all ages (e.g. Herod. iii. 90, Arist. Pol. iv. 3, Strabo xii. 8, p. 577, xiv. 1, p. 647 sq, Plut. Vit. Themist. 32, Appian. Mithr. 21, Paus. i. 20. 5, i. 26. 4, Julian Orat. vii. p. 210). Even in ecclesiastical writings down to a very late date I have not met with any other form: see e.g. Labb. Conc. III. p. 85 (ed. Colet.) τῶν Μαγνήτων πόλεως ἐπίσκοπος ἢν ὀνόματι Μακάpios (at the Oak Synod A.D. 403; a document in Photius Bibl. 59); ib. VII. p. 1072 Πατρίκιος έλέω Θεοῦ ἐπίσκοπος της Μαγνήτων περί Μαίανδρον πόλεως της 'Ασιανών έπαρχίας (comp. ib. p. 1100; at the third Council of Constantinople, A.D. 680). In the Parall. Rupef. pp. 779, 785 (ed. Lequien), ascribed to John of Damascus, πρὸς Mayungious occurs, but the present text of this collection of extracts elsewhere has also the impossible form προς Φιλαδελφίους. The form Mayνησίους also appears to underlie the Syriac translation of Timoth. Alex.

έν ῷ ἀσπάζομαι τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τὴν οὖσαν ἐν Μαγνησία τῆ πρὸς Μαιάνδρω, καὶ εὔχομαι ἐν Θεῷ πατρὶ καὶ ἐν Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ πλεῖστα χαίρειν.

(Cureton C. I. p. 211). Nothing can be inferred from Magnisoyē in a quotation from the Syriac Version (Cureton C. I. p. 197; comp. p. 200), or from Magnisiatzis in the heading of the epistle in the Armenian Version, as these forms follow the analogy of the respective languages. The Greek translator of Jerome Vir. Ill. 16 has Mayvnotavovs, but this simply is a transliteration of Jerome's Latin. The proper form in Latin is Magnes, following the Greek (e.g. Cic. Brut. 91, Tac. Ann. ii. 47), but Jerome writes ad Magnesianos. In an ancient inscription (Boeckh C. I. G. 3137), about B.C. 244, recording a treaty between the Smyrnæans and Magnesians (probably of the city ad Sipylum; see Boeckh p. 698), while the former are always Σμυρναίοι, the latter are οἱ ἐν (written έμ) Μαγνησία or οἱ ἐκ (written also έγ or έκγ) Μαγνησίας or οἱ ἀπὸ Mayvnoias. Similarly in two different passages of Severus of Antioch preserved in Syriac versions (Cureton C. I. p. 213, Land Anecd. Syr. I. p. 32) this epistle is entitled 'to those who (are) in Magnesia.' The fact is the more remarkable, because in quoting the other epistles he writes 'to the Ephesians,' 'to the Trallians,' etc. If therefore Ignatius or any early transcriber had prefixed a title to this epistle, he would probably have written either TIPOC TOYC EN MAINH-CIAI OF προς τογς ΜΑΓΝΗΤΑς. At all events the facts alleged seem to show that the extant title μαγνησιεῦσιν ἰγνάτιος must date long after the time when the epistle (on any showing) was written.

'IGNATIUS, called also Theophorus, to the CHURCH OF MAGNESIA ON THE MÆANDER, blessed through the grace of God in Christ, hearty greeting in Christ.'

 $τ\hat{η}$ εὐλογημένη] sc. ἐκκλησία, but the form of the sentence is changed as it proceeds, and the missing substantive becomes the accusative to

2. $\tau \hat{y} \pi \rho \dot{o} s M \alpha \iota \dot{a} \nu \delta \rho \phi$] This city was called frequently έπὶ [τῷ] Μαιάνδρφ, Arist. Pol. iv. 3, Strabo xiv. I (p. 647), Diod. Sic. x. 57, Athen. iv. p. 173, or έπὶ τοῦ Μαιάνδρου, Athen. ib., but more commonly, as here, πρὸς [τῷ] Μαιάνδρω, C. I. G. 2910, 3137, Strabo xii. 8 (p. 577), Athen. xii. p. 525, Labb. Conc. VII. p. 1100, Ptol. v. 2. Sometimes it is simply Μαιάνδρου, Labb. Conc. III. p. 1088, IV. p. 506, 858, 894, VIII. p. 687; and occasionally $\pi \epsilon \rho i$ Maiav $\delta \rho o \nu$, ib. VII. p. 1072, comp. [Æschines] Epist. x. 8. Herodotus describes it (iii. 122) as ή ύπερ Μαιάνδρου ποταμοῦ οἰκημένη. These designations were adopted to distinguish it from Magnesia in Thessaly, of which it was reported to be a colony, but more especially from its near neighbour under mount Sipylus, which was called Μαγνησία πρὸς Σιπύλω οτ ύπὸ Σιπύλω or ὑπὸ Σιπύλου, and its inhabitants Μάγνητες ἀπὸ Σιπύλου (see C. I. G. 2933, 3381, Mionnet IV. p. 68 sq, Suppl. VII. p. 371 sq). The two places are mentioned in the same context, Liv. xxxvii. 44, 45, Ptol. v. 2. WesΙ. Γνούς ύμων τὸ πολυεύτακτον τῆς κατὰ Θεὸν seling Itin. p. 658 states that it is called ή Πρωτομαιανδρούπολις; and the writer in Smith's Dict. of Geogr. s. v. says 'Later documents seem to imply that at one time it bore the name Mæandropolis.' Both quote as their authority 'Concil. Constantin. iii. p. 666.' This however is merely a corrupt text, πρωτομαιανδρουπόλεως for πρὸς τῷ Μαιάνδρῳ πόλεως: see Labb. Conc. VII. p. 1100. The Mæandropolis mentioned by Pliny N. H. v. 29 is a different place, though identified with Magnesia by Spanheim de Usu et Praest. Numm. ix. p. 889. When Phlegon, as quoted by Steph. Byz. s. v., says Μαιανδρούπολις, Μαγνησίας πόλις, he means that it belonged to the territory of Magnesia. Our Magnesia is also designated ή 'Aσιανή (Thuc. i. 138), and its inhabitants are Μάγνητες οἱ ἐν τῆ ᾿Ασίη (Herod. iii. 90), to distinguish them from their Thessalian namesakes. It is placed in Caria, Diosc. Mat. Med. v. 130 (131).

I. 'Knowing your orderly demeanour and godly love, I am desirous of conversing with you by letter. For decked out in these honorable chains, I sing the praises of the churches, and pray for their unity in the spirit and in the flesh, a unity consisting of faith and love, and centering in Jesus and in the Father. If we abide in Christ, we shall escape all the assaults of the Evil One and shall find God.'

4. Troùs] 'Having learnt,' i.e. probably from the reports of Damas their bishop and the other Magnesian delegates mentioned in § 2.

τὸ πολυεύτακτον] 'the abundant good order'; comp. Ephes. 6 ὑπερεπαινεῖ ὑμῶν τὴν ἐν Θεῷ εὐταξίαν. I have not found an example of this word elsewhere; but comp. πολυεύσπλαγχνος Clem. Alex. Quis div. salv. 39 (p. 957). The Lexicons also give πολυευζωΐα, πολυευπρεπής, as late words. Here, as in other churches, it is the harmony and submission to authority in the Magnesians which secures the admiration of Ignatius: comp. Ephes. 6, 20, Trall. I, 2, Polyc. 6, etc.

κατὰ Θεὸν] 'in the way of God', a somewhat favourite Ignatian expression: comp. § 13, Trall. I, Philad. 4, Polyc. 5. So too κατὰ Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν, § 8 below, Philad. 3. This is a favourite preposition with Ignatius in various connexions, e.g. in this epistle, § 3 κατὰ μηδεμίαν ὑπόκρισιν, § 4 κατὰ ἐντολήν, § 6 κατὰ σάρκα, § 8 κατὰ ἰουδαϊσμόν, § 9 κατὰ κυριακήν, § 10 κατὰ χριστιανισμόν, §§ 8, 15, κατὰ πάντα.

5. προειλάμην] 'I determined', as e.g. Prov. xxi. 25 (LXX) οὐ γὰρ προαιροῦνται αἱ χείρες αὐτοῦ ποιεῖν τι, 2 Cor. ix. 7. The ordinary sense of the substantive προαίρεσις, 'choice, purpose,' points to the meaning of the verb. The word does not imply any preference of the Magnesians over others, as some commentators explain it.

έν πίστει κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'as a Christian speaking to Christians, to converse with you (by letter).' For προσλαλεῖν of 'addressing' by letter comp. Ephes. 3.

6. ὀνόματος] What is this name? Is it, as some say, the name of Christ θεοπρεπεστάτου, έν οἷς περιφέρω δεσμοῖς ἄδω τὰς ἐκκλησίας, ἐν αἷς ἕνωσιν εὔχομαι σαρκὸς καὶ πνεύματος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ διὰ παντὸς ἡμῶν ζῆν, πίστεώς τε

2 ἔνωσιν] ἔνοσιν G. 3 ἡμῶν] GA; ἡμᾶs (?) L*; al. g. $\tau \epsilon$] GL*; om. A [Antioch 1]; al. g. 4 ἡs] GLA; al. g; εἰs [Antioch] (but this must be a misprint or misreading). $\tau \epsilon \nu \xi \delta \mu \epsilon \theta a$] G (certainly);

(see the note on Ephes. 1)? The epithet $\theta \epsilon o \pi \rho \epsilon \pi \epsilon \sigma \tau \acute{a} \tau o \upsilon$ would be hardly adequate here for this name of names, though in another connexion it is used of Christ Himself, Orig. c. Cels. iii. 14. Or is it the designation of θεοφόρος, as Pearson (V. I. p. 523) and others after him (e.g. Hilgenfeld A. V. p. 193) maintain? This designation however seems to have been self-assumed, and not conferred upon him by others as a title of honour, as Pearson supposes. Or again is it the appellation of 'martyr', as Lipsius (Aecht. p. 90) and others believe? But elsewhere Ignatius shrinks from any such boastful title (see the note on Trall. 4). I think that the reference here is best supplied by the words which follow, έν οις περιφέρω δεσμοίς. Ignatius rejoices, as S. Paul had rejoiced before him, that he is δέσμιος Χριστοῦ (Ephes. iii. I, iv. I, Philem. This is his proudest distinc-1, 9). tion.

θεοπρεπεστάτου] The word occurs again, Smyrn. inscr., 11, 12, Polyc. 7. It is found as early as Diodorus (xi. 89, xvii. 75) and appears in Philo (Vit. Moys. ii. 3, p. 137). Compare the similar Ignatian words, θεοδρόμος, θεομακαριστός, θεοπρεσβύτης.

έν οἶs κ.τ.λ.] i.e. ἐν τοῖs δεσμοῖs â περιφέρω. He compares himself to some gay reveller; his fetters are his holiday decoration; the burden of his song is the praise of the churches. For this conception of his bonds see Ephes. II τὰ δεσμὰ περιφέρω, τοὺς πνευματικοὺς μαργαρίτας (with the note). See also the notes on Philem. 9, 13, for the corresponding idea in S. Paul. For the metaphor in ἄδειν see Ephes. 4, Rom. 2, with the notes on both places. The words $\hat{\epsilon}\nu$ of $\kappa.\tau.\lambda$, are best taken with the following clause. Zahn has not improved the passage by his reading. In his earlier work (I. v. A. p. 569) he boldly alters the words thus, καταξιωθείς γάρ δι' ονομάτων θεοπρεπεστάτων, έν οίς περιφέρω δεσμοίς, ίδειν τας έκκλησίας κ.τ.λ.; but in his subsequent text he contents himself with substituting ιδών for ἄδω, retaining the other words and explaining ovoqua θεοπρεπέστατον to refer to Damas the bishop. The lively and characteristic image of Ignatius is thus obliterated.

2. $\tilde{\epsilon}\nu\omega\sigma\iota\nu$ $\kappa.\tau.\lambda.$ 'I pray that there may be unity in their flesh and in their spirit, which are Jesus Christ's.' It seems best so to explain the words, rather than 'union with the flesh and spirit of Jesus Christ," or 'union in flesh and spirit with Fesus Christ', because (among other reasons) we thus avoid an unmeaning and awkward repetition which otherwise arises out of the subsequent words, τὸ δὲ κυριώτερον, Ἰησοῦ κ.τ.λ. For ένωσιν σαρκός καὶ πνεύματος comp. Rom. inscr. κατά σάρκα καὶ πνεθμα ήνωμένοις, and below § 13 ίνα ένωσις ή σαρκική τε καὶ πνευματική. These passages seem to show that σαρκὸς καὶ πνεύματος must refer to the potimur L; refugimus ad (confidimus in) A (the word does not imply a different reading ϕ ευξόμεθα); al. g. The earlier edd. after Voss print ϕ ευξόμεθα. Voss gave ϕ ευξόμεθα as the reading of the Ms, and offered τ ευξόμεθα as a conjecture.

churches and not to Christ. The flesh and the spirit denote the secular and the spiritual sides of life respectively.

On the frequency of these words ένοῦσθαι, etc. in Ignatius see the note on Ephes. 4. The difference between ένωσις and ένότης is the difference between 'union' and 'unity', between the process and the result. For the genitive Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, as I have taken it, comp. Polyc. 5 είς τιμην της σαρκὸς τοῦ Κυρίου (the correct reading), and see I Cor. vi. 20 (as read in the received text) δοξάσατε δή τὸν Θεὸν ἐν τῷ σώματι ὑμῶν καὶ ἐν τῷ πνεύματι ύμῶν, ἄτινά ἐστιν τοῦ $\Theta \epsilon o \hat{v}$. According to this construction evwous here takes three sets of genitives; (1) Of the subject, which possesses the unity, σαρκὸς καὶ πνεύματος: (2) Of the matter in which the unity shows itself, πίστεώς τε καὶ àγάπης: (3) Of the personal centre in which the unity resides, Ἰησοῦ καὶ πατρός. For this threefold reference comp. § 13 κατευοδωθήτε σαρκί καὶ πνεύματι, πίστει καὶ ἀγάπη, ἐν υίῷ καὶ πατρὶ κ.τ.λ.

3. τοῦ διὰ παντὸς κ.τ.λ.] 'our never-failing life'; comp. Ephes. 3 'Ιησοῦς Χριστός, τὸ ἀδιάκριτον ἡμῶν ζῆν, Smyrn. 4 'Ιησοῦς Χριστός, τὸ ἀληθινὸν ἡμῶν ζῆν. For this substantival use of ζῆν see the note on Ephes. 11. There is no sufficient reason for adopting the ill-supported reading ἡμᾶς here with Zahn (see I. v. A. p. 570), who compares Ephes. 20. The sense is rather injured than improved by the change, which introduces an irrelevant clause.

 ήs οὐδὲν κ.τ.λ.] 'than which (i.e. love) nothing is preferable': comp. Smyrn. 6 πίστις καὶ ἀγάπη, ὧν οὐδὲν προκέκριται. For προκέκριται, comp. Xen. Cyr. ii. 3. 8, Mem. iii. 5. 19.

το δὲ κυριώτερον κ.τ.λ.] 'and what is more important than all, a union in Jesus and the Father—in Jesus, in whom if we endure etc.'; where $\dot{\epsilon}\nu$ $\dot{\phi}$ must be connected with 'Ιησού, as the sense requires. For $\tilde{\epsilon}\nu\omega\sigma\iota s$ 'Ιησού καὶ πατρός comp. John xvii. 21.

5. την πασαν επήρειαν 'all outrage.' For the emphatic position of the article preceding $\pi \hat{a}s$, and thus denoting the whole range of possibility, comp. I Tim. i. 16 την απασαν μακροθυμίαν, Hermas Mand. v. I την $\pi \hat{a} \sigma a \nu \in \lambda \pi i \delta a$, and see the note on Gal. v. 14. For ἐπήρειαν comp. Apost. Const. viii. 8 της παγίδος τοῦ διαβόλου καὶ τῆς ἐπηρείας τῶν δαιμόνων (comp. ib. § 11), Lucian Pro Laps. int. Salut. Ι χαλεπον μέν, ἄνθρωπον όντα, δαίμονός τινος έπήρειαν διαφυγείν, Philostr. Epist. 18 (p. 349) avola μάλλον ή έπηρεία δαιμόνων γενόμενα; and so it is used elsewhere of the wanton injury inflicted by superhuman agencies.

6. τοῦ ἄρχοντος κ.τ.λ.] See the note on Ephes. 17.

Θεοῦ τευξόμεθα] The phrase τυγχάνειν Θεοῦ occurs again Ephes. 10, 'Επεὶ οὖν ἢξιώθην ἰδεῖν ὑμᾶς διὰ Δαμᾶ τοῦ ἀξιοθέου ὑμῶν ἐπισκόπου καὶ πρεσβυτέρων ἀξίων Βάσ-

1 Δαμᾶ] δάμα G.

2 άξιων] GLA; θεοῦ άξιων g.

Smyrn. 9. More common still is ἐπιτυγχάνειν Θεοῦ, below § 14, Ephes. 12, Trall. 12, 13, Rom. 1, 2, 4, 9, Smyrn. 11, Polyc. 2, 7; and so also Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐπιτυγχάνειν, Rom. 5.

II. 'I have seen you in the person of your bishop Damas, of your presbyters Bassus and Apollonius, and of your deacon Zotion, whose submission to the bishop and the presbyters is a great joy to me.'

I. $E\pi\epsilon$ οὖν ἠξιώθην κ.τ.λ. The sentence, thus commenced, is never completed. The protasis is lengthened out in recording the obedience of the deacon Zotion (οδ έγω) ... Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ), and this record suggests a general injunction to the Magnesian Church at large (καὶ ὑμῖν δὲ πρέπει κ.τ.λ.), which again branches off into subsidiary topics occupying three chapters (§§ 3, 4, 5), the apodosis being meanwhile forgotten. At the beginning of the 6th chapter the original protasis is again resumed, έπεὶ οὖν ἐν τοῖς προγεγραμμένοις προσώποις κ.τ.λ., and the long-suspended apodosis follows, παραινώ έν όμονοία Θεοῦ κ.τ.λ., doubtless modified in form and substance by the ideas which have intervened. For a similar sentence similarly broken see Ephes. Ι έπεὶ οὖν τὴν πολυπλήθειαν κ.τ.λ.

ἢξιώθην] A favourite word of Ignatius when speaking of himself; Ephes. 9, 21, Rom. 1. The compound καταξιοῦσθαι also occurs several times in this connexion; see § I above, Trall. 12, Smyrn. 11, Polyc. I (comp. Ephes. 20, Rom. 2). See also the note on Ephes. 2 ἐάνπερ ἄξιος δ.

διὰ] 'in the person of.' For διὰ comp. Ephes. 2 δι' ὧν πάντας ὑμᾶς...εἶδον, Mart. Ign. Ant. 3, 4; and for the idea see the note on Ephes. I ἀπείληφα.

Δαμᾶ] This name occurs several times in the inscriptions, e.g. Boeckh C.I.G. 2880 Μάρκου Οὐλπίου [Φλα] βιανοῦ Δαμα at Didymi; 2869 προφήτης Κλαύδιος Δαμᾶς also at Didymi; 3507 Μαρκού Οὐλπίου Δαμά παραδόξου καὶ Κανιδίας Βάσσης θυγατέρα at Thyatira; 3902 l τῷ ἀνδρὶ Δαμậ at Eumenia; 3983 Οὐάναξος Δαμᾶς τέκνω ἀώ[ρω] $\Delta a\mu \hat{a}[\delta]\iota$ at Philomelium. See also nos. 284, 2562, 3860 and Wood's Ephesus iv. 3 (p. 6), Bull. de Corr. Hell. VII. p. 311. So too on Milesian coins in the time of Nero, emi. Ti. Δama, Mionnet III. p. 168, Suppl. VI. p. 272. In the inscriptions the name is commonly declined Δαμᾶς Δαμᾶ. In one instance however (no. 3983, already given) it is declined Dauas Δαμάδος, if Keil and Franz are right (see Boeckh Vol. III. p. 1107); and in Latin inscriptions (C.I.L. v. 1636, XIV. 1349) we have a dative DAMATI.] On the other hand we find Δάμας Δάμαντος (like Θαύμας Θαύμαντος) in Suidas s.v. 'Αλκμάν. The two forms however seem to represent different names, as Zahn rightly supposes. $\Delta a \mu \hat{a} s$ (gen. $\Delta a \mu \hat{a}$) is probably a contracted name, like 'Επαφράς, Ζηνάς, For these contracted names in as see the note on Col. iv. 15. Assuming this to be the account of the word, I have accentuated it $\Delta a \mu \hat{a}$, as it appears in the editions of interpolated epistles, rather than $\Delta \dot{a} \mu a$, as it is written frequently, even by the same editors (e. g. Cureton, Dressel), in the genuine Ignatius.

3 'Απολλωνίου] ἀπολωνίου G (not ἀπολονίου, as given in Dressel). 4 Ζωτίωνος Gg; sotionem A; zononem L* (an obvious miswriting for zotionem).

On this hypothesis, it is worth mentioning that among the names occurring on coins, inscriptions, etc., relating to Magnesia are Δημήτριος (Mionnet III. p. 143), Δημόνεικος (ib. III. p. 156, Suppl. VI. p. 252), Δημόστρατος (ib. III. p. 157; comp. p. 148), and Δημόχαρις (Boeckh C. I. G. 2911, of the date A. U. C. 850); that the name of the same person is written λα-MEOY and AHMEOY on different coins of Magnesia (Mionnet Suppl. VI. p. 252); and that our Damas is called $\Delta \eta \mu \hat{a} s$ in the spurious epistle Antioch. 13. The name Damas occurs also in Latin inscriptions; e.g. C. I. L. VI. 14991, 16722, X. 2263, 6164, XIV. 2061. It is probably therefore the same with the common slave-name Dama (Hor. Sat. i. 6. 38, ii. 5. 18, 101, ii. 7. 54, Pers. Sat. v. 76, 79, C. I. L. II. 5042, V. 4087, etc), just as we have in Latin the forms Apella, Herma, Heracla, etc. Basil Epist. 252 (III. p. 388) mentions one Δάμας (Δaμas?) as a famous martyr of a later date. Euseb. H. E. iii. 36, speaking of the Epistle to the Magnesians, refers to this passage, ἐπισκόπου Δαμά μνήμην πεποίηται. Damas is mentioned twice in the spurious epistles, Antioch. 15, Hero 8.

2. ἀξιοθέου Applied again to a bishop in Smyrn. 12. On the word generally see the note on Trall. inscr.

άξίων] Comp. Ephes. 4 πρεσβυτέριον τοῦ Θεοῦ ἄξιον.

Βάσσου κ.τ.λ.] Apparently not an uncommon name in these parts of Asia Minor; see e.g. Boeckh C. I. G. 3112, 3148, 3151, 3493, Wood's Discoveries at Ephesus Inscr. vi. 1, 17 (pp. 34, 66). At least two Smyrnæans bearing the name appear in history; see Pape-Benseler Wörterb. d. Griech. Eigennamen s. v. At Magnesia itself this name appears on the coins as borne by two persons at different epochs, each at the time recorder (γραμματεύς), i. e. chief magistrate of the city (comp. Acts xix. 35 for the parallel case of Ephesus); επι. ΓΡ. Φλ . Βας ΟΥ . ΜΑΓΝΗΤωΝ under Caracalla (Mionnet III. p. 151), єпі, гр. Вассоу, магинтым under Maximinus (ib. Suppl. VI. p. 248). In a Samian inscription, C. I. G. 2248, the names Bassus and Apollonius occur together, as here. The latter is a frequent name in most places. One Apollonius a Magnesian appears in an Ephesian inscription, Wood's Discoveries Inscr. ii. 3 (p. 6) έπειδη 'Απολλώνιος Κόνωνος Μάγνης κ.τ.λ.; and two others, also Magnesians, are named in a Trallian inscription, Boeckh C. I. G. 2919 b (p. 1123) 'Απολλώνιος 'Απολλωνίου Μάγνης.

3. συνδούλου] Applied by Ignatius solely to deacons; see the note on Ephes. 2.

4. Ζωτίωνος The name is not uncommon in inscriptions, where it is most frequently written Σωτίων, as in one authority here. In the same way in the inscriptions the same person is called Σώτιχος and Ζώτιχος, Boeckh C. I. G. 202, 205. There is some reason also for thinking that the Σωταs of Euseb. H. E. v. 19 is the same with the Σωτικός of the preceding chapter. On the confusion οναίμην] i. e. 'enjoy his company'; see the note on Ephes. 2.

I. χ άριτι Θεοῦ κ.τ.λ.] The bishop is here regarded as the dispenser of blessings; the presbyters as the representatives and guardians of order. For νόμφ comp. Trall. 13 ὑποτασσόμενοι τῷ ἐπισκόπῷ ὡς τῷ ἐντολῷ (with the note). The expression here does not mean that the presbyterate is itself an ordinance, an institution, of Christ, but that the presbyters order with the authority of Christ. For νόμφ Χριστοῦ see the note on Rom. inscr. χριστόνομος; for πρεσβυτερίφ, the note on Ephes. 2.

III. 'I exhort you all in like manner to respect the youth of your bishop. Follow the example of your presbyters, who regard not his age but his wisdom. Your duty towards God, the universal Bishop, requires you so to act. Whosoever fails in his obedience, deceives not the visible overseer, but the Invisible. His all-seeing eye nothing escapes.'

3. $\kappa a \hat{\iota} \hat{\iota} \mu \hat{\iota} \nu \delta \hat{\epsilon}$ 'you the laity of the Church, not less than the deacons.'

συγχρῶσθαι] 'to presume upon,' literally 'to treat familiarly.' The word occurs in the N. T. once only, Joh. iv. 9 οὐ γὰρ συγχρῶνται Ἰουδαῖοι Σαμαρείταις. The word signifies either (1) 'to use together with another,' as perhaps in Polyb. vi. 3. 10 συμψεύδονται καὶ συγχρῶνται πάντες οἱ μόναρχοι τῷ τῆς βασιλείας ὀνόματι; or (2) 'to use constantly or fully or familiarly,' e.g. Epict. i. 2. 7 ταῖς τῶν ἐκτὸς ἀξίαις συγχρώμεθα, Orig. Ερ. ad Afric. 15 (I. p. 28) συγχρωμένους προφήτας προφητών λόγοις σχεδὸν αὐταῖς λέξεσι. In this latter signification it has a tendency to a bad sense, like καταχρῆσθαι, though not to the same extent. For the form -χρᾶσθαι, instead of -χρῆσθαι, see the notes on [Clem. Rom.] ii. 6 (pp. 195, 452), and comp. Herm. Sim. i. χρᾶσαι, though χρήση occurs in the context. For the sense see I Tim. iv. 12 μηδείς σου τῆς νεότητος καταφρονείτω.

4. κατὰ δύναμιν κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'having regard to the power conferred upon him by God the Father.'

ἀπονέμειν] 'to pay', as his due; for this is the force of the preposition. So ἀπονέμειν τιμὴν, I Pet. iii.
 Clem. Rom. I, Mart. Polyc. 10.

6. οὐ προσειληφότας] 'not taking advantage of'; comp. Demosth. Olynth. ii. p. 20 Β την έκάστων ἄνοιαν ἀεὶ τῶν άγνοούντων αυτον έξαπατών και προσλαμβάνων ούτως ηθέήθη, Dion. Cass. lx. 2 καὶ αὐτοῦ καὶ τοῦτο προσλαμβάvovtes (i.e. 'availing themselves of this weak point in his character') οὐκ ἐλάχιστα κατειργάζοντο (passages quoted in Steph. Thes. s. v., ed. Hase and Dindorf). The expression οὐ προσειληφότας has been commonly explained 'not regarding,' i.e. 'overlooking'; but the parallels quoted suggest the correct interpretation, as Uhlhorn (p. 329) and Zahn (I. v. A. p. 303) have pointed out. For other untenable explanations of οὐ προσειληφότας see the next note.

νεωτερικὴν τάξιν] 'his youthful status or condition,' a slightly awkward but intelligible expression. The uses of τάξις elsewhere quite justify this interpretation; see esp. Aristot. Magn. Mor. i. 34 (p. 1194) ὅταν ἤδη λάβη τὴν τοῦ ἀνδρὸς τάξιν, 'when he has now arrived at man's estate,' which is an exact parallel: comp. also H.A. ix. 7 (p. 612) τη περί τον πηλον αχυρώσει την αὐτην ἔχει τάξιν 'is of the same nature as,' An. Gen. iii. 11 (p. 761) βούλεται κατά την τοῦ πυρὸς εἶναι τάξιν, Magn. Mor. i. 2 (p. 1183) οσα είς δυνάμεως τάξιν ήκει 'pertain to the category of power,' Plato Phileb. 49 C την των γελοίων είληχε τάξιν τε καὶ φύσιν, Dion. Hal. de Adm. Vi Dem. 40 δεσμοῦ δέ τινος η κόλλης τάξιν...παρεξομένας 'to take the place of,' 'to serve the purpose of,' Diod. Sic. i. 25 εἰς τὴν προϋπάρξασαν καθίστασθαι τάξιν, 'restored to their former condition (of health and soundness of limb).' Ignatius therefore says that, though apparently from his years Damas belongs to the category of youth, yet his godly wisdom takes him out of this category. This is substantially the interpretation adopted by the Ignatian interpolator, who paraphrases the words οὐ πρὸς την φαινομένην άφορῶντας νεότητα, and of the Armenian translator, who renders them 'non spectant ad apparentem aetatem pueritiae ejus'; and it alone harmonizes with the preceding context, μή συγχρασθαι τη ήλικία του έπισκόπου. It must be noticed however that Ignatius says, not την φαινομένην νεότητα, for his νεότης was a fact, but την φαινομένην νεωτερικήν τάξιν, for he was young without being youthful, and the νεωτερική τάξις was therefore only a semblance. On the other hand Saumaise (Appar. ad Libr. de Prim. Pap. p. 57 sq, Lugd. Bat. 1645) gave a wholly different turn to the passage. He supposed that νεωτερική τάξις meant 'the newly created order or institution of the episcopate,' and he rendered the sentence 'sicut cognovi presbyteros, non ut accipientes eam, quae nova videtur, institutionem, sed tanguam prudentes in Deo, cedentes ipsi.' In reply to Saumaise, Petau (Theol. Dogm. v. 8. 5, IV. p. 162, ed. Antv. 1700), while maintaining the antiquity of the episcopate against him, was nevertheless led astray by his misinterpretation of οὐ προσειληφότας, 'not recognising' and so 'repudiating,' and himself explained νεωτερική τάξις 'novitia et recens ordinatio et institutio?' He supposed that this new order of things which the presbyters repudiated was the substitution of appointment by superior standing for free election, or in other words, of seniority for merit. This however is a pure hypothesis, not resting on any historical basis. Both these interpretations of the sentence are refuted by Pearson (V. I. p. 5 sq), and have not been reproduced latterly. But, while rejecting the general interpretation of the passage as given by Saumaise, several recent writers have adopted his rendering of νεωτερική τάξις, 'the newly-created office or order'; e.g. Rothe Anfänge, p. 436 sq, Uhlhorn p. 329 sq, Lipsius Clem. Rom. p. 27. Yet it is open to the most serious objections. (1) It dislocates the connexion of thought. Obviously the words καθώς...καὶ τοὺς άγίους πρεσβυτέρους κ.τ.λ. imply that the example of the presbyters corresponds to the previous injunction, whereas this interpretation makes it refer to something quite different. (2) The words will not bear the meaning thus put upon them. Even though τάξις might stand for the 'institution' or 'order' of the episcopate, the epithet νεωτερική cannot have the sense assigned to it. It denotes either 'juvenile' or 'revolutionary,' but never, so far as I am aware, 'recent'; nor indeed does the form -ικός admit this meaning; see Pearson V. I. p. 7 sq, Zahn I. v. A. p. 304. (3) It leaves φαινομένην unexplained, for there could be no question of appearances here, seeing that the age of the episcopal office must have been a matter of fact. Zahn (p. 304 sq) gives an explanation of νεωτερική τάξις, which stands midway between that which I have adopted and that which Saumaise proposed, and interprets it 'the ordination of a young man.' He thus brings the expression into a nearer connexion with the preceding injunction, and gives a possible interpretation to νεωτερική.

But his rendering strains the sense of both νεωτερική and τάξις; and the combined result is an awkwardness of expression far greater than in the traditional interpretation which I have adopted. Zahn was anticipated in his explanation by Bingham Ant. ii. 10. 1, 'He calls his ordination νεωτερικήν τάξιν, a youthful ordination.' An alternative rendering suggested by Cotelier 'recentem illius ordinationem' is open to still greater objections. This account would not be complete without a reference to the interpretation by Bos Exerc. Phil. in 2 Tim. ii. 22 (p. 45), 'non adsumentes ea quae manifesto juvenis (episcopi) sunt munia.'

I. φρονίμφ] I Cor. iv. 10 φρόνιμοι ἐν Χριστῷ. The reading which I have adopted from the Armenian Version and which is supported by the interpolator's paraphrase seems to be required by the context.  θ ελήσαντος ὑμᾶς] 'τυho desired you': comp. Rom. θ ἐκεῖνον θ έλω, whereas here the object is a person. For this sense of θ έλειν see ib. θ θ ελήσατε ἵνα καὶ ὑμεῖς θ εληθῆτε, with the note.

4. κατὰ μηδεμίαν κ.τ.λ.] The thought is the same as in Ephes. vi. 6, Col. iii. 22.

5. $oi\chi \ \sigma \tau i$] 'I will not say'; an ellipsis for oi $\lambda \acute{e}\gamma \omega \ \sigma \tau i$: see Kühner 525 (II. p. 800 sq), Winer § lxiv. p. 746. It is difficult to see why Zahn (I. v. A. 429 and ad loc.) should prefer $oi\chi i$ which is much less expressive. He speaks of $\acute{e}\pi \acute{e}i$ $oi\chi \chi \ \sigma \tau i$ as not Greek; but the presence of $\acute{e}\pi \acute{e}i$ cannot in any way affect the correctness of the phrase $oi\chi \chi \ \sigma \tau i$.

6. παραλογίζεται] 'attempts to cheat,' literally 'imposes upon with false reasoning'; see the note on Col. ii. 4. So [Clem. Rom.] ii. 17 παραλογισαμένους τὰς ἐντολὰς Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. In Apost. Const. viii. 11 God is inτὸν τὰ κρύφια κ.τ.λ.] Probably suggested by Ps. xliii (xliv). 22 αὐτὸς γὰρ γινώσκει τὰ κρύφια τῆς καρδίας: comp. Ephes. 15, Philad. 7. The exact form κρύφιος does not occur elsewhere in Ignatius, or in the N. T.

Similar is the expression ἔσται αὐτῷ πρὸς τὸν θεόν, ' he will have to reckon with the god,' C. I. G. 3890, 3902 f, 3902 n, 3902 o, 3962 b, 3980; comp. 3902 a, 3963.

- ἐπίσκοπον μὲν κ.τ.λ.] ' have the name of bishop always on their lips.' But καλοῦσιν is an awkward expression, and we ought perhaps to adopt Zahn's conjecture λαλοῦσιν (I. v. A. p. 302). Scribes would be tempted thoughtlessly to assimilate it to the preceding καλείσθαι, though a false connexion is suggested thereby. For this use of λαλείν in Ignatius, see the note on Ephes. 6. Comp. Bishop of London's Charge 1866 (p. 12) 'Is it too much to hope that some at least of those, who...profess an almost inordinate respect for the Bishop's office in the abstract, will listen to that practical exercise of its functions which warns them of the danger of the course on which they have entered?'
- 3. εὐσυνείδητοι] The adjective occurs again Philad. 6; comp. Ep. Vienn. et Lugd. in Euseb. H. E. v. I, Apost. Const. ii. 17, 49, Clem. Al. Strom. vii. 7, 12, 13 (pp. 858, 879, 882), M. Antonin. vi. 30. So εὐσυνειδήτως, Isidor. in Clem. Al. Strom. iii. I (p.

- 4. βεβαίως] 'strictly, validly.' It is explained by Smyrn. 8 ἐκείνη βεβαία εὐχαριστία ἡγείσθω, ἡ ὑπὸ τὸν ἐπίσκοπον οὖσα κ.τ.λ. The presence or the approval of the bishop was necessary for the validity of these gatherings. The persons here denounced held unauthorised meetings for sectarian purposes.

συναθροίζεσθαι] Great importance is attached in these epistles to frequent meeting together; comp. § 7 below, Ephes. 13, 20, Polyc. 4, and see the note on Ephes. 13. Such meetings were a symbol and a guarantee of harmony. The εὐχαριστία was the special bond of unity in these gatherings: see Ephes. 5, 20, Philad. 4, Smyrn. 6, 8.

Perhaps δι' δν is the right reading. Even g introduces a reference to martyrdom by inserting words in the latter part of the sentence, τ ὸ ὑπὲρ ἀληθείαs παθεῖν. In Philad. 7 there is a similar v. l. δι' ὄν (for ἐν ῷ), where however it can hardly be correct.

This explanatory sentence again is a protasis without an apodosis. On these anacolutha in the letters of Ignatius, see the note on $E\rho hes$. I.

τὰ πράγματα] 'the business of life' πρόκειται] The common reading ἐπίκειται would mean 'are at hand,' 'are at the door': comp. Rom. 6 ό τοκετός μοι ἐπίκειται. This reading however, as Zahn has seen, is the mechanical substitution of a scribe from below, where the word is used in a different sense. The life and death here mentioned are the spiritual, the eternal, life and death.

-7. τὸν ἴδιον τόπον] So Acts i. 25, Hermas Sim. ix. 4, 5, 12, and similarly τὸν ὀφειλόμενον τόπον, Clem. Rom. 5, Polyc. Phil. 9: see also the note on Clem. Rom. 1. c.

8. νομίσματα] 'coinages.' The image was perhaps suggested by our Lord's words in Matt. xxii. 19 ἐπιδείξατέ μοι τὸ νόμισμα τοῦ κήνσου κ.τ.λ. A similar contrast between the good coinage (δρθώς κοπείσι καὶ κεκωδωνισμένοις) and the bad (χθές τε καὶ πρώην κοπείσι τῷ κακίστω κόμματι) appears in a noble passage in Aristophanes, Ran. 717 sq: comp. έν τοις προγεγραμμένοις κ.τ.λ.] ' in the persons (or rather representatives) already mentioned' in § 2: see the note on Ephes. I Ἐπεὶ οὖν τὴν πολυπλήθειαν ύμῶν...ἀπείληφα ἐν 'Ονησίμφ. The word πρόσωπον here signifies more than a 'person'; it is a 'personage,' 'representative'; comp. e.g. Polyb. v. 107. 3 εζήτουν ήγεμόνα καὶ πρόσωπον ώς ίκανοὶ όντες βοηθείν αὐτοίς, χχνίι. 6. 4 προθέμενοι το τοῦ βασιλέως Εὐμένους πρόσωπον (with other passages given in Schweighæuser's Lexicon). So in Clem. Rom. 1, 47, it is applied to the 'ring-leaders' (see the note on the former passage). Again it was used in law-courts of the 'parties' to a suit; Lobeck Phryn. p. 380, and comp. Apost. Const. ii. 47, 49, 51. In all these uses it retains something of its primary sense, and has not yet degenerated into the colourless meaning 'person.' See also Meyer on 2 Cor. i. 11.

4. ἢγάπησα] 'welcomed, embraced.' The word here refers to external tokens of affection, according to its original meaning; see the note on Polyc. 2 τὰ δεσμά μου \hat{a} ἢγάπησας. Though the versions favour the reading $\partial \gamma \dot{\alpha} \pi \eta$, no great stress can be laid on the fact, since there was every temptation to recur to the frequent Ignatian combination $\pi i \sigma \tau \epsilon \iota$ $\kappa \alpha i \dot{\alpha} \gamma \dot{\alpha} \pi \eta$.

5. ἐν ὁμονοία Θεοῦ] 'in godly concord'; comp. § 15, Philad. inscr., where the same expression occurs. So too ἐνότης Θεοῦ; see the note on Philad. 8.

6. προκαθημένου | So προκαθέζεσθαι is used of the bishop, Clem. Hom. Ep. Clem. 12, 16, iii. 64, 66, 70, 72. Comp. Apost. Const. ii. 26 ὁ γὰρ ἐπίσκοπος προκαθεζέσθω ύμων ώς Θεου άξία τετιμημένος, a passage obviously moulded after Ignatius (see the following notes). The same word προκαθημένων may well be understood with the following τῶν πρεσβυτέρων, as it is used of the presbyters just below; but with τῶν διακόνων it is necessary to supply some other word, such as συμπαρόντων, according to the sense. The clause $\pi \epsilon \pi \iota \sigma \tau \epsilon \upsilon \mu \dot{\epsilon} \upsilon \omega \upsilon \kappa \cdot \tau \cdot \lambda$. is added by way of explanation, 'seeing that they have been entrusted etc.'

εἰς τύπον] So it seems best on the whole to read with Zahn (I. v. A. p. 570 sq). See the parallel passage Trall. 3, where the right reading is καὶ τὸν ἐπίσκοπον ὅντα τύπον τοῦ πατρός, τοὺς δὲ πρεσβυτέρους ὡς συνέδριον Θεοῦ καὶ ὡς σύνδεσμον ἀποστό-λων: comp. Apost. Const. ii. 26 ή δέ διάκονος είς τύπον άγίου πνεύματος τετιμήσθω ύμιν...οί δὲ πρεσβύτεροι εἰς τύπον ήμων των αποστόλων νενομίσθωσαν...αί τε χήραι καὶ ὀρφανοὶ ύμῶν εἰς τύπον τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου λελογίσθωσαν. As the whole context in the Constitutions abounds in reminiscences of this passage of Ignatius (see the notes on προκαθημένου above, and on ἄνευ τοῦ πατρὸς κ.τ.λ. § 7), it is another very strong confirmation of the reading adopted (though the word τόπον also occurs in the context, § 28, as quoted in the next note). Zahn quotes Barnab. 19 ύποταγήση κυρίοις ώς τύπω Θεοῦ. See also Clem. Hom. iii. 62, where the μοναρχία of the episcopate is represented as the counterpart to the μοναρχία of God, and the people are bidden to honour the bishop ώς εἰκόνα Θεοῦ. In Apost. Const. l. c. the bishop is called ὑμῶν ἐπίγειος θεὸς μετά Θεόν, with more to the same effect: comp. ib. ii. 30. He is the highest earthly representative of the spiritual power:

7. $\sigma v \nu \epsilon \delta \rho lov \tau \hat{\omega} \nu d\pi \sigma \sigma \tau \delta \lambda \omega \nu$] This comparison exactly corresponds with the parallel passage already quoted, Trall. 3, where the presbyters are compared to 'the council of God and company (see the note on $\sigma \dot{v} v - \delta \epsilon \sigma \mu \sigma \nu$) of the Apostles.' Ignatius is

See also the note on Philad. 8 συνέδριον τοῦ ἐπισκόπου, where again the reference is doubtless to the presbytery. Comp. Apost. Const. ii. 28 τοις δὲ πρεσβυτέροις... διπλη και αὐτοις ἀφοριζέσθω ή μοιρα είς χάριν των του Κυρίου ἀποστόλων, ών καὶ τὸν τόπον φυλάσσουσιν...ἔστι γαρ συνέδριον καὶ βουλή της έκκλησίας. The presbytery are again compared to the Apostles, Trall. 2, Smyrn. 8. The text of the Syriac (followed by the Armenian) seems to have been altered deliberately, in order to produce what appeared to be a more suitable comparison.

2. διακονίαν 'I. X.] i.e. 'a service under Jesus Christ,' as their Κύριος: comp. Trall. 2 τοὺς διακόνους ὄντας μυστηρίων 'Ιησοῦ Χριστοῦ, Smyrn. 10

ώς διακόνους [Χριστοῦ] Θεοῦ, Polyc. Phil. 5 ώς Θεοῦ καὶ Χριστοῦ διάκονοι; comp. 2 Cor. xi. 23, Col. i. 7, I Tim. iv. 6. This seems the most probable interpretation. Otherwise it might be explained 'a ministry in which Jesus Christ Himself served,' for He became διάκονος πάντων (Polyc. Phil. 5); comp. Matt. xx. 28, Mark x. 45. For the comparison of the deacon to Jesus Christ, which is involved in this latter interpretation, see the note on Trall. 3.

Zahn quotes Iren. i. Io. 3 ἐπ' ἐσχάτων τῶν καιρῶν ἡ παρουσία τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ, τουτέστιν ἐν τῷ τέλει ἐφάνη ἡ ἀρχή.

όμοήθειαν Θεοῦ] 'moral conformity with God'; comp. Polyc. I τοῖς κατ' ἄνδρα κατὰ ὁμοήθειαν Θεοῦ λάλει (with the note). This parallel passage shows the meaning of the expression here. It is not 'godly conformity among yourselves,' as Zahn takes it, and as the preceding ἐν ὁμονοία Θεοῦ might suggest. See also μιμηταὶ Θεοῦ, Ephes. 1, Trall. 1.

4. ἀλλήλουs] The reading ἀλλήλουs must be wrong, as ἐντρέπεσθαι takes a genitive or an accusative (in Ignatius only the latter), but never a dative. Though αἰσχύνεσθαι sometimes has a dative, it is with a different meaning, 'to be ashamed at,' or 'on account of'; a sense which would be out of place here. There is a similar error in the Greek MS, Trall. 7 Φυλάττεσθε οὖν τοῖς τοιούτοις.

κατὰ σάρκα] i.e. 'so as to love and hate his neighbour by turns, from merely human passion.' It is opposed to διὰ παντὸς ἀγαπᾶτε.

8. εἰς τύπον κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'both as an example and as a lesson of incorruptibility.' In Rom. vi. 17 we have εἰς τύπον διδαχῆς. The idea of ἀφθαρσία in Ignatius (Ephes. 17, Philad. 9; comp. Polyc. 2) is not merely immortality, but moral incorruption as carrying with it immortal life; see the note on Ephes. 17.

VII. 'As the Lord Jesus did nothing without the Father, so must ye do nothing without your bishop and presbyters. Let no man study any private ends; but let there be one common prayer, one common mind, one common hope. Jesus Christ is one; be ye therefore one. Gather yourselves together as to one Temple, even God; as to one Altar, even Jesus Christ, who came forth from One and is in One, and returned to One, even the Father.'

9. ἄνευ τοῦ πατρὸς κ.τ.λ. See John viii. 28 ἀπ' ἐμαυτοῦ ποιῶ οὐδέν, αλλα καθώς εδίδαξεν με ο πατήρ, ταῦτα λαλῶ (see § 8 κατὰ πάντα εὐηρέστησεν which is a reminiscence of the context of this same passage); comp. x. 37 εὶ οὐ ποιῶ τὰ ἔργα τοῦ πατρός μου κ.τ.λ. See also Apost. Const. ii. 26 ώς ὁ Χριστός, ποιῶν ἀφ' ξαυτοῦ οὐδέν, τὰ άρεστα ποιεί τῷ πατρὶ πάντοτε, ii. 30 ώς γαρ Χριστός άνευ τοῦ πατρός οὐδεν ποιεί, ούτως οὐδε ὁ διάκονος ἄνευ τοῦ ἐπισκόπου (passages referred to by Jacobson), where there is a reminiscence at once of these passages in Ignatius and of the sayings in S. John's Gospel on which they are οὕτως μηδὲ ὑμεῖς κ.τ.λ.] Apost.

 Const. ii. 27 οὕτως καὶ ὑμεῖς ἄνευ τοῦ ἐπισκόπου μηδὲν ποιεῖτε. The precept occurs again Trall. 2, 7, Philad. 7, Smyrn. 8.

2. μηδὲ πειράσητε κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'do not struggle to persuade yourselves that anything is right and proper which you do by and for yourselves.' For the word εἴλογον itself, compare Snyrn. 9; and for the sense, Ephes. II χωρὶς τούτου μηδὲν ὑμῦν πρεπέτω.

3. ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ] sc. συνερχομένοις γινέσθω. The sentence is studiously terse, the words being thrown down singly, and the reader left to supply the connecting links. Zahn (I. v. A. p. 345 sq, and ad loc.) would connect ἀλλὶ ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ with the preceding words; but this does not appear to me so forcible. A similar alternative as to the connexion of ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ with the preceding or following words presents itself in Acts ii. 47, iii. I.

5. τῆ χαρᾶ κ.τ.λ.] See Ephes.

os 1 have ventured to substitute this reading, though there is no direct evidence in its favour, for two reasons.

(1) It stands mid-way between the two extant readings, o and els, and explains both. For the confusion of ő and ős in the text of the Ignatian Epistles, see below § 10, Trall. 8, 11. (2) This attraction accords with the idiom of these epistles elsewhere; see below § 10 μεταβάλεσθε είς νέαν ζύμην, ός έστιν Ίησοῦς Χριστός (v. l.), § 15 ἔρρωσθε ἐν ὁμονοία Θεοῦ κεκτημένοι αδιάκριτον πνεθμα, δε έστιν Ίησοθε Χριστός; comp. Trall. 11 τοῦ Θεοῦ ένωσιν έπαγγελλομένου, ος έστιν αὐτός (where however there is a various reading), Ephes. 9 διὰ τῆς μηχανῆς... ős ἐστιν σταυρός (with the note). The passages, § 15, Trall. 11, seem to show that the relative refers not to $\tau \hat{\eta} \chi \alpha \rho \hat{\alpha} \tau \hat{\eta} \dot{\alpha} \mu \omega \mu \omega$, but to the whole idea of the sentence, 'This perfect unity is Jesus Christ.' Compare the still stronger expression, Ephes. 14 άρχη μέν πίστις, τέλος δὲ ἀγάπη τὰ δὲ δύο ἐν ἐνότητι γενόμενα Θεός ἐστιν. The reading sis is part of the confusion which extends over the following clauses in the existing Greek text.

6. $\dot{\omega}_s$ $\dot{\epsilon}_{ls}$ $\ddot{\epsilon}_{va}$ $\kappa.\tau.\lambda$.] Looking at the authorities, there can be little doubt, I think, that the passage should be so read. (1) The word $\ddot{\epsilon}_{va}$ slipped out of the extant Greek text of the genuine Ignatius in the first clause, owing to the combination of similar letters weekeenanaon, while the word els found its way by a reduplication (eiceic) into the text which the interpolator had before him. (2) The ωs before ἐπὶ ἔνα Ἰησοῦν Χριστον must be rejected, as an obvious addition of the scribes in some copies both Greek and Latin, which the supposed parallelism of the clause would suggest, but which really destroys the meaning of the sentence. Jesus Christ Himself is compared to the one altar. I suspect however that a still further change ought to be made, and that Θεόν should be read for $\Theta \in \hat{v}$ 'as to one shrine, even to God.' In this case the shrine (vaós) would be compared to God the Father, and the altar or court of the altar (θυσιαστήριον) to Iesus Christ. Thus the image gains in distinctness; for the access to the former is by and through the latter. Comp. Clem. Rom. § 41 έμπροσθεν τοῦ ναοῦ πρὸς τὸ θυσιαστήριον, and see the note on Ephes. 5. For the θv σιαστήριον in connexion with Christ see Heb. xiii. 10, where perhaps it signifies more definitely the Cross; and for the general complexion of the imagery Heb. ix. 6 sq. 8. προελθόντα] This refers not to the Divine generation of the Son, but to the mission on earth; for it corresponds to χωρήσαντα, as the setting out to the return; comp. John xiii. 3, xvi. 28 (quoted below), where ϵξελθεῖν answers to προελθεῖν here. See also the note on προελθών in § 8.

VIII. 'Be not seduced by false doctrines and antiquated fables. If we still live after the manner of Judaism, we avow that we have not received grace. Yes, the holy prophets themselves lived a life after Christ. For this they were persecuted, being inspired by His grace, that so in the time to come unbelievers might be convinced that there is one God who manifested Himself through His Son Jesus Christ, His Word that issued forth from silence and did the will of the Father in all things.'

I. μη πλανᾶσθε] See the note on Ephes. 16.

ταῖς ἐτεροδοξίαις] So ἐτεροδοξεῖν, Smyrn. 6. The words are at least as old as Plato (Theaet. 190 E, 193 D), but do not occur in the LXX or N.T. These are perhaps the earliest examples in Christian writings, though ἐτερόδοξος occurs in Philo de Sobr. 13 (I. p. 403) and in Josephus B. J. ii. 8. 5.

μυθεύμασιν κ.τ.λ.] Comp. I Tim. iv. 7 γραώδεις μύθους παραιτοῦ, Tit. I. 14 μὴ προσέχοντες 'Ιουδαϊκοῖς μύθοις : and for ἀνωφελέσιν see Tit. iii. 9 μωρὰς δὲ ζητήσεις καὶ γενεαλογίας καὶ έρεις καὶ μάχας νομικάς περιΐστασο, εἰσὶν γαρ ανωφελείς και μάταιοι. These parallels are important because they serve to indicate the type of heresy which Ignatius has in his mind. It belongs to the same category with the heresy of the Colossian Church (see Colossians p. 73 sq), of the Pastoral Epistles, of the Apocalypse, of the Catholic Epistles, and of the Cerinthians. It is Judaism crossed with Gnosticism. The 'antiquated fables' are probably myths relating to cosmogony and angelology: see above, I. p. 360 sq, and Colossians pp. 89 sq, 101 sq, 109 sq. This account of the heresy here contemplated, which is suggested by the parallels above quoted from S. Paul, is also demanded by the context of Ignatius himself. He begins here with a warning against έτεροδοξίαι, and he concludes with a similar warning against κενοδοξία (§ 11). These two he connects closely together (§ 11 ταῦτα δε...θέλω ύμας μη έμπεσείν είς τὰ ἄγκιστρα τῆς κενοδοξίας), so that he unquestionably has the same foe before him from first to last. Yet in attacking this foe, he condemns two things: first (§§ 8-10), Judaizing practices, i.e. the doctrine of the permanent obligation of the Mosaic ritual, more especially the observance of sabbaths (§ 9); and secondly, Docetic views, which are directly met

2. $\mu \acute{\epsilon} \chi \rho \iota \ \nu \hat{\nu} \nu]$ 'until now,' i.e. when two or three generations have passed since the true doctrine of grace was revealed.

3. κατὰ ἰουδαϊσμὸν There cannot be much doubt about the reading here. The superfluous νόμον in the extant Greek text of Ignatius is an obvious gloss; and the substitution of the 'Jewish law' in the Armenian Version and in the interpolator's text is a not less obvious paraphrase. Zahn however reads κατά νόμον ἰουδαϊσμον ζώμεν and is disposed to take λουδαϊσμον as a cognate accusative with the construction which Pearson (ad loc.) suggests only to reject. For lovdaiσμός, denoting conformity to the external rites of the Jews, see the notes on Gal. i. 13, ii. 14.

όμολογοῦμεν κ.τ.λ.] Ignatius doubtless had in his mind Gal. v. 4 κατηργήθητε ἀπὸ Χριστοῦ, οἵτινες ἐν νόμω δικαιοῦσθε, τῆς χάριτος ἐξεπέσατε (comp. ii. 21 οὖκ ἀθετῶ τὴν χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ). For χάρις, as the central point of the Gospel dispensation, see the note on Col. i. 6.

So also Philad. 5 καὶ τοὺς προφήτας δὲ ἀγαπῶμεν διὰ τὸ καὶ αὐτοὺς εἰς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον κατηγγελκέναι καὶ εἰς αὐτὸν ἐλπίζειν καὶ αὐτὸν ἀναμένειν (comp. ib. 9). See too below § 9 οἱ προφῆται μαθηταὶ ὄντες κ.τ.λ. For the expression κατὰ Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν ζῆν comp. Philad. 3 (with the note); and for the preposition see the note on § 1 above.

5. διὰ τοῦτο κ.τ.λ.] The same idea which appears in Heb. xi. 16, 25, 26, 35 (and throughout this chapter generally): see also Clem. Rom. 17 ἐν δέρμασιν αἰγείοις καὶ μηλωταῖς περιεπάτησαν, κηρύσσοντες τὴν ἔλευσιν

- 8. λόγος ἀπὸ σιγῆς προελθών] This reading has been altogether neglected by editors (before Zahn), but deserves to be preferred to the common text, λόγος ἀΐδιος οὐκ ἀπὸ σιγῆς προελθών, for the following reasons.
- (1) It has higher authority than the other. It stands in the oldest extant form of the text, that of the Armenian Version, and in one of the earliest extant quotations, that of Severus (Cureton C. I. pp. 213, 245). Severus even comments on the expression; 'This (statement) that He proceeded from silence means that He was ineffably begotten by the Father etc.' It is clear therefore that he had this reading before him, and it may be inferred from his silence that he was not acquainted with any other. This fact is the more important as Severus elsewhere (Rom. 6) mentions a various reading in Ignatius and compares the ages of different MSS. The paraphrase of the interpolator leaves some doubt about his reading: but inasmuch as there is nothing corresponding to aidios, which he is hardly likely to have omitted, I suppose that in his text also ἀίδιος οὖκ were wanting. He seems after his wont to have substituted for the Ignatian language λόγος ἀπὸ σιγῆς προελθών, which savoured strongly of heresy, another expression which squared with his ideas of orthodoxy.
- (2) This reading is better adapted to the context. It corresponds to the previous δ ϕ $av \epsilon \rho \omega$ σ as δ $av \tau \delta v$ δv in σ δv δv in σ δv in δv i
- (3) It accords entirely with the language of Ignatius elsewhere, where the period before the Incarnation is described as God's silence; Ephes. 19 μυστήρια κραυγῆς ἄτινα ἐν ἡσυχία Θεοῦ ἐπράχθη πῶς οὖν ἐφανερώθη; (see the note there). There is the same contrast between the 'silence' and the 'manifestation' here.
- (4) The insertion of the words diδιος οὐκ, if spurious, is much more easily explained than their omission, if genuine. A transcriber would be sorely tempted to alter a text which lent itself so readily to Gnostic and other heresies. The forced interpretation which Severus (as quoted above) is obliged to put on ἀπὸ σιγῆς προελθών shows how distasteful the expression would be to orthodox ears. The interpolation should, I think, be assigned to the fourth or fifth century. About the middle of the fourth century Marcellus propounded his doctrine, which was assailed by Eusebius as Sabellian. The attacks of Eusebius show that Marcellus expressed his views in language almost identical with this statement of Ignatius: see e. g. Eccl. Theol. ii. 9 (p. 114) à ôn Μάρκελλος ἐτόλμα ὑποτίθεσθαι, πάλαι μέν λέγων είναι τὸν Θεὸν καί τινα ήσυχίαν αμα τῷ Θεῷ ὑπογράφων ἐαυτῶ, κατ' αὐτὸν ἐκεῖνον τὸν τῶν ἀθέων αίρεσιωτών ἀρχηγόν (i.e. Simon Magus, as Pearson, V. I. p. 420, rightly supposes), δε τὰ ἄθεα δογματίζων ἀπεφαίνετο λέγων, ³Ην Θεός καὶ σιγή· μετὰ δὲ την σιγην καὶ την ήσυχίαν προελθείν τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν ἀρχῆ τῆς κοσμοποιίας δραστική ένεργεία κ.τ.λ. It seems probable indeed from this and other coincidences (see Smyrn. 3), that Marcellus was acquainted with the Ignatian Epistles. See also on this procession of the Logos from Silence the passages quoted from Marcellus, c. Marcell. ii. 2 (pp. 36, 41), Eccl. Theol. i. 20 (p. 100), ii. 8 sq (p. 112 sq), ii. 11 (p. 118), iii. 3 (pp. 163, 166). This mode of expression would thus be discredited, and the text altered in consequence. A parallel case is the insertion of atolog μέν with ἀρχιερεύς in Euseb. Quaest. ad Steph. Op. IV. p. 900 (comp. p. 965) to save the orthodoxy of the writer.

This reading was advocated by me as early as 1868 in the Journal of Philology I. p. 51 sq, and again later in the Contemporary Review, February 1875, p. 357 sq. It was adopted by Zahn in his edition (1876) quite independently, for he was unaware of what I had written (see p. 201). In his previous work (I. v. A. p. 471 sq, 1873) he had tacitly acquiesced in the vulgar text. The wonder is that a reading of such importance should have been so generally overlooked.

But if this be the correct reading, what is meant by it? Does this 'procession from silence' refer to the Divine generation of the Word or to the Incarnation? Severus takes the former view (Cureton C. I. pp. 213, 245). This sense would correspond to the use of similar expressions in various Gnostic systems, and it is recommended to a certain extent also by the parallels in Marcellus; comp. also Tatian ad Graec. 5 οὖτω καὶ ὁ λόγος προελθών έκ της του πατρός δυνάμεως. But nevertheless it does not suit the context, nor does it accord with the language of Ignatius elsewhere. As Logos implies the manifestation of Deity whether in His words or in His works, so Sige is the negation of this (see Iren. ii. 12. 5 quoted above). Hence the expression 'proceeding from silence' might be used at any point where there is a sudden transition from non-manifestation to manifestation: e.g. Wisd. xviii. 14, 15, ήσύχου γὰρ σιγής περιεχούσης τὰ πάντα... ὁ παντοδύναμός σου λόγος ἀπ' οὐρανῶν...εἰς μέσον της όλεθρίας η λατο γης, where the reference is to the destruction of the first-born in Egypt. To the Incarnation, as the chief manifestation of God through the Word, this language would be especially applicable; comp. Rom. xvi. 25 κατά άποκάλυψιν μυστηρίου χρόνοις αλωνίοις σεσιγημένου, φανερωθέντος δε νυν (with other passages quoted on Ephes. 19), and see also Clem. Alex. Cohort. I (p. 9) ίνα της άληθείας τὸ φως, ό λόγος, των προφητικών αινιγμάτων την μυστικήν απολύσηται σιωπήν, εὐαγγέλιον γενόμενος. Since therefore the whole context here relates to the Incarnation and human life of Christ (ὁ φανερώσας ξαυτόν, τῶ πέμψαντι αὐτόν), it is natural to refer ἀπὸ the parallel passage Ephes. 19 (already quoted), which is strongly in favour of this interpretation; and comp. Rom. 8 Ίησοῦς Χριστὸς...τὸ ἀψευδες στόμα εν ώ ο πατήρ ελάλησεν άληθώς. So too προελθείν has been used just before of the Incarnation. § 7. Ignatius however does not deny the pre-existence of the Word here, though he does not assert it. This was not the first time when the silence of God had been broken by the Word. Elsewhere this father asserts the eternity of the Son in the most explicit terms; e.g. § 6 above, Polyc. 3.

IX. 'If then those who had lived under the old covenant attained to a new and higher hope by abandoning the observance of sabbaths and by keeping the Lord's day-the memorial of Christ's resurrection, whereby we have found life through His death, which some deny but which to us is the ground of our faith and the strength of our endurance; if, I say, this be so, how can we live without Him? Nay, even the prophets were His disciples, for in the Spirit they looked forward to Him as their teacher; and therefore, when He came, He raised them from the dead.'

I. oi $\epsilon \nu \pi a \lambda a \iota o i s \kappa. \tau. \lambda.$ i.e. 'those who were brought up in the practices of Judaism.' If the Jewish converts gave up the observance of sabbaths, a fortiori ought Gentile converts not to barter Christ for Judaic rites. Hilgenfeld (A. V. p. 232) refers these words to the post-Mosaic prophets; but this, as Zahn truly says (I. v. A. p. 354), would be to outbid even the Pseudo-Barnabas, who with all his hostility to Judaism does not go nearly so far (§ 15). Such a statement would have been quite untrue in itself, and altogether discordant with the teaching of these epistles elsewhere. Moreover it is inconsistent with the language of the context; for (I) μηκέτι implies a conversion from the old to the new; and (2) the correct reading is unquestionably κατὰ κυριακὴν 'in the observance of the Lord's day,' which could not possibly have been predicted of the prophets. Hilgenfeld has taken the corrupt reading κατὰ κυριακὴν ζωήν.

πράγμασιν See Orig. de Princ. iv. (I. p. 160) πάντων τῶν Ἰουδαϊκῶν πραγμάτων έν οις έσέμνυντο, referred to by Zahn. There is a slight tinge of depreciation in this word. points to the vexatiousness of the ordinances of Judaism. The reading of the interpolator's text, γράμμασιν, is tempting: comp. Rom. vii. 6 κατηργήθημεν ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου...ωστε δουλεύειν [ήμας] έν καινότητι πνεύματος καὶ οὐ παλαιότητι γράμματος, which passage may perhaps have suggested it. It must however be rejected for two distinct reasons: (1) The convergence of the best authorities is decidedly in favour of πράγμασιν: (2) The γράμματα in this case would naturally refer to the Old Testament Scriptures, and παλαιά must suggest the idea of 'antiquated.' But this is not at all the language which meets us elsewhere in the Ignatian Epistles. The patriarchs and the lawgiver and the prophets are the forerunners of the Gospel; there is an absolute identity of interests between them and the Gospel (Philad. 5, 9, Smyrn. 7; and see also the mention of the prophets in this context). Moreover the only direct quotations in these epistles are from the Old Testament (Prov. iii. 34 in Ephes. 5; Prov. xviii. 17 in Magn. 12; Is. lii. 5 in Trall. 8), and in two out of three passages they are introduced with the common form of authoritative citation, γέγραπται. The interchange of γράμμα and πρᾶγμα with scribes and critics is frequent: e.g. Plato Soph. 262 D, Polyb. ix. 40. 3, xi. 6. 3, xv. 26. 4, Euseb. H. E. ix. I.

The word $\sigma \alpha \beta \beta \alpha \tau i \zeta \epsilon \omega$ is not found in the New Testament, but occurs frequently in the LXX, where it bears a good sense; comp. $\sigma \alpha \beta \beta \alpha \tau \iota \sigma \mu \delta s$ in Heb. iv. 9.

3. κατά κυριακήν] sc. ήμέραν. This 'living after the Lord's day' signifies not merely the observance of it, but the appropriation of all those ideas and associations which are involved in its observance. It symbolizes the hopes of the Christian, who rises with Christ's resurrection, as he dies with Christ's death. It implies the substitution of the spiritual for the formal in religion. It is a type and an earnest of the eternal rest in heaven. See esp. Clem. Alex. Strom. vii. 12 (p. 877) οδτος έντολην την κατά το ευαγγέλιον διαπραξάμενος κυριακήν έκείνην την ημέραν ποιεί, όταν αποβάλλη φαῦλον νόημα καὶ γνωστικὸν προσλάβη την έν αὐτῷ τοῦ Κυρίου ἀνάστασιν δοξάζων, comp. ib. vii. 10 (p. 866). Comp. also Barnab. 15 ἀρχὴν ἡμέρας ογδόης... δ έστιν, άλλου κόσμου άρχήν διὸ καὶ ἄγομεν τὴν ἡμέραν τὴν ὀγδόην είς εθφροσύνην, έν ή και ο Ίησους ανέστη έκ νεκρών κ.τ.λ., Justin Apol. i. 67 (p. 99) ἐπειδή πρώτη ἐστὶν ἡμέρα, ἐν ἦ

(comp. ib. 41, p. 260). So Irenæus states that the practice of not kneeling on the Lord's day dated from Apostolic times, and appears to have explained that it was σύμβολον της αναστάσεως, δι' ής τοῦ Χριστοῦ χάριτι τῶν τε άμαρτημάτων καὶ τοῦ ἐπ' αὐτῶν τεθανατωμένου θανάτου ηλευθερώθημεν (Fragm. 7, p. 828, ed. Stieren); comp. Tert. de Cor. 3 'die dominico jejunium nefas ducimus. vel de geniculis adorare.' Melito wrote a treatise περὶ κυριακής (Euseb. H. E. iv. 26) in which doubtless he drew out the symbolism of the day.

The day is commonly called µία [τῶν] σαββάτων in the New Testament. As late as the year 57 this designation occurs in S. Paul (1 Cor. xvi. 2), where we should certainly have expected κυριακή, if the word had then been commonly in use. Even in Rev. i. 10 έγενόμην έν πνεύματι έν τη κυριακή ήμέρα the interpretation is doubtful, and there are good, if not conclusive, reasons for interpreting it of the day of judgment; see Todd's Discourses on Prophecies in the Apocalypse pp. 59, 295 sq. If so, the passage before us is the earliest example of its occurrence in this sense, except perhaps Doctr. Apost. 14, where the expression is κυριακή Kuplov. In Barnab. 15 it is called ή ήμέρα ή ὀγδόη, where however the writer has a special reason for dwelling on the eighth day. With Justin writing to the heathen it is $\eta \tau \tau \tau^2$

See the note on § 8 $\mu\nu\theta\epsilon\nu\mu\alpha\sigma\nu$ κ.τ.λ. for the connexion of this error with Judaism here, and the note on Trall. 9 for the Docetism assailed in these epistles generally. In a parallel passage, Smyrn. 5 ου τινες άγνοοθυτες ἀρνοῦνται, the relative refers to 'Jesus Christ,' and so it might be connected with av του here; but the meaning would hardly be so distinct, though the allusion to Docetism would still remain. The same will also be the allusion, if for $\delta \nu$ we read δ , as some authorities suggest. In this case 8 may be referred either (1) to the whole sentence ή ζωή ήμῶν ἀνέτειλεν δι' αὐτοῦ κ.τ.λ., the denial of this

6. τῷ πνεύματι] Zahn (comp. I. v. A. p. 462) attaches this to μαθηταὶ ὅντες; but the connexion with the following words seems more natural, as well as more consonant with I Pet. i. II ἐδήλου τὸ ἐν αὐτοῖς πνεῦμα Χριστοῦ,

I mention this, because Zahn (I. v. A. p. 462) separates the two words, translating προσεδόκουν 'sie schienen ausserdem noch.' For προσδοκείν, as a later alternative form of προσδοκάν, see Dindorf in Steph. Thes. s. v.; and for the interchange of $-\epsilon \omega$ and $-\alpha \omega$ generally in some early dialects, and in the later Greek, see Kühner § 251 (I. p. 606), Winer § xv. p. 104 (ed. παρών ἤγειρεν κ.τ.λ.] 'He came and raised them.' This refers to the descensus ad inferos, which occupied a prominent place in the belief of the early Church. Here our Lord is assumed to have visited $(\pi a \rho \omega \nu)$ the souls of the patriarchs and prophets in Hades, to have taught them (ώς διδάσκαλον κ.τ.λ.) the truths of the Gospel, and to have raised them $(\mathring{\eta}_{\gamma \epsilon \iota \rho \epsilon \nu})$ either to paradise or to heaven; see Philad. 9 αὐτὸς ὧν θύρα τοῦ πατρὸς δι' ής εἰσέρχονται 'Αβραὰμ καὶ Ἰσαὰκ καὶ Ἰακώβ καὶ οἱ προφήται κ.τ.λ., comp. ib. 5 έν ω καὶ πιστεύσαντες (SC. οἱ προφήται) ἐσώθησαν. with the note. I have already pointed out (see the note on § 8 ἐμπνεόμενοι) that the functions assigned to the prophets by Ignatius strongly resemble the representations in S. Peter; and this reference to the descent into Hades also has its parallel in 1 Pet. iii. 19, iv. 6. Other passages in the N. T. which have been thought to refer to it are Ephes. iv. 9, Heb. xii. 23. This belief appears in various forms in early Christian writers. Justin Dial. 72 (p. 298) quotes a passage from Jeremiah, Έμνήσθη δὲ Κύριος ὁ Θεὸς ἀπὸ (l. ἄγιος with Iren.) Ἰσραήλ τῶν νεκρῶν αὐτοῦ τῶν κεκοιμημένων εἰς γῆν χώματος καὶ κατέβη πρὸς αὐτοὺς εὐαγγελίσασθαι αὐτοῖς τὸ σωτήριον αὐτοῦ. Η ε says that the Jews had cut out this passage from their copies; and it does not appear in extant MSS of the LXX. What may have been its history we cannot say; but Irenæus quotes it several times (once as from Isaiah, once as from Jeremiah, and in other passages anonymously) and applies it to the descent into Hades;

see iii. 20. 4, iv. 22. I, iv. 33. I, I2, v. 31. 1. In the last passage he writes 'tribus diebus conversatus est ubi erant mortui, quemadmodum propheta ait de eo Commemoratus est Dominus etc.' He also relates (iv. 27. 2) a discourse which he had heard from an elder who had known personal disciples of the Lord, and who stated 'Dominum in ea quae sunt sub terra descendisse, evangelizantem et illis adventum suum, remissione peccatorum existente his qui credunt in eum: crediderunt autem in eum omnes qui sperabant in eum, id est, qui adventum ejus praenuntiaverunt...justi et prophetae et patriarchae etc.' So too Tertullian de Anim. 55 'descendit in inferiora terrarum, ut illic patriarchas et prophetas compotes sui faceret,' speaking of the three days between the death and the resurrection (comp. ib. § 7). Hermas makes the Apostles and first teachers of the Gospel preach to the souls in Hades, Sim. ίχ. 16 οὖτοι οἱ ἀπόστολοι καὶ οἱ διδάσκαλοι οἱ κηρύξαντες τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ νίοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ...ἐκήρυξαν καὶ τοῖς προκεκοιμημένοις... έκείνοι δε οί προκεκοιμημένοι κ.τ.λ. These προκεκοιμημένοι have been described before (§ 15) as the prophets and ministers of God, as well as the first two generations of mankind which preceded them. Clement of Alexandria, Strom. ii. 9 (p. 452), quoting this passage of Hermas, explains it as including righteous heathens as well as Jews; but Hermas himself gives no hint whether he contemplated this extended application or not. later passage, Strom. vi. 6 (p. 763), Clement refers back to his second book, as having shown there that 'the Apostles, following the Lord, preached the Gospel to those in Hades'; and he maintains that, as our Lord preached there to the Jews, so the Apostles addressed themselves to the righteous heathen, referring again to the passage in the Shepherd. Somewhat similarly Hippolytus de Antichr. 45 (p. 22, Lagarde) makes John the Baptist after his death preach to those in Hades, as a forerunner of Christ, σημαίνειν μέλλων κάκεισε κατελεύσεσθαι τὸν σωτήρα λυτρούμενον τὰς άγίων ψυχὰς κ.τ.λ.; and so too Origen in Luc. Hom. iv. (III. p. 917), in Ioann. ii. § 30 (IV. p. 91). Even Marcion accepted the descent of Christ into Hades, though (unless he is misrepresented) he maintained that the righteous men and prophets under the old dispensation, as being subjects of the Demiurge, refused to listen to His preaching, and that only such persons as Cain and the other wicked characters of the Old Testament listened and were saved: Iren. i. 27. 3, Theodt. H. F. i. 24; see Zahn Der Hirt des Hermas p. 425 sq. If this be so, it is a speaking testimony to the hold which the belief 5 τούτου, οὐκ ἔστιν τοῦ Θεοῦ. ὑπέρθεσθε οὖν τὴν κακὴν ζύμην την παλαιωθείσαν καὶ ένοξίσασαν, καὶ μεταβάλεσθε είς νέαν ζύμην, ός έστιν Ίησοῦς Χριστός.

had on men's minds. For the opinion of the later fathers on this subject see Pearson Exposition of the Creed Art. 5. This belief was sometimes connected with the incident related in Matt. xxvii. 52 πολλά σώματα τῶν κεκοιμημένων άγίων ήγέρθησαν κ.τ.λ.; e.g. by Euseb. Dem. Ev. x. 8 (p. 501), and by Severus (Land Anecd. Syr. I. p. 33) commenting on this passage of Ignatius.

X. 'Let us not be insensible to His goodness. If He were to treat us, as we treat Him, we should indeed be lost. Therefore, as His disciples, let us learn to live Christian lives. He who is called by any other name than Christ's, is not of God. Put away the sour and stale leaven of Judaism, and replace it with the new leaven of Christ. Be ye salted in Him, that ye may escape corruption. It is monstrous to name the name of Christ and to follow Judaism. Christianity did not believe in Judaism, but Judaism in Christianity, wherein all nations and tongues were gathered unto God.'

I. ἀναισθητῶμεν 'be insensible to.' This verb not uncommonly takes a genitive; e.g. Jos. Ant. xi. 5. 8, B. 7. iv. 3. 10, Plut. Mor. p. 1062 C, Athenag. Suppl. 15. The word is at least as old as Epicurus, Plut.

Mor. p. 1103 D.

της χρηστότητος αὐτοῦ] The substitution of Judaism for Christianity was a rejection of God's χάρις, a denial of Christ's work; see above

2. αν γαρ κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'if He should treat us with the same scorn and defiance with which we treat Him'; comp. 2 Sam. xxii. 26, 27 (Ps. xviii. 25, 26).

4. πλέον τούτου] 'beyond this,' i.e. τοῦ χριστιανισμοῦ. Or is it τοῦ ὀνόματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ? For πλέον see Polyc. 5.

5. $\delta \pi \epsilon \rho \theta \epsilon \sigma \theta \epsilon$ 'dispense with,' literally 'defer', and so postpone sine die. The word is used somewhat similarly in Prov. xv. 22.

6. ζύμην κ.τ.λ.] From I Cor. v. 7 έκκαθάρατε την παλαιάν ζύμην κ.τ.λ.; comp. Clem. Hom. viii. 17 6 Ocos αὐτοὺς ώσπερ κακὴν ζύμην έξελεῖν έβούλετο. On the metaphor generally see the note Galatians v. 9.

παλαιωθείσαν] Not simply παλαιάν. See Heb. viii. 13 for this 'antiquation' of the Judaic law and

èvogioavar] 'which has gone sour.' No other instance of the word is given in the lexicons, though ὀξίζω and παροξίζω occur elsewhere.

7. ős] I have preferred this to ő, because it accords with the writer's idiom elsewhere in this epistle, § 15 ős ἐστιν Ἰησοῦς Χριστός; see also the note on § 7. On the other hand, ő might stand, and be referred to véav ζύμην. For this use of the neuter relative see the note on § 9. The Gospel is spoken of as leaven in the parable, Matt. xiii. 33, Luke xiii. 21. άλίσθητε ἐν αὐτῷ, ἵνα μὴ διαφθαρῷ τις ἐν ὑμῖν, ἐπεὶ ἀπὸ τῆς ὀσμῆς ἐλεγχθήσεσθε. ἄτοπόν ἐστιν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν λαλεῖν καὶ ἰουδαΐζειν. ὁ γὰρ χριστιανισμὸς οὐκ εἰς ἰουδαϊσμὸν ἐπίστευσεν, ἀλλ' ἰουδαϊσμὸς εἰς χριστιανισμόν, ῷ πῶς Α Γλῶς ς Α πιστεύσασα εἰς Θεὸν ς ΥΝ-5 ΗχθΗ.

1. $\hat{\alpha}\lambda i\sigma\theta\eta\tau\epsilon$] 'be ye salted.' Here again is an allusion to another metaphor in the Gospel parables, Matt. v. 13, Mark ix. 50, Luke xiv. 34; see the note on Col. iv. 6. There is a possible reference to the injunction of the law, Lev. ii. 13 πâν δῶρον θυσίας ὑμῶν ἀλὶ ἀλισθήσεται. The metaphor is carried out in διαφθαρ $\hat{\eta}$ 'putrefy,' as well as in ὀσμ $\hat{\eta}$ s.

2. τῆς ὀσμῆς] Comp. Ephes. 17 δυσωδίαν τῆς διδασκαλίας τοῦ ἄρχοντος τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου with the note.

3. $\lambda a \lambda \epsilon \hat{\imath} \nu$] 'to profess.' For the expression $\lambda a \lambda \epsilon \hat{\imath} \nu$ 'I. X. see the note on Ephes. 6. For the whole sentiment of the contradiction between Jesus Christ and Judaism see Philad. 6.

ό γὰρ χριστιανισμὸς] The word occurs again Rom. 3 (v. 1.), Philad. 6; see Mart. Polyc. 10, Clem. Alex. Strom. vii. 1 (p. 829). The word χριστιανός first arose at Antioch (Acts xi. 26), but at what date we are not told. About A.D. 60 it is represented as used by Agrippa, Acts xxvi. 28: and at the time of the Neronian persecution (A.D. 64) it was already a common designation of the believers; I Pet. iv. 16, Tac. Ann. xv. 44 'quos per flagitia invisos vulgus Christianos appellabat,' Suet. Ner. 16. The derived verb χριστιανίζειν, after the analogy of πυθαγορίζειν, loυδαΐζειν, etc., would be coined soon after as a matter of course, to designate the peculiarities of the new sect, and with it the substantive χριστιανισμόs. But these epistles furnish the earliest extant example of its use. In the New Testament the word 'Christian' is still more or less a term of reproach; in the age of Ignatius it has become a title of honour: see above § 4, Ephes. 11, 14 (v. l.), Rom. 3, Polyc. 7 (comp. Trall. 6).

5. $\hat{\phi}$] Governed by $\pi \iota \sigma \tau \epsilon \dot{\upsilon} \sigma \sigma \sigma$. This correction of the existing Greek text $\dot{\omega}_s$ is required by the sense and justified by the authorities. On the other hand Zahn (I. v. A. p. 429, and here) reads $\dot{\epsilon}_s \ddot{\delta}_v$ with the interpolator; but this reading must, I think, be regarded as a paraphrase of the interpolator after his usual manner.

πᾶσα γλῶσσα] i.e. 'not Jews only, but every race upon earth.' It was therefore a larger and better dispensation than Judaism; and it approved itself as the true fulfilment of the prophecy which declared that all nations and tongues should be gathered to God; Is. lxvi. 18 συναγαγεῖυ πάντα τὰ ἔθνη καὶ τὰς γλώσσας (comp. xlv. 22, 23, Zach. viii. 23). The language of Ignatius is somewhat hyperbolical as applied to his own time, but not more so than some expressions of S. Paul; e.g. Rom. i. 8, Col. i. 6, 23. Compare the language of Justin Martyr (Dial. 117, p. 345), and of Irenæus (i. 10. 2), regarding the spread of the Church in their own times respectively.

XI. Ταῦτα δέ, ἀγαπητοί μου, οὐκ ἐπεὶ ἔγνων τινὰς ἐξ ὑμῶν οὕτως ἔχοντας, ἀλλ' ὡς μικρότερος ὑμῶν θέλω προφυλάσσεσθαι ὑμᾶς μὴ ἐμπεσεῖν εἰς τὰ ἄγιο κιστρα τῆς κενοδοξίας, ἀλλὰ πεπληροφόρησθε ἐν τῆ γεννήσει καὶ τῷ πάθει καὶ τῆ ἀναστάσει τῆ γενομένη ἐν καιρῷ τῆς ἡγεμονίας Ποντίου Πιλάτου· πραχθέντα

XI. 'I say this, not because I know that you have already fallen into error, but because I wish you to be forewarned against the wiles of heresy. Have a firm belief in the Incarnation, the Passion, the Resurrection of Christ. These things are no delusive phantoms, but real facts. Let no one divert you from your hope.'

7. $Ta\hat{v} \tau a \delta \epsilon$] sc. $\lambda \epsilon \gamma \omega$. For the ellipsis and the sentiment alike comp. Trall. 8 Oùr $\epsilon \pi \epsilon i$ $\epsilon \gamma \nu \omega \nu$ $\kappa.\tau.\lambda$., where still more is left to be understood. It would be possible to treat the sentence here as complete, by making $\tau a \hat{v} \tau a$ the accusative after $\pi \rho \sigma \phi \nu \lambda \dot{a} \sigma \sigma \epsilon \sigma \theta a \iota$; but the antithesis of the clauses would thus be destroyed. For the sentiment see also Smyrn. 4. Comp. Polyc. Phil. 11 'Ego autem nihil tale sensi in vobis vel audivi.'

δε μικρότερος ὑμῶν] i.e. 'as one who has no right to dictate to you'; comp. Ephes. 3 (with the note). For other expressions of self-depreciation see the note on Ephes. 21 τῶν ἐκεῖ.

προφυλάσσεσθαι] 'should be on your guard beforehand.' So the active προφυλάσσω ύμᾶς, Trall. 8, Smyrn. 4. Similarly ἀσφαλίζομαι ύμᾶς Philad. 5.

Το κενοδοξίας] 'foolish opinion.' The word has two senses (I) 'vainglory,' as in Phil. ii. 3 (comp. κενόδοξος, Gal. v. 26), Clem. Rom. 35, Philad. I, and so most frequently; (2) 'vain opinion,' 'error,' as Wisd. xiv. 14, Clem. Al. Protr. 5 (p. 55) φιλοσοφίαν αὐτὴν κενοδοξίας ἔνεκεν ἀνειδωλοποιοῦσαν τὴν ΰλην, and so here. This latter sense is commonly overlooked in the lexicons.

πεπληροφόρησθε] 'be ye fully persuaded,' the imperative. For this sense of the word, and for the construction πληροφορεῖσθαι ἐν 'to be convinced of a thing,' see the note Colossians iv. 12.

τη γεννήσει] On the Docetism which denied the reality of the human body of our Lord, and therefore of His Incarnation, Passion, and Resurrection, see the note on Trall. 9.

12. Ποντίου Πιλάτου] So again Trall. 9, Smyrn. 1. In all these places the specification of the date is intended to emphasize the reality of the occurrence. The chief motive for the insertion of the name in the Apostles' Creed was probably the same; see Pearson On the Creed Art. iv. p. 371 (ed. Chevallier). The mention of 'Pontius Pilate' in connexion with the crucifixion in early Christian writings is of constant occurrence, e.g. 1 Tim. vi. 13, Justin Apol. i. 13 (p. 60), Dial. 30 (p. 247); and probably we owe to the prominence thus given to the name among the Christians themselves the fact that he is so mentioned also by Tacitus, Ann. xv. 44.

πραχθέντα] 'things done.' The accusative may be regarded as standing in apposition with the object involved in the preceding words, which are equivalent to ἐν τῷ γεννηθηναι καὶ παθεῖν κ.τ.λ. For various loose constructions of the accusative participle, see Kühner II. pp. 646 sq, 667 sq, Winer § xxxii. p. 290, lix. p. 669. The participle, thus isolated, emphasizes the reality of the events.

I. $d\lambda\eta\theta\hat{\omega}s$] See the note on Trall, 9. $\tau\hat{\eta}s$ $\epsilon\lambda\pi\hat{\iota}\delta\sigma s$ $\hat{\eta}\mu\hat{\omega}\nu$] As in Trall. inscr., 2. So also I Tim. i. I. Comp. Polyc. Phil. 8 προσκαρτερ $\hat{\omega}\mu\epsilon\nu$ $\tau\hat{\eta}$ $\hat{\epsilon}\lambda\pi\hat{\iota}\delta\iota$ $\hat{\eta}\mu\hat{\omega}\nu$... $\hat{\sigma}s$ $\hat{\epsilon}\sigma\tau\iota\nu$ $X\rho\iota\sigma\tau\hat{\sigma}s$ 'Ιησο $\hat{\sigma}s$. For the longer expression $\hat{\eta}$ κοιν $\hat{\eta}$ $\hat{\epsilon}\lambda\pi\hat{\iota}s$ $\hat{\eta}\mu\hat{\omega}\nu$ see the note on Ephes. I.

XII. 'May I have comfort in you, if I am found worthy. For although I am bound, I do not compare myself with any of you who are free. I know that ye are not puffed up: for ye have Jesus Christ in you. Nay, my praise will only fill you with shame, for The righteous man is his own accuser?

3. $\partial vai\mu\eta\nu \kappa.\tau.\lambda$.] See the note on Ephes. 2, where the whole clause occurs, as here.

4. $\epsilon i \gamma \hat{a} \rho \kappa a i \delta \epsilon \delta \epsilon \mu a i$ i.e. 'notwithstanding the dignity conferred on me by my bonds.' See the note on Ephes. 3, where the same phrase occurs.

πρὸς ἔνα κ.τ.λ.] 'I am not comparable to one of you who are free from bonds.' For this sense of πρὸς see Kühner § 441 (II. p. 450); comp. e.g. Herod. ii. 35 ἔργα λόγου μέζω παρέχεται πρὸς πᾶσαν χώρην (i.e. 'in comparison with any country'), Plat. 5. φυσιοῦσθε] Trall. 4, 7, Smyrn. 6, Polyc. 4. So too 1 Cor. iv. 6, 18, 19, v. 2, viii. 1, xiii. 4, Col. ii. 18; comp. φυσίωσις 2 Cor. xii. 20. The word

7. δίκαιος κ.τ.λ.] From the LXX of Prov. xviii. 17. In the Hebrew however the sense is quite different; 'The first man is upright in his suit; then cometh his neighbour and searcheth him out.' In other words it is necessary to hear both sides of a case (see Delitzsch ad loc.). In the LXX the subject and predicate of the first clause are transposed, and it is rendered Δίκαιος έαυτοῦ κατήγορος ἐν πρωτολογία.

XIII. 'Stand fast therefore in the ordinances of the Lord and His Apostles, that ye may be prosperous in all things, with your bishop, presbyters, and deacons. Submit yourselves to your bishop and to one another, as Jesus Christ submitted to the Father, and the Apostles to Jesus Christ and the Father, that there may be unity of flesh and spirit.'

9. τοις δόγμασιν] 'precepts,' i.e. 'authoritative sayings': see the note on Colossians ii. 14. For one half of the phrase comp. Barnab. Ι τρία οὖν δόγματά ἐστιν Κυρίου, and for the other Acts xvi. 4 τὰ δόγματα τὰ κεκριμένα ύπὸ τῶν ἀποστόλων.

II. $\kappa \alpha \tau \epsilon v \circ \delta \omega \theta \hat{\eta} \tau \epsilon$ 'ye may be prospered,' an adapted quotation from Psalm i. 3 πάντα ὅσα ἃν ποιῆ κατευοδω- $\theta \dot{\eta} \sigma \epsilon \tau a \iota$, where this prosperity is promised to those who take pleasure ἐν τῷ νόμω Κυρίου. The compound κατευοδοῦν is not uncommon in the LXX, and the simple word εὐοδοῦν occurs four times in the N. T. Zahn (I. v. A. p. 434, and here) reads $\kappa \alpha \tau \epsilon v \circ \delta \omega \theta \hat{\eta}$ after the Latin version prosperentur; but I suspect that the Latin translator had $\kappa a \tau \epsilon v o \delta \omega \theta \hat{\eta} \tau a i$ in his text, which (overlooking the itacism) he carelessly rendered in this way, as if it were $\kappa \alpha \tau \epsilon \nu o \delta \omega \theta \hat{\eta}$. The reminiscence of the Psalm in the Vulgate, which runs omnia quaecunque faciet prosperabuntur, and after which he has modelled the rest of the quotation, would assist his mistake. Zahn objects to the accusative after κατευοδοῦσθαι, but the Hebrew shows that this is most probably the construction in the Psalm: comp. also I Cor. χνί. 2 θησαυρίζων ο τι αν εὐοδῶται.

σαρκὶ καὶ πνεύματι] See the note

on Ephes. 10.

12. ἐν νἱῷ κ.τ.λ.] The order is the same as in 2 Cor. xiii. 13. It is moreover a natural sequence. Through ἐν τέλει, μετὰ τοῦ ἀξιοπρεπεστάτου ἐπισκόπου ὑμῶν καὶ ἀξιοπλόκου πνευματικοῦ στεφάνου τοῦ πρεσβυτερίου ὑμῶν καὶ τῶν κατὰ Θεὸν διακόνων. ὑποτάγητε τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ καὶ ἀλλήλοις, ὡς Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς τῷ πατρὶ [κατὰ σάρκα] καὶ οἱ ἀπόστολοι τῷ Χριστῷ καὶ τῷ 5 πατρί, ἵνα ἕνωσις ễ σαρκική τε καὶ πνευματική.

the Son is the way to the Father (Joh. xiv. 6): this union with the Father through the Son is a communion in the Spirit.

αξιοπρεπεστάτου] See the note on Rom. inscr.

2. στεφάνου Like the Latin 'corona,' of an encircling attendance; comp. Apost. Const. ii. 28, where the presbyters are called σύμβουλοι τοῦ έπισκόπου καὶ τῆς ἐκκλησίας στέφανος. In the primitive assemblies of the Christians the bishop would sit in the centre, surrounded by his presbyters; see the note on § 6 συνέδριον. This sense of στέφανος may be illustrated by such passages as e.g. Hom. Il. xiii. 736 πάντη γάρ σε περί στέφανος πολέμοιο δέδηεν, Plut. Mor. 228 Ε πόλιν ήτις ανδράσι και ου πλίνθοις έστεφάνωται, 'which has its crown, its circlet, not of towers, but of men.' The epithet ἀξιόπλοκος, 'worthily woven,' carries out the metaphor of στέφανος, for πλέκειν στέφανον is a common expression, e.g. Matt. xxvii. 29, etc.

3. $\kappa a \tau \hat{a} \Theta \epsilon \hat{o} \nu$] See the note on § 1 above.

τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ κ.τ.λ.] Ι Pet. v. 5 νεώτεροι ὑποτάγητε πρεσβυτέροις, πάντες δὲ ἀλλήλοις, Ephes. v. 21 ὑποτασσόμενοι ἀλλήλοις: comp. Clem. Rom. 38.

5. κατὰ σάρκα] These words, if genuine, would expressly limit the subordination of the Son to His human nature; see Rothe Anfänge p. 754. But their absence in some authorities seems to show that they are no part of the original text.

καὶ τῷ πατρί] I have struck out the addition καὶ τῷ πνεύματι, which appears in the common texts, as suspicious in itself, and as wanting in one important authority. It would easily be suggested by the previous mention of the three Persons of the Trinity, ἐν υἱῷ κ.τ.λ. On the other hand its omission might be accounted for by a homœoteleuton $\overline{\pi}$ Pi and $\overline{\pi}$ Nī, which are constantly confused: see note on Smyrn. 13.

 σαρκική τε κ.τ.λ.] See the note on Ephes. 10. Comp. Ephes. iv. 4 ἐν σῶμα καὶ ἐν πνεῦμα.

Θεοῦ γέμετε] They are θεοφόροι in the fullest sense: comp. Ephes. 8 ὅλοι ὅντες Θεοῦ. So Virgil's 'plena deo.'

παρεκάλεσα] A common word in Ignatius, more especially in the same connexion as here, e.g. Trall. 6, Polyc. 7, etc. On the other hand παρακελεύειν does not occur elsewhere in this writer or in the N. T.

on Ephes. 21 των έκεί.

12. ἐκτενείαs] 'fervency, urgency.' I have ventured on this emendation for ἐκκλησίαs, as it is suggested by the Armenian Version. The interpolator's εὐταξίαs may be explained as the substitution of a simple for a difficult or illegible word, according to his common practice. For the connexion of ἐκτενήs, ἐκτενῶs, ἐκτένεια, with prayer comp. Joel i. 14, Jonah iii. 8, Judith iv. 9, 12, Luke xxii. 44, Acts xii. 5, xxvi. 7, Clem. Rom. 34, 59, Ps-Ign. Ephes. 10. For the supplication called ἐκτενήs in the Greek ritual see Clement of Rome p. 270. See esp.

Ps-Ign. Philipp. 14 al προσευχαί ύμων ἐκταθείησαν εἰς τὴν ἀντιοχείας ἐκκλησίαν ὅθεν κ.τ.λ., which would seem to be taken from this passage. The confusion between εκτενείας and εκκλησίαν would be easy, where εκκλησίαν had almost immediately preceded. The purists condemned these words ἐκτενῶς, ἐκτένεια, etc.: see Lobeck Phryn. p. 311.

XV. 'Greeting from the Ephesians who are in Smyrna. Like your own delegates, they have refreshed me greatly. Polycarp joins in the greeting. So also do the other churches. Farewell; be of one mind; be steadfast in spirit; for this is Jesus Christ Himself.'

13. 'Εφέσιοι] For these Ephesian delegates who were with Ignatius, see Ephes. 1, 2 (with the notes).

14. ϵ is δόξαν $\Theta\epsilon \circ \hat{v}$] So too Rom. 10; comp. Ephes. 13, Polyc. 4. A more common expression in Ignatius is ϵ is $\tau \iota \mu \dot{\eta} \nu \Theta \epsilon \circ \hat{v}$; see the note on Ephes. 21.

ωσπερ καὶ ὑμεῖε] sc. πάρεστε. The Magnesians were present in the persons of their representatives mentioned above, \S 2.

I. κατὰ πάντα κ.τ.λ.] For this favourite Ignatian phrase see the note

ἄμα Πολυκάρπω] These words are perhaps better taken with ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶs, than with the clause immediately preceding; comp. Trall. 13 ἀσπάζεται ὑμᾶs ἡ ἀγάπη Σμυρναίων καὶ Ἐφεσίων.

2. αἱ λοιπαὶ κ.τ.λ.] i.e. through their representatives, who also were with him: comp. Trall. 12 ἄμα ταῖς συμπαρούσαις μοι ἐκκλησίαις τοῦ Θεοῦ. The Trallians would be included among αἱ λοιπαὶ here; comp. Trall. I.

 $\vec{\epsilon} \nu \tau \iota \mu \hat{\eta} \kappa \tau \lambda$] i.e. 'not the honour which is implied in the ordinary greetings of men, but the honour which belongs to the sphere of, which springs from, Jesus Christ.' Thus it is a fuller phrase for ἀσπάζεσθαι ἐν Κυρίφ (e.g. 1 Cor. xvi. 19).

3. $\tilde{\epsilon}\rho\rho\omega\sigma\theta\epsilon$] See the note Ephes. 21. $\tilde{\epsilon}\nu$ $\delta\mu\rho\nu\sigma\delta\alpha$ $\Theta\epsilon\sigma\hat{\nu}$] See above § 6 (note).

 ἀδιάκριτον] 'unwavering, steadfast'; comp. Trall. I ἄμωμον διάνοιαν καὶ ἀδιάκριτον, and see the note on Ephes. 3.

ος ἐστιν κ.τ.λ.] See above § 7 (according to the reading adopted), and compare the still stronger expressions, Trall. 11 τοῦ Θεοῦ ἔνωσιν ἐπαγγελλομένου, ὅς ἐστιν αὐτός, Ερhes. 14 τὰ δὲ δύο ἐν ἑνότητι γενόμενα Θεός ἐστιν. These parallels seem to show that the antecedent to ὅς is not ἀδιάκριτον πνεῦμα, but the whole sentence, more especially the exhortation to concord; since unity is the prominent idea in all these passages.

' AFTER leaving Magnesia the road leads to Tralles,' writes Strabo (xiv. 1, p. 648). Here again the route of the geographer accords with the sequence of the Ignatian letters (see above pp. 2, 97). As we have followed him from Ephesus to Magnesia, so now we follow him from Magnesia to Tralles. Magnesia is nearly equidistant between the two, being about fifteen miles from Ephesus, and about seventeen or eighteen from Tralles (Artemidorus in Strabo xiv. 2, p. 663, εἰς Τράλλεις ...είτ' είς Μαγνησίαν έκατὸν τετταράκοντα [στάδιοι], είς "Εφεσον δ' έκατὸν είκοσιν, είς δε Σμύρναν τριακόσιοι είκοσιν). The road between Magnesia and Tralles runs from west to east on the right bank of the Mæander, having the mountain range of Messogis to the north, and the river and plain to the south; 'a broiling and dusty journey,' 'aestuosa et pulverulenta via,' as it is described by Cicero (ad Att. v. 14) who travelled along it in the latter part of July, on his way to his province -about the same time of the year (Rom. 10) when the delegates of the churches must have been traversing it in the opposite direction to pay their respects to Ignatius. It is described by Artemidorus as 'a high-road trodden by all who make the journey from Ephesus to the East' (Strabo xiv. 2, p. 663, κοινή τις όδος τέτριπται απασι τοις έπὶ τὰς ἀνατολὰς ὁδοιποροῦσιν ἐξ Ἐφέσου). For a description of this road see Hamilton Asia Minor I. p. 533 sq.

The ancient city of Tralles was situated on the right bank of the river, at some distance from it, and occupied a square or oblong plateau with steep sides, a prolongation of the hills which jut out from the main range of Messogis. It thus formed a strong natural fortress (Strabo xiv. 1, p. 648, ἴδρυται δ' ἡ μὲν τῶν Τραλλιανῶν πόλις ἐπὶ τραπεζίου τινὸς ἄκραν ἔχοντος ἐρυμνὴν καὶ τὰ κύκλῳ δ' ἱκανῶς εὐερκῆ). It is said to have owed its origin and its name to a colony of the Thracian Trallians (Strabo ¿. c. p. 649). Its modern representative is Güzel-Hissar or the Beautiful Castle, also designated Aidin from the province of which it is the capital, to distinguish it from other places which have the same name. Aidin Güzel-Hissar, which lies on the lower ground at the foot of the ancient city, is a large and flourishing town with a population variously estimated at from thirty-five or forty to sixty thousand people. It is the terminus of the Smyrna railway, and stands in the centre of a very fertile district, which has been described as the orchard of Asia Minor. Among its chief products now, as in ancient times (Athen. iii. p. 80), are figs and raisins for the Smyrna market.

Owing to its natural advantages Tralles was always a wealthy place. Attalus, the Pergamene king, whose magnificence passed into a proverb (Hor. Carm. i. 1. 12), had a famous palace here (Plin. N. H. xxxv. 49; see also the inscription on a coin, TPAN. ATTANOY, Mionnet Suppl. VII. p. 460), which under the Romans became the official residence of the high-priest of Tralles for the time being (Vitruv. ii. 8; comp. Boeckh C. I. G. 2934 [αρ]χιερατεύοντος). Somewhat later Cicero, in his defence of Flaccus, describes this city as 'gravis locuples ornata civitas.' Denouncing an obscure person, one Mæandrius, who claimed to represent the Trallians in their complaints against his client, he asks what had become of the illustrious names among their citizens; 'Ubi erant illi Pythodori¹, Aetideni, Lepisones, ceteri homines apud nos noti, inter suos nobiles? ubi illa magnifica et gloriosa ostentatio civitatis?" If they are content to put forward such a mean representative, he adds, then let them abate their pride, 'remittant spiritus, comprimant animos suos, sedent arrogantiam' (pro Flacc. 22, 23). Some years later Strabo speaks of Tralles as surpassed by no other city of Asia in the opulence of its principal inhabitants (l. c. συνοικείται καλώς εἴ τις ἄλλη τῶν κατὰ τὴν ᾿Ασίαν ὑπὸ εὐπόρων ἀνθρώπων), and in illustration of this fact he mentions that the Asiarchs or Presidents of the Games, who incurred great expenses in maintaining the splendour of their position, were constantly taken from its citizens. At the martyrdom of Polycarp the Asiarch Philippus, who presided, was a Trallian (Mart. Polyc. 12, 21). At the same time, while the chief citizens thus enjoyed high distinction at home, the lower population contributed to swell Pompeius. Julius Cæsar stripped him of his wealth in consequence, but he succeeded in again amassing as large a fortune as he had thus lost. His daughter was Queen of Pontus when Strabo wrote.

¹ This Pythodorus is mentioned also by Strabo (xiv. 1, p. 649). He had amassed a 'princely fortune' (βασιλικήν οὐσίαν) of more than 2000 talents, but unfortunately espoused the cause of the flood of greedy adventurers who sought their fortunes in the metropolis of the world and threatened to sweep away everything that was Roman in Rome (Juv. iii. 70). Altogether Tralles seems to have been a busy, thriving, purse-proud place, much given to display, and not altogether free from vulgarity. Cicero is not always as complimentary to this city, as it suited his purpose to be, when he was defending Flaccus¹.

When Cæsar landed in Asia after the battle of Pharsalia, the Trallians were not slow to pay their homage to success. A miracle sealed their allegiance. A statue of Cæsar had been erected in the temple of Victory at Tralles. A palm-tree shot up through the hard pavement at the base of the statue; and it is even said that the goldess herself turned round and looked upon the effigy of the conqueror (Caes. Bell. Civ. iii. 105, Plut. Vit. Caes. 47, Dion. Cass. xli. 61, Val. Max. i. 6. 12). Under Augustus, whom it regarded as its 'founder' (Bull. de Corr. Hellen. x. p. 516), the city took the name of Cæsarea. A boastful inscription speaks of it as 'the most splendid city of the Cæsarean Trallians' (Boeckh C. I. G. 2929 ή λαμπροτάτη Καισαρέων Τραλλιανών πόλις; comp. Lebas et Waddington Inscr. 600 a, Papers of American School at Athens 1. pp. 94, 113, Bull. de Corr. Hellen. x. p. 517). From this time forward till the end of the first Christian century the coins commonly bear the legend και capeων. Τραλλιανων, and sometimes even καιcapeων alone (Mionnet IV. p. 181 sq, Suppl. VII. p. 462 sq; comp. Eckhel Doctr. Num. III. p. 125). This loyalty to the emperors brought its return to the Trallians. During the reign of Augustus (about B.C. 26—24) the city was visited by an earthquake, a catastrophe to which this region was and is especially liable. The earthquakes at Tralles play a prominent part in the Sibylline Oracles (iii. 459, v. 287). On this occasion the destruction which it caused was very considerable (Strabo xii. p. 579 τὸ γυμνάσιον καὶ ἄλλα μέρη συνέπεσεν: Agathias ii. 17, p. 101, ἐσείσθη τε ἄπασα καὶ ἀνετράπη καὶ οὐδὲν αὐτῆς ὅ τι ἐσέσωστο: comp. C. I. G. 2923). The emperor however came to its relief and contributed largely to the rebuilding. It seems to have recovered rapidly from the effects of this calamity; for under Tiberius we find the Trallians competing with other great cities of Asia for the honour of erecting a temple to the emperor and senate, but they were passed over as parum validi (Tac. Ann. iv. 55)2.

flourishing cities of Asia Minor, such as Tralles or Ephesus.

The patron deity of the city was Zeus (C. I. G. 2026 της λαμπροτάτης πόλεως...ίερας του Διός; comp. Bull. de Corr. Hellen. x. p. 516) surnamed Larasius (Mionnet IV. pp. 179, 183, Suppl. VII. pp. 462, 465, etc., Amer. School at Athens I. pp. 110, 112; comp. Bull. de Corr. Hellen. III. p. 468; comp. Waddington Inscr. 604), written also Larisius or Larisæus by Strabo (ix. p. 440, xiv. p. 649)—these latter modes of spelling being adopted apparently with a reference to tradition or the theory that Tralles was colonized from the Thessalian Larissa (Strabo ix. l. c. ἴσως δὲ καὶ ὁ Λαρίσιος Ζεὺς ἐκείθεν ἐπωνόμασται); and the highpriest already mentioned (p. 144) was doubtless the functionary of this god (Strabo xiv. l. c. έχων την ίερωσύνην τοῦ Διὸς τοῦ Λαρισαίου). But besides Zeus, we read also of the worship of Demeter (C. I. G. 2937 ίέρεια Δήμητρος), of Dionysus (C. I. G. 2019 Διονύσω Βακχίω τῷ δημοσίω; comp. ib. 2934), and of Æsculapius (Vitruv. vii. 1). Among the games celebrated at Tralles in honour of different deities are mentioned the Pythia (C. I. G. 2932, 2935, Mionnet IV. pp. 181, 192, 194; see Waddington Inscr. 598) and the Olympia (Wood's Discoveries at Ephesus Inscr. vi. 14, 20, pp. 60, 70, Mionnet ll. cc. etc.), as well as those bearing the name of Hercules (C. I. G. 2936 είν ἀέθλοισιν ἀταρβέ[os] Ἡρακλῆος; comp. Amer. School at Athens I. p. 110). The city boasted of several buildings, of whose architectural character notices have been preserved (Vitruv. ii. 8, v. 9, vii. 1, 4). Nor was it without distinction as the mother of famous men. Of orators, it boasted Dionysocles and Damasus who was nicknamed σκόμβρος (Strabo xiv. p. 649), both doubtless representatives of the affected and florid Asiatic style, for which indeed this city was famous (Cic. Orator 234 'quasi vero Trallianus fuerit Demosthenes'). It had also an illustrious school of physicians, of whom two are mentioned by name, Philippus and Thessalus (Galen Op. XIII. p. 105, XIV. p. 684; comp. C. I. L. 1. 1256). At the time when Ignatius wrote, Tralles was represented in literature by a living writer, Phlegon, the freedman of Hadrian, whose works have partially survived the wreck of time (Müller Fragm. Hist. Graec. III. p. 603 sq), but whose fame this interpretation may, I think, be questioned. When we read just below 'paulum addubitatum, quod Halicarnassii mille et ducentos per annos nullo motu terrae mutavisse sedes suas, vivoque in saxo fundamenta templi adseveraverant,' we are led to suspect that parum validi refers to the insecurity of the ground owing to earthquakes. Laodicea, which was also set aside on this occasion for the same reason as Tralles, is elsewhere commemorated for its wealth (Tac. Ann. xiv. 27, see Colossians pp. 6 sq, 43 sq); and Tralles itself must have been very flourishing at this time. On the other hand both localities were a prey to earthquakes. chiefly rests on the fact that he is quoted by Christian writers as a heathen witness to the præternatural darkness which shrouded the Crucifixion (Müller l.c. p. 606 sq). At a much later date Tralles gave birth to an illustrious son, who has left to posterity a far more impressive memorial of himself than these third-rate literary efforts, Anthemius, the architect of S. Sophia at Constantinople (Procop. de Ædif. i. 1, p. 174 ed. Bonn.). Altogether Tralles was invested with sufficient interest in herself and her history to induce two authors at different times, Apollonius of the neighbouring Aphrodisias (Müller Fragm. Hist. Graec. IV. p. 310 $\Pi\epsilon\rho$ $\Gamma\rho\alpha\lambda\lambda\epsilon\omega\nu$) and Christodorus of the Egyptian Coptos (ib. p. 360 $\Pi\acute{a}\tau\rho\iota\alpha$ $T\rho\alpha\lambda\lambda\dot{\epsilon}\omega\nu$), to take it as the subject of their writings.

Of the evangelization of Tralles no record is preserved¹; but the hypothetical account which has been given of the foundation of the Church in Magnesia (p. 102) will probably hold good for this neighbouring city also. We can hardly doubt that it owed its first knowledge of the Gospel to the disciples of S. Paul. Lying on the highroad between Ephesus and Laodicea, where flourishing churches were established through the agency of this Apostle almost half a century before Ignatius wrote, Tralles would not have been allowed for any long time to remain ignorant of the Gospel. This epistle however contains the earliest notice of Christianity in connexion with Tralles.

'Sub idem fere tempus,' writes Livy, describing the Roman conquest of these regions (xxxvii. 45), 'et ab Trallibus et a Magnesia quae super Maeandrum est et ab Epheso legati...venerunt.' The words would apply equally well to the incidents of the Christian conquest. These same three cities sent their delegates to meet Ignatius at Smyrna; but, while Ephesus and Magnesia were each represented by several persons (see above pp. 15, 102), Tralles, as being more distant, was content with sending a single representative, its bishop Polybius (§ 1). At least no mention is made of any other name. The Epistle to the Trallians is written by the saint in grateful recognition of the attention thus shown to him through their bishop, whose grave and gentle demeanour he praises (§§ 1, 3).

The main purport of the letter is a warning against the poison of Docetism (§§ 6—11). As an antidote he recommends here, as elsedation in fact, that a Philip, more probably however the Apostle than the Evangelist, resided in proconsular Asia; see Colossians p. 45 sq.

The Greek books (Oct. 11) represent Philip the Evangelist, whom they identify with the Apostle, as the founder and first bishop of the Church of Tralles (Τράλλη, Μεπæa). The story has this slender foun-

where, union among themselves, and submission to the bishop and other officers of the Church (§§ 2, 3, 7, 11, 12, 13). The denunciation of Docetism is fuller and more explicit in this than in any other of his letters. On the other hand no allusion is made to the Judaic side of the heresy; but a comparison with his language elsewhere shows these false teachers to have been Judaizers also (see the notes, Magn. 8, 9, 11, Philad. inscr., 5, 8, Trall. 9). He acquits the Trallians indeed of any complicity in this heresy hitherto, but he writes to put them on their guard (§ 8). Nor would the caution be unneeded. We might safely have assumed that in a busy thriving city like Tralles, situated in a district where Jews abounded (see Colossians p. 19 sq), there would be a considerable Jewish population which would act as a conductor to this heretical teaching, even if we had no direct information of the fact. A document published by Josephus however (Ant. xiv. 10. 20) mentions the opposition of the Trallians to an ordinance of the Roman governor giving permission to the Jews to keep their sabbaths and to celebrate other sacred rites without interruption; and, whether this document be genuine or not, it is satisfactory evidence of their presence in Tralles in considerable numbers before the age of Ignatius. The interest moreover which the Sibylline Oracles take in Tralles (see above p. 145) points in the same direction1.

Tralles does not occupy any prominent place in the subsequent history of Christianity; but like Magnesia, it is represented from time to time at the great synods of the Church. At the Council of Ephesus the bishop of Tralles records his assent to the orthodox doctrine in explicit terms (Labb. Conc. III. p. 1024 sq, ed. Colet). He signs his name in a way which furnishes an instructive parallel to the opening of the Ignatian letters; 'Hρακλέων, ὁ καὶ Θεόφιλος, ἐπέγραψα (ib. p. 1080; comp. p. 1222, where the second name is written in Latin Theophanius: elsewhere he gives his first name only, III. pp. 996, 1024, IV. p. 1135). At a later meeting held at Ephesus, the notorious Robbers' Synod, A.D. 449, Maximus bishop of Tralles commits himself to the opinions of the majority and to the heresy of Eutyches (IV. p. 894, III7, II78, II87); but he appears afterwards to have recanted, for his assent to the decrees of Chalcedon (A. D. 451) is attested in his absence by his metropolitan, the bishop of Ephesus (IV. p. 1503).

1 May not the unidentified מרלום (Tarlusa or Tralusa), which is mentioned in the Jerusalem Talmud Taanith iv. 8, be our Tralles? The incident which took place at Tarlusa is elsewhere placed at 715. May not this Lud be Lydia, rather than Lydda as Neubauer (Glogr. du Talm. pp. 80, 268) takes it? Tralles is sometimes spoken of as a Lydian city by classical writers, Amongst the letters of remonstrance addressed to Peter the Fuller, and purporting to have been written a few years after the Council of Chalcedon, is one bearing the name of Asclepiades bishop of Tralles (v. p. 241 sq). At later Councils of the Church also bishops of Tralles were present.

The following is an analysis of the epistle.

'IGNATIUS to the CHURCH OF TRALLES, which has peace through the Passion of Christ, an apostolic and hearty greeting.'

'Polybius your bishop informed me of your blameless disposition. Seeing him, I seemed to see you all, and I glorified God for your kindness in sending him (§ 1). Be obedient to your bishop, if you would live after Christ. Submit also to the presbyters. The deacons too must strive to please all men and avoid offence (§ 2). Let all reverence the deacons in turn, as also the bishop and the presbyters. I am persuaded you do so; for I have received a token of your love in your bishop, whose gravity and gentleness must command the respect of all (§ 3). I fear lest I should fall through spiritual pride. I wish to suffer, but I know not whether I am worthy. I lack gentleness (§ 4). Though I could reveal the mysteries of the heavens, yet I forbear for your sakes. Notwithstanding my fetters and my knowledge of heavenly things, I am not yet a disciple (§ 5). I beseech you, touch not the rank weeds of heresy. The cup of poison is sweetened with honey to deceive you (§ 6). Shun these false teachers and cling to Christ and to your bishop. Whosoever stands aloof from the altar is not pure (§ 7). I say this by way of warning. Strengthen yourselves with faith and love, which are Christ's flesh and blood. Give no occasion to the heathen to blaspheme (§ 8). Turn a deaf ear to the seducer. Christ was truly born, truly lived, truly died, and truly rose again, even as He will truly raise us (§ 9). If all this had been mere semblance, as these men say, why am I in bonds? Why am I ready to fight with wild beasts (§ 10)? Avoid these rank growths which are not of the Father's planting. They are no true branches of the Cross. The head cannot exist without the members (§ 11).

'I greet you from Smyrna. I appeal to you by my bonds; be united and submit to your bishop and presbyters. Pray for me that I may attain my desire (§ 12). The Smyrnæans and Ephesians greet you. Pray for the Church in Syria. Once more, be obedient to your bishop and presbyters. I am devoted to you. I am in peril now, but God will answer my prayer. May you be found blameless in Him (§ 13).'

προς τραλλιανογς] Steph. Byz. s. v. says of this city τὸ ἐθνικὸν Τραλλιανός, and the statement is fully confirmed by evidence of all kinds. It is the only form on the coins, even to the latest date (Mionnet IV. p. 178 sq, Suppl. VII. p. 439 sq). It alone occurs in inscriptions, whether Greek (C.I.G. 2926, 2929, 2935) or Latin (Orell. Inscr. 5298, 6232); nor does any other form appear to be found in any classical writer, either Greek or Latin. Boeckh indeed supposes that there was also a form Tραλλεῖs (C. I. G. II. p. 584, comp. III. p. 30), but his own data do not bear him out. The form Τραλλείς is indeed found elsewhere (see Schmidt-Alberti Hesych. Lex. IV. p. 168), but it refers to a Thracian people. So again Τράλλιοι occurs (see Steph. Byz. s. v. Τραλλία), but it denotes the inhabitants of the Bithynian town Trallium. Pearson again (ad loc.) is wrong in saying 'Cives etiam ab antiquis Latinis Tralles dicebantur, ut a Varrone apud Apuleium': Varro personifies the city Tralles itself, Apul. Apol. 42 'Trallibus de eventu Mithridatici belli magica percontatione consulentibus.' The word is most commonly spelled $T\rho a\lambda \lambda \iota a\nu \acute{o}s$, but it occurs sometimes with a single λ ; e.g. Mionnet IV. p. 187, Suppl. VII. p. 472. In the edict of Diocletian it is written indifferently $T\rho a\lambda \lambda \iota a\nu \acute{o}s$ and $T\rho a\lambda \iota a\nu \acute{o}s$, Corp. Inser. Lat. III. pp. 1191, 1193.

On the other hand there is the greatest variety in the title of this Ignatian Epistle. The Greek of the genuine Ignatius and the Latin of the interpolator have the common form Tpaliavoi, Tralliani; while conversely the Greek of the interpolator and the Latin of the genuine Ignatius read instead Τραλλήσιοι, Tralesii. Jerome again refers to it as ad Trallenses (Vir. Ill. 16); in the Parall. Rupef., ascribed wrongly to John of Damascus (Op. II. p. 772, Lequien), it is entitled $\pi \rho \hat{o}s$ T $\rho a\lambda \lambda a \epsilon \hat{i}s$; and in the Pseudo-Ignatian Epistle Antioch. 13 the form seems to be Generally however the Τραλλαίοι. correct form is given. So for instance Theodt. Dial. I (IV. p. 51 ed. Schulze), Chron. Pasch. I. p. 417 (ed. Bonn.), Sever. Ant. Fragm. (preserved in the Syriac; see I. p. 171). So too the Greek translator of Jerome (Vir. Ill. 1. c.). It is clearly also the form which underlies the Armenian title of the epistle. On the other hand the fragments of the Syriac Version (see III. pp. 678, 682) give and by, and by, 'Titiliyu.' These words are obviously corrupt; but possibly they stand for alliyu,' which cannot have been derived from Tpalλιανοί and might represent Τράλλιοι, but probably was invented by the Syriac transcriber or translator himself. These facts show that the present heading of the Greek Ignatius, Tpaλιανοίς 'Ιγνάτιος, is very much later than the epistle itself, and has no authority whatever. I have therefore substituted a title which conforms to the others.

IGNATIUS, called also Theophorus, to the CHURCH OF THE TRALLIANS, beloved of God, and having peace through the passion of Christ, hearty greeting after the Apostolic fashion.

I. $\Theta\epsilon\hat{\varphi}$ πατρὶ] On this dative, which stands for $\hat{v}\pi\hat{o}$ $\Theta\epsilon\hat{o}\hat{v}$ πατρός but does not, like it, directly describe the agent, so much as the person interested, see Winer Gramm. § lxxxi. p. 274 (ed. Moulton), Kühner § 423 (II. p. 368 sq); comp. Neh. xiii. 26 ἀγαπώμενος τῷ $\Theta\epsilon\hat{\varphi}$.

2. ἐν Τράλλεσιν] The plural form Τράλλεις is by far the most common name of this city, not only in Greek, but also in Latin (e.g. Juv. Sat. iii. 70; Orell. Inscr. 321, quoted below; C. I. L. III. 144). Very rarely however the singular Τράλλις is found:

e.g. C. I. G. 2936 πόλιος δ' ἐγέρηρέ με δῆμος Τράλλεος εἰν ἀέθλοισιν κ.τ.λ., Inscr. in Agath. Hist. ii. 17 (p. 102, ed. Bonn.) ἄρθωσε Τράλλιν τὰν τότε κεκλιμέναν, Orac. Sib. iii. 459 Τράλλις δ' ἡ γείτων Ἐφέσου, ib. v. 289 πολυήρατε Τράλλις (see C. I. G. II. pp. 557, III9), comp. Bekker Anecd. p. 1193 Τράλλις, Τράλλιος: and so in Latin, Plin. N. H. v. 29.

3. τη̂s 'Aσίαs The Roman province of 'Asia' is meant; comp. Orell. Inscr. 132 'Natus in egregiis Trallibus ex Asia,' Agath. Hist. ii. 17 (p. 100) Τράλλεις ή πόλις ή έν τῆ 'Ασία νῦν καλουμένη χώρα; comp. Strabo xiv. I (p. 649). It is therefore a political designation. Ethnographically or topographically, Tralles was assigned sometimes to Lydia (Steph. Byz. s. v.), sometimes to Caria (Plin. N. H. v. 29, Ptol. v. 2), sometimes to Ionia (Diod. Sic. xiv. 36, Mionnet Suppl. VII. p. 477). Probably this last was the designation which the Trallians most affected, as neither Lydians nor Carians stood in very high repute (Cic. pro Flacc. 27). For similar instances of various ethnological attributions in the case of towns in this neighbourhood see Colossians p. 17 sq. The addition $\tau \hat{\eta} s$ 'Aoías is not quite so superfluous here as in other cases (e.g. Ephes. inscr.; see the note there), since there were other places bearing similar or identical names, e.g. Τράλλης in Phrygia, Τράλλις in Caria, Τραλλία or Τράλλεις in Illyria; see Benseler-Pape Wörterb. d. Griech. Eigenn. s. vv. But our Tralles was far the most important of them all.

churches in 1 Pet. v. 13 (συνεκλεκτή), 2 Joh. 1, 13. So also ἐκλεκτοί, ἐκλεκτον γένος, of Christians generally, 1 Pet. i. 1, ii. 9. On this meaning of 'election,' as distinguished from its more restricted sense, see the note on Colossians iii. 12.

άξιοθέφ] Like other compounds of άξιος, a favourite word with Ignatius; Magn. 2, Rom. inscr., I, Smyrn. 12. In Rom. inscr. it is applied to a church as here; in all the other examples, to individuals.

έν σαρκί κ.τ.λ.] The existing Greek text έν σαρκὶ καὶ αἵματι τῷ πάθει Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ κ.τ.λ. can hardly stand; and I have thought it best to adopt from the interpolator's text πνεύματι for αἵματι. There is the same confusion of πνεύματι and αίματι in the authorities in Smyrn. 3. With this reading we have the common Ignatian combination 'flesh and spirit'; see the note on Ephes. 10, and comp. especially the opening addresses in Magn. Ι ένωσιν εύχομαι σαρκός καὶ πνεύματος, Rom. inscr. κατά σάρκα καὶ πνεθμα ἡνωμένοις κ.τ.λ., Smyrn. Ι καθηλωμένους έν τῷ σταυρῷ ...σαρκί τε καὶ πνεύματι.

έν τῷ πληρώματι] 'in the pleroma,' the sphere of the Divine graces. It is no mundane salutation which the writer sends; see the note on Magn. 15 ἐν τιμῆ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. For the sense of $\pi \lambda \eta \rho \omega \mu a$ see the note on. Ephes. inscr. Other explanations, such as 'in the whole body of the Trallian Church' (Smith ad loc.), or 'in the plenitude of Apostolic power' (Bunsen Br. p. 139, interpreting it by what follows), or 'in the fulness of Christian good wishes' (Zahn I. v. A. p. 416), seem to be excluded by the use of the word or by the grammar of the sentence.

3. ἐν ἀποστολικῷ κ.τ.λ.] 'after the manner of the Apostles.' It is a salutation which followed the precedent set in the Apostolic epistles. Another interpretation is 'in my Apostolic character or office' e.g. Vedel. ad

6. οὐ κατὰ χρησιν κ.τ.λ.] 'not from habit but by nature'; comp. Ephes. Ι δ κέκτησθε φύσει...τὸ συγγενικὸν έργον, Barnab. For the opposition of φύσις and χρησις see Plut. Mor. 1115 F, 1116 A; comp. the passages in Jahn's Methodius p. 124. The same contrast is represented elsewhere as between φύσις and aoknows (Plut. Mor. 226 A); between φύσις and παιδεία (Plut. Vit. Them. 2); between φύσις and έθος (e.g. Arist. Rhet. i. 11, p. 1370, Plut. Mor. 132 A); between diois and τροφή (Plat. Tim. 20 A, Legg. 961 B); between φύσις and θέσις (Macar. Magn. iii. 13, iv. 26); etc. This is one of those passages in which the language of Ignatius takes a Gnostic tinge; see Iren. i. 6. 4 ήμας μεν γάρ έν χρήσει την χάριν λαμβάνειν λέγουσι...αὐτοὺς δὲ ἰδιόκτητον...ἔχειν την χάριν: comp. Clem. Alex. Strom. ii. 3 (p. 433). The interpolator has κτησιν, where φύσιν stands in the text of the genuine Ignatius, and the passage of Irenæus might seem to favour this. But the alteration was doubtless made to obtain the commoner antithesis of χρησις and κτήσις (e.g. Philo Leg. ad Cai. 2, II. p. 547), 'temporary occupation' and 'absolute possession,' 'usus' and 'mancipium'; comp. 12. ἐν ὧ κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'if we live in Him now, we shall be found in Him hereafter.' But in order to get this sense it seems necessary to insert έν αὐτῷ, which appears in the interpolator's text. The words without this addition can hardly have this meaning, since ἐν ῷ cannot well be made to do double duty. If, intending this sense, Ignatius omitted èv αὖτῷ, we must regard this as an illustration of the hasty writing in which these epistles abound and which is explained by the circumstances of the writer (see above, pp. 28, 110, 159). An alternative would be to read the conjunctive, έν ὧ διάγοντες εύρεθησώ- $\mu \epsilon \theta a$ 'in whom may we be found living'; but the existence of a future conjunctive is very questionable (see Winer Gramm. xiii. p. 89), and our Greek authorities here do not countenance it. So too in Rom. 4 iva... εύρεθήσομαι (not ἵνα...εύρεθήσωμαι) is substituted by the interpolator for ΐνα...γένωμαι of Ignatius. In I Cor. xiii. 3 the authorities show that the alternative is between the fut. indic. ΐνα καυθήσομαι (not ΐνα καυθήσωμαι) and the conj. aor. ΐνα καυχήσωμαι.

I. $\delta \epsilon \hat{\imath} \delta \hat{\epsilon} \kappa \alpha \hat{\imath} \kappa \tau \lambda$.] This is not an injunction of obedience due to the deacons, as the preceding sentence might suggest, but a statement of requirements from them, as the following words clearly show. Not their claims, but their duties, are enforced.

τούς διακόνους όντας κ.τ.λ.] 'those who are deacons (ministers) of the mysteries of Jesus Christ.' assertion is justified by what follows, οὐ γὰρ βρωμάτων κ.τ.λ. The reference here is to the deacons, and not (as some have supposed) to the presbyters. See Smyrn. 10 ώs διακόνους Θεοῦ [Χριστοῦ], Polyc. Phil. 5 όμοίως διάκονοι ἄμεμπτοι...ώς Θεοῦ καὶ Χριστού διάκονοι καὶ οὐκ ἀνθρώπων. Comp. I Cor. iv. I ώς ύπηρέτας Χριστοῦ καὶ οἰκονόμους μυστηρίων Θεοῦ, which passage seems to have influenced the expressions here. In a later writer διακόνους μυστηρίων would probably refer to their attendance on the priest when officiating at the eucharist. But such a restriction of $\mu\nu\sigma\tau\eta\rho i\omega\nu$ would be an anachronism in Ignatius. He apparently uses the word in the same wide sense in which it is used by S. Paul, 'revealed truths.'

 κατὰ πάντα] According to S. Paul's example, I Cor. x. 33 καθώς κάγὼ πάντα πᾶσιν ἀρέσκω.

3. βρωμάτων κ.π.λ.] See Rom. xiv. 17, Col. ii. 16, Heb. ix. 10. The diaconate was originally instituted διακονεῖν τραπέζαις (Acts vi. 2); and these less spiritual duties of the office, such as the distribution of alms, the arrangement of the agape, and the like, tended to engross the interests of the deacon (1 Tim. iii. 8 sq). He needed therefore to be reminded that the diaconate had a higher aspect also. The mode of expression here may have been suggested by Rom. xiv. 17.

κλησίας Θεοῦ ὑπηρέται· δέον οὖν αὐτοὺς φυλάσσεσθαι 5 τὰ ἐγκλήματα ὡς πῦρ.

III. 'Ομοίως πάντες έντρεπέσθωσαν τοὺς διακόνους ώς 'Ιησοῦν Χριστόν, ώς καὶ τὸν ἐπίσκοπον ὄντα τύπον existentem filium patris L; a diaconis sicut a iesu christo et ab episcopo qui est in forma (אספושם) patris S1 (for אספום see the note on Magn. 6); a diaconis sicut a iesu christo et ab episcopo sicut a patre deo A; αὐτοὺς [i.e. τοὺς διακόνους] ώς χριστόν Ιησούν, οῦ φύλακές είσιν τοῦ τόπου, ὡς καὶ ὁ ἐπίσκοπος τοῦ πατρὸς τῶν όλων τύπος ὑπάρχει g; τοὺς διακόνους ὡς ἰησοῦν χριστὸν καὶ τὸν ἐπίσκοπον ὡς τὸν πατέρα Antioch. Comparing these authorities we arrive at these results. (1) In the first clause we must reject the reading of L ώς έντολην ίησοῦ χριστοῦ, as standing alone against all the others (GS, Ag Antioch) which support the simple ώς ἰησοῦν χριστον (g however transposing and reading χριστον ίησοῦν, but dominum iesum christum 1). (2) In the second clause the corrupt viòv of GL must certainly be rejected in favour of τύπον, which appears in Sg and is loosely paraphrased in A Antioch. (3) The second ws is somewhat awkward, and the sentence would gain by its rejection or transposition, καὶ τὸν ἐπίσκοπον ώς ὄντα τύπον κ.τ.λ. (or in this case we might perhaps read ωs ἔντυπον for ως ὄντα υίὸν, as nearer to the traces of the MS); but it appears in this place in Gg, while on the other hand the versions are not of much account in such a case. It ought probably therefore to be retained, as it is capable of explanation. (4) For an account of the anomalous reading of L in both clauses see the lower note.

4. αὖτοὺς φυλάσσεσθαι κ.τ λ.] It is S. Paul's injunction also, that the deacons should be ἀνέγκλητοι, I Tim. iii. 10; comp. Polyc. Phil. 5, Apost. Const. ii. 10, viii. 18. The reading αὐτῶν is condemned by the authorities even in the interpolator's text, and it interferes with the sense.

III. 'At the same time let the laity pay respect to the deacons as to Jesus Christ, while they reverence the bishop as the type of God the Father and the presbyters as the representatives of the Apostles. Without these three orders no body of men deserves the name of a Church. This rule, I am persuaded, you follow; for I have with me a pattern of your love in the person of your bishop, whose gentle demeanour is in itself a powerful lesson. Even the godless heathen must reverence him. I spare you for the love I have towards you. Though I might have written more strongly, I forbear; nor do I venture, being a convict, to command you as if I were an Apostle.'

6. 'Oµoίωs'] As the deacons are required to consult the wishes of the laity, so in like manner must the laity pay respect to the deacons. For this reciprocation introduced by $\delta\mu$ oίωs, even where the duty is not identical, comp. I Pet. iii. 7. The π άντες here corresponds to the π âσιν of the preceding sentence. As the deacons have duties towards all, so they claim respect from all.

7. ως Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν] This startling comparison of the deacon to Jesus Christ rests on the assumption that the relations of the deacon to the bishop are analogous to those

See also the note on Magn. 6.

The preponderance of authority seems to show very decidedly that this is the original text. But if so, how can we account for the reading of the Latin translator? It is probably to be explained as having arisen from a combination of two readings, τούς διακόνους ώς έντολην Ίησοῦ Χριστοῦ and τοὺς διακόνους ώς Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν. The former of these was probably in the first instance a marginal illustration taken from another passage, Smyrn. 8 τούς δὲ διακόνους ἐντρέπεσθε ώς Θεοῦ ἐν- $\tau \circ \lambda \dot{\eta} \nu$, or an emendation suggested by this parallel. It would then displace the original reading ώς Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν in the text; and this latter would be inserted just below, where it seemed to be required, the corrupt reading ὄντα υίὸν (for ὄντα τύπον) having set the transcriber on the wrong track.

ωs καὶ τὸν ἐπίσκοπον κ.τ.λ.] The sentence would be rendered much smoother, if ωs were transposed and placed before σντα τύπον. As the text of this epistle here and in the immediate neighbourhood (see below ἀγαπῶν ὑμᾶς κ.τ.λ.) has been much tumbled about, such a change would perhaps be justifiable. I have preferred however to retain it in the place where it is found in most authorities, because it thus introduces the analogy of the relation between Jesus Christ and the Father as explaining the previous injunction.

Magn. 6 είς τύπον Θεοῦ.

1. ως συνέδριον κ.τ.λ.] 'as the council of God and (as) the band of the Apostles.' As the bishop sits in the place of God, so too the corona of presbyters (Magn. 13) is compared to the company of the Apostles, seated, as it were, on thrones encircling the Eternal Throne. The terrestrial hierarchy is thus a copy of the celestial; comp. Rev. iv. 4 κυκλόθεν του θρόνου θρόνοι είκοσι τέσσαρες καὶ ἐπὶ τοὺς θρόνους εἴκοσι τέσσαρας πρεσβυτέρους καθημένους (comp. vii. 11). The συνέδριον τοῦ Θεοῦ is defined by σύνδεσμον των ἀποστόλων; and the second ws, which is discredited by external authority, interferes somewhat with the sense. On this comparison of the presbyters to the Apostles, and on the arrangement in the early Church which suggested it, see the notes on Magn. 6 συνέδριον των αποστόλων, ib. 13 στεφάνου τοῦ πρεσβυτερίου. For this concrete sense of σύνδεσμος, signifying an aggregate and so either 'a bundle' of letters or 'a band' of persons, see the note on Colossians iii. 14. It occurs with γὰρ ἐξεμπλάριον τῆς ἀγάπης ὑμῶν ἔλαβον καὶ ἔχω 5 μεθ' ἑαυτοῦ ἐν τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ ὑμῶν, οὖ αὐτὸ τὸ κατάστημα μεγάλη μαθητεία, ἡ δὲ πραότης αὐτοῦ δύναμις· much the same meaning as here, though in a bad sense 'a confederacy, a conspiracy,' in 2 Kings xi. 14, xii. 20, Jer. xi. 9.

It will thus appear that both the comparison of the deacons to Jesus Christ and that of the presbyters to the Apostles flow naturally, though in separate channels, from the idea of the bishop as the type of God. But the combined result is incongruous, for the presbyters are made to occupy a lower place in the comparison than the deacons. We may suppose therefore that the last clause τοὺς δὲ πρεσβυτέρους κ.τ.λ. was added as an afterthought by Ignatius, without noticing the incongruity. This is only one among many indications of extreme haste, to be explained by the circumstances under which these letters were written (Rom. 5).

2. χωρὶς τούτων κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'Without these three orders no church has a title to the name, deserves to be called a church'. This seems to be the meaning of οὐ καλεῖται, 'is not spoken of', 'is not recognised', as in Heb. iii. 13 ἄχρις οὖ τὸ σήμερον καλεῖται; comp. Polyc. 7 ὁς δυνήσεται θεοδρόμος καλεῖσθαι, Magn. 14 ὅθεν οὐκ ἄξιός εἰμι καλεῖσθαι.

της ἀγάπης ὑμῶν] This is treated by Jacobson as a mere complimentary form of address, like 'dilectio vestra,' ἡ εὐσέβεια ὑμῶν, 'your grace,' 'your holiness,' and the like. Pearson explains § 13 ἡ ἀγάπη Σμυρναίων and Smyrn. 12 ἡ ἀγάπη τῶν ἀδελφῶν (comp. Philad. 11) similarly. Any such usage however would be an anachronism here. For ἡ ἀγάπη ὑμῶν comp. Rom. 1, 9. Polybius was an illustration of their affection for the martyr.

5. ἐαυτοῦ] For ἐμαυτοῦ; see Winer Gramm. xxii. p. 188.

The derivation suggests, though it does not require, the idea of 'composure,' 'quietude,' 'staidness' (comp. Orig. c. Cels. iii. 80 τὸ τῆς σαρκὸς εὐσταθές κατάστημα); and hence καταστηματικός signifies 'of calm demeanour,' as in Plut. Vit. Tib. Gracch. 2 idéa προσώπου καὶ βλέμματι καὶ κινήματι πρᾶος καὶ καταστηματικός ήν. See Wetstein on Tit. ii. 3, where κατάστημα occurs. The view of Hammond (on Tit. ii. 3), that κατάστημα signifies rank, office (from καθιστάναι 'to appoint,' Acts vi. 3, Tit. i. 5), is destitute of support from usage.

language which Ignatius uses respecting Onesimus of Ephesus (Ephes. 6)

όν λογίζομαι καὶ τοὺς ἀθέους ἐντρέπεσθαι. ἀγαπῶν ὑμᾶς οὕτως φείδομαι, συντονώτερον δυνάμενος γράφειν ὑπὲρ τούτου [ἀλλ' οὐχ ἱκανὸν ἑαυτὸν] εἰς τοῦτο ϣήθην, ἵνα ὢν κατάκριτος ὡς ἀπόστολος ὑμῖν διατάσσωμαι.

τ ον] GLg*. There is a plural in A, which probably therefore read ων. This is a possible reading, but ἐντρέπεσθαι elsewhere in Ignatius takes an accus. (see the note on Magn. 6). ἀγαπῶν...ψήθην κ.τ.λ.] ἀγαπῶντας ὡς οὐ φείδομαι ἐαυτὸν πότερον δυνάμενος γράφειν ὑπὲρ τούτου εἰς τοῦτο ψήθην κ.τ.λ. G; diligentes quod non parco ipsum aliqualem potens scribere pro illo, in hoc existimer ut etc. L; eliam quoniam amo vos, parco vobis scribere vehementer et glorificare; sed et non sum sufficiens sicut apostolus praecipere vobis, quoniam vir aliquis condemnatus sum A; ἀγαπῶν ὑμᾶς φείδομαι συντονώτερον ἐπιστεῖλαι, ἵνα μὴ δόξω τισὶν εἶναι προσάντης ἡ ἐπιδεής κ.τ.λ. g. Here the text of GL is seriously corrupt. In attempting to restore the reading we may observe as follows: (1) The agreement of A and g establishes one unquestionable emendation; ἐαυτὸν πότερον is a corruption of συντονώτερον: see the lower note. (2) The coincidence of the same authorities shows that ἀγαπῶν is correct, and that the corruption is in -τας ὡς οὐ. Having regard to the sense as given in Ag,

I. τους αθέους] i.e. 'the heathen,' who were ἄθεοι ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ, Eph. ii. 12. See also Clem. Hom. xv. 4, Clem. Al. Protr. 4 (p. 52), Paed. iii. 11 (p. 300). Origen (c. Cels. i. 1, iii. 73) speaks of η $\mathring{a}\theta\epsilon os \pi o\lambda v\theta\epsilon \acute{o}\tau \eta s$; comp. Mart. Ign. Rom. 8. On the other hand, the Christians themselves were denounced by the heathen as $\mathring{a}\theta\epsilon\omega$, because they had no images or shrines or visible representations of deity; Mart. Polyc. 9 (comp. ib. 3), where the cry against Polycarp is αίρε τοὺς ἀθέους, which he himself, looking είς πάντα τον όχλον των έν τώ σταδίω ἀνόμων ἐθνῶν, catches up and repeats. See also Justin Apol. i. 6 (p. 56), ib. 13 (p. 60), Athenag. Suppl. 3, 4, 30, Clem. Alex. Strom. vii. 1 (p. 828 sq), Minuc. Octav. 8, Tertull. Apol. 10 sq; comp. Clement of Rome I. p. 34. Below, § 10, the epithet $\ddot{a}\theta\epsilon\omega$ seems to be applied to the Docetic teachers (see the note there).

2. συντονώτερον] 'more urgently';

comp. Polyc. 7 ὑμῶν τὸ σύντονον τῆς ἀληθείας. This emendation is much less violent than it seems at first sight, cүντονωτερον for εάγτο ποτερον (see the note on ἀλλ' οὐχ κ.τ.λ. just below). At all events the interpolator's text leaves no doubt about its correctness, as Pearson saw long ago.

3. ὑπὲρ τούτου] i.e. τοῦ ἐπισκόπου ὑμῶν, or possibly 'on this matter.'

ἀλλ' οὖχ κ.τ.λ.] The state of the text in the immediate neighbourhood (e.g. at the beginning of this chapter; see also § 4 οἱ γὰρ λέγοντες κ.τ.λ. and § 6 οἱ καὶ ἰῷ κ.τ.λ.) shows that the archetypal MS of GL must have been much worn and probably mutilated in this part. Accordingly I have sought to remedy the text here on the hypothesis that some words have dropped out. For ἑαντὸν see the note on ἑαντοῦ above. I have chosen this form (rather than ἐμαντὸν) here, because it better explains the corruption of συντονούτερον just

I have substituted $\dot{\nu}\mu\hat{a}s$ $o\ddot{\nu}\tau\omega s$. (3) These two authorities also seem to indicate that some words have dropped out, probably between $\dot{\nu}\pi\dot{e}\rho$ $\tau o\dot{\nu}\tau o\nu$ and $\dot{e}is$ $\tau o\ddot{\nu}\tau o\nu$. What these were it is impossible to say, owing to the capricious changes in g and the habitual laxity and constant omissions of A. I have hazarded a conjecture in accordance with the general sense of A. Hilgenfeld (Zeitschr. f. Wiss. Theol. XXI. p. 541 sq) has his own conjectural reading, but he does not seem to me to be on the right track.

The envy of the devil fights against me all the more, because it is unseen by many. So then I have every need of a gentle spirit, which defeats the prince of this world.'

It is generally supposed that Ignatius suppresses some words addressed to him such as μάρτυς έση (Smith ad loc., Uhlhorn p. 23, Zahn I. v. A. pp. 416, 572 sq); but there is no adequate reason for the suppression. With more probability Bunsen (Br. p. 121) supposes that the word μάρτυς has accidentally dropped out owing to the following μαστιγοῦσιν. It seems probable that the title here disclaimed by Ignatius would be that of a martyr or witness: comp. Euseb. H. E. v. 2 (quoted by the commentators here) εἴποτέ τις ἡμῶν δι' ἐπιστολης η δια λόγου μάρτυρας αὐτοὺς προσείπεν, ἐπέπλησσον πικρῶς ἡδέως γαρ παρεχώρουν την της μαρτυρίας προσηγορίαν τῷ Χριστῷ τῷ πιστῷ καὶ άληθινῷ μάρτυρι κ.τ.λ. Hilgenfeld (A. V. p. 204) suggests that the writer may refer to the name $\theta\epsilon o$ φόρος; but as this name implies obligation rather than renown, and as the writer of these epistles boldly claims it elsewhere, this suggestion has little to recommend it. Possibly the Syriac Version may preserve the true text, and we have only to add τοιαῦτα. Comp. Smyrn. 5 τί γάρ [με] ώφελεί, εί έμε έπαινεί τις, with the note.

I. τὸ γὰρ ζῆλος κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'the jealous opposition of Satan, who attempts to rob me of the crown of martyrdom'; comp. Rom. 5 μηθέν με ζηλώσαι τῶν ὁρατῶν καὶ τῶν ἀοράτων, ΐνα Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐπιτύχω, i.e. 'may no power of man or devil interpose through envy to prevent my finding Christ by martyrdom'. As these are the only places in Ignatius where ζηλος, ζηλοῦν, occur, it seems natural to explain the one passage by the other. The interpolator therefore correctly interprets the sense, when he adds τοῦ ἐχθροῦ after ζηλος. For the allusion see the next note. Other interpretations are; (1) 'My passionate desire, my excessive ambition, for martyrdom', as e.g. Voss p. 287, Smith p. 88, Jacobson ad loc., Dressel ad loc.; but the language of Ignatius elsewhere throughout suggests that he would consider such a passion as the reverse of blameworthy; (2) 'The opposition and ill-treatment from my guards' (Rom. 5), Nirschl p. 101; but I do not see how the connexion involved in $\gamma \hat{a} \rho$ can be explained on this hypothesis.

2. πολλοῖς μὲν οὐ φαίνεται] i.e. 'many fail to see this jealousy of Satan in its true colours, and so unconsciously abet him.' Ignatius is alluding, as I suppose, more especially to those Roman Christians who were desirous of obtaining a reversal of his sentence, and whose interposition he strongly deprecates in the letter to the Roman Church. He describes this interposition sometimes as a $\xi \hat{\eta} \lambda o s$ 'jealousy' (Rom. 5, quoted in the last note), sometimes as a βασκανία 'envy' (Rom. 7 βασκανία έν ύμιν μη κατοικείτω: comp. ib. 3 οὐδέποτε έβασκάνατε οὐδενί). It is a device of the devil who would effect his ruin, and he entreats the Christians of Rome not to ally themselves with the Evil One (Rom. 7 ὁ ἄρχων τοῦ αίωνος τούτου διαρπάσαι με βούλεται... μηδείς οὖν τῶν παρόντων ὑμῶν βοηθείτω αὐτῶ).

Hom. xix. 20, Hippol. p. 166 Lagarde. On this tendency of the later language to substitute the accusative for other cases, see the notes on Galatians v. 7, 26.

We want much, in order that God may not be wanting to us.'

6. μὴ νηπίοις κ.τ.λ.] Suggested by I Cor. iii. I, 2, οὐκ ἦδυνήθην λαλῆσαι ὑμῖν ὡς πνευματικοῖς, ἀλλ' ὡς σαρκίνοις, ὡς νηπίοις ἐν Χριστῷ' γάλα ὑμᾶς ἐπότισα, οὐ βρῶμα' οὔπω γὰρ ἐδύνασθε, χωρῆσαι] 'to take it in.' The word is used transitively again

Smyrn. 6.

8. στραγγαλωθήτε] 'be choked'. The word occurs Tobit ii. 3. Other forms are στραγγαλάω, στραγγαλίζω.

For the metaphor see Hieron. Epist. 84 (I. p. 525) 'ne parvuli atque lactentes solidioris cibi edulio suffocemur', Op. Imperf. in Matt. Hom. xxxviii (Chrysost. Op. VI. p. clxi) 'sicut enim infanti si dederis fragmentum panis, quoniam angustas habet fauces, offocatur magis quam nutritur; sic et homini imperfecto in fide et puero sensibus si altiora mysteria sapientiae volueris dicere, angustam habens fidem et sensum magis scandalizatur quam aedificatur' (comp. xlix, ib. p. ccv), passages quoted by Pearson (V. οὐ καθότι δέδεμαι] Comp. Ephes. 3 εἰ γὰρ καὶ δέδεμαι ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι, οὔπω ἀπήρτισμαι ἐν Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ νῦν γὰρ ἀρχὴν ἔχω τοῦ μαθητεύεσθαι. On the manner in which Ignatius regards his bonds, see the note there.

I. δύναμαι νοεῖν] 'am competent to understand'. For this expression comp. Hermas Sim. ix. 9, 14; so Eph. iii. 4 δύνασθε...νοῆσαι. Pearson saw that this must be substituted for δυνάμενος; and his opinion has been confirmed beyond question by the versions and citations discovered since. The change is not great; Δ ΥΝΑΜΕΝΟΕΙ for Δ ΥΝΑΜΕΝΟΕΙ (δύναμαι being written δύναμε).

Alex. Strom. vii. 2 (p. 833) ή μακαρία άγγελοθεσία καὶ δὴ μέχρις ἡμῶν αὐτων άλλοι ύπ' άλλοις έξ ένος και δι' ένος σωζόμενοί τε καὶ σώζοντες διατετάχαται. For τοποθεσία 'a topographical description' see Cic. ad Att. i. 13, 16. Just such a $\tau \circ \pi \circ \theta \in \sigma ia$ of the celestial hierarchy is given in the Test. Duod. Patr. Levi 3, where the different ranks of angels with their several names are distributed through the seven heavens. The large space which angelology occupied in Jewish and Christian speculation in the Apostolic age, appears from the incidental language of S. Paul; e.g. Ephes. i. 20, 21 ὑπεράνω πάσης ἀρχῆς καὶ έξουσίας καὶ δυνάμεως καὶ κυριότητος καὶ παντὸς ὀνόματος ὀνομαζομένου κ.τ.λ., Col. i. 16 τὰ ὁρατὰ καὶ τὰ ἀόρατα, είτε θρόνοι είτε κυριότητες είτε άρχαὶ είτε έξουσίαι, and the condemnation of θρησκεία τῶν ἀγγέλων Col. ii. 18. On this whole subject see the notes Colossians i. 16, ii. 18; and to the references there given add Papias (Routh Rel. Sacr. I. p. 14), Hermas Vis. iii. 4, and (for Jewish angelology) Gfrörer Fahrh. des Heils I. p. 357 sq. Eisenmenger Entd. Judenth. II. p. 374, Edersheim Life and Times of Fesus II. p. 748 sq. See also the discussion about angels in Orig. c. Cels. vi. 30 sq, especially c. 40, where Celsus brings this charge against the Christians, έωρακέναι παρά τισι λειπώμεθα] GLS, Sev-Syr; ἀπολειφθῶ [g]. The whole sentence πολλά... λειπώμεθα is thus translated in the Oriental versions; multum enim deficimus ne a deo destituamur S1; multum enim deficiens sum a perfectione quae digna est deo \(\Sigma\); sed quod valde deficiens sum a similitudine dei A. Thus \(\Sigma\)A seem to give loose paraphrases of the original Syriac rendering, which is preserved in S₁. After this sentence Σ has estate incolumes perfecte in patientia iesu christi dei nostri, which forms the conclusion of the Epistle to the Romans (see on Rom. 5 ἡ ἀγάπη GLS Ag; ἡ χάρις Dam-Rup I (see I Cor. xv. 10).

2. τàs συστάσεις κ.τ.λ.] 'the assemblages, musterings, of the heavenly rulers'; comp. έθνικαὶ συστάσεις, Polyb. xxiv. 1. 3, xxx. 10. 6. The apyoutes here, like the apyai in S. Paul, are angelic beings: comp. Justin Dial. 36 (p. 255) οἱ ἐν τοῖs ούρανοις ταχθέντες ύπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἄρχον-TES (quoted by Jacobson on Smyrn. 6). For ἀρχοντικὸς see Celsus in Orig. c. Cels. vi. 27 έτέρων δὲ τῶν λεγομένων ἀρχοντικών κ.τ.λ. (comp. § 33), from which it appears that in some systems of angelology ἀρχοντικοί denoted a particular class of the celestial hierarchy. Jacobson would translate συστάσεις 'the conflicts', comparing Ephes. 13 πόλεμος έπουρανίων καὶ ἐπιγείων, but such an idea seems to be quite inappropriate to this context. The word occurs again Rom. 5.

όρατά τε καὶ ἀόρατα] The knowledge previously mentioned (τὰ ἐπουpávia) has reference to the things invisible; but όρατα are also named here (after the precedent of S. Paul, Col. i. 16) for the sake of including all things which fall within the range of cognisance. So again in Smyrn, 6 (see the note). For όρατὰ καὶ ἀόρατα see also Rom. 5.

3. παρὰ τοῦτο] 'on this account': see Rom. 5 (with the note).

μαθητής είμι] See the notes on Ephes. 1, 3.

4. πολλά γάρ κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'we still lack much, that we may not be left behind by God, may not fail in finding God', where λείπεσθαι Θεοῦ is the negative of $\epsilon \pi \iota \tau \nu \chi \epsilon \hat{\iota} \nu \Theta \epsilon \circ \hat{\nu}$, a favourite Ignatian phrase (see the note on Magn. 1). For the construction here comp. Hermas Vis. iii. Ι σοὶ δὲ πολλὰ λείπει ἵνα κ.τ.λ.; and for the characteristic Ignatian play on λείπει, λειπώμεθα, see the note on Smyrn. 5 μαλλον δέ κ.τ.λ.

The renderings of the passage in the Oriental Versions are: eorum qui commiscent semetipsos in (cum) jesu christo S_1 ; jam commiscent semetipsos cum jesu christo A. They may have had simply οἱ καὶ παρεμπλέκουσιν and supplied the semetipsos to make sense. The rendering of L perhaps arises from a further corruption of the corrupt text of G, οικαιροιπαρεμπλέκουσιν being read οἱ καὶ ῥυπαρὶ ἐμπλέκουσιν;

1. $\tau \rho o \phi \hat{\eta}$] Comp. Rom. 7 οὐχ ήδο-

χρῆσθε] The imperatives, besides being better supported than the infinitives, are more in the manner of Ignatius, who prefers this mood with παρακαλεῖν; see below § 12 παρακαλεῖν ; see below § 12 παρακαλεῖν ; ωλιαμένετε, Rom. 4 παρακαλεῦ ὑμᾶς, μηλεν πράσσετε (where the infinitive πράσσετν has been substituted in some copies). So too παραινῶ with an imperative in Magn. 6. The exception is Polyc. I παρακαλῶ σε προσθεῖναι κ.τ.λ.

2. βοτάνης] Heresy or error is called βοτάνη, a rank weed, a noxious herb, again in Ephes. 10, Philad. 3. For the meaning of βοτάνη see the note on the former passage. In the Gospel of the Egyptians our Lord was reported as having said πᾶσαν φάγε βοτάνην, τὴν δὲ πικρίαν ἔχουσαν μὴ φάγης, Clem. Alex. Strom. iii. 9 (p. 541).

3. οἱ καὶ ἰῷ] This emendation involves a very simple change, καιιωι for καιροι. For the construction οἱ (i.e. οἱ αἰρετικοἱ understood from the preceding αἵρεσιs) comp. e.g. Thucyd. vi. 80 ἀπὸ Πελοποννήσου παρεσομένης ἀφελείας, οἱ τῶνδε κρείσσους εἰσὶ τὸ παράπαν, and see Kühner § 356, II.

p. 49 sq., Matthiæ § 435. For the metaphor of lós, as used here, comp. Hermas Sim. ix. 26, Clem. Hom. xix. 15 οὐχ ἐρπετῶν ὁ lòs εἰργάζετο, οὐ τῶν κακῶν βοτανῶν αὶ ἐνέργειαι, for the same connexion of words as here. Zahn refers to Iren. i. 27. 4 'Christi quidem Jesu nomen tanquam irritamentum proferentes, Simonis autem impietatem varie introducentes, mortificant multos...per dulcedinem et decorem nominis amarum et malignum principis apostasiae serpentis venenum porrigentes eis.'

παρεμπλέκουσιν 'infuse'. An objection has been raised to such an emendation as the one adopted on the ground that it 'vitio incongruae metaphorae laborat' (Churton in Pearson V. I. p. 103). If indeed the derivation of the word be scrutinized, we have in this expression 'interweave poison' a combination of metaphors as violent as e.g. in I Tim. νί. 19 ἀποθησαυρίζοντας θεμέλιον. Α liberty however might well be conceded to an inexperienced writer like Ignatius, which the greatest of modern poets has asserted, when he speaks of 'taking arms against a sea of troubles'. But usage entirely justifies the combination. It appears comp. Ephes. 16, where ρυπαρὸς is rendered inquinatus (the only passage where the word occurs in Ignatius). The paraphrase of g points to the true reading. Voss first suggested οι και loις, which some later editors have accepted. I have substituted lû for loις, as nearer to the traces of G, as corresponding to the singular in g, and as more natural in itself: see the lower note. καταξιοπιστευόμενοι] Dam-Rup (see the note on Ephes. 16 κακοδιδασκαλία); κατ' ἀξίαν πιστευόμενοι G; om. The renderings of AS₁ are paraphrases of καταξιοπιστευόμενοι.

that the words παρεμπλέκειν, παρεμπλοκή, were employed especially in this connexion, as medicinal or culinary terms; e.g. by the physician Diphilus of Siphnus in Athen. ii. p. 57 C οἱ στρόβιλοι...θώρακος καθαρτικοί διὰ τὸ ἔχειν παρεμπεπλεγμένον τὸ ρητινώδες, Agatharchides in Photius Bibl. ccl. 12 τούτου [τοῦ καρποῦ τοῦ παλιούρου συμμιγέντος κολλώδες μέν τὸ πᾶν πολύ μᾶλλον γίνεται, δοκεί δ' οἷον ήδύσματος ἢ παρεμπλοκῆς τάξιν έχειν. The more common words however in this sense in medical writers are the single compounds, παραπλέκειν, παραπλοκή; e.g. Galen Op. XIV. p. 168 (ed. Kühn) ίερας βοτάνης μικρόν τι παραπλέκων, ib. p. 367 δέονται της των στυφόντων παραπλοκης ...παραπλέκειν τι τῶν στυφόντων, ib. p. 398 στύρακα τὴν ὑγρὰν μίξας ἐλαίφ παράπλεκε, Sext. Empir. Pyrrh. i. 102 χυμῶν τινῶν παραπλοκή, Clem. Alex. Strom. i. I (p. 325) οἷον ήδυσμά έστιν παραπεπλεγμένον άθλητοῦ βρώματι. See also Macar. Thus the language here will have a parallel in the somewhat elaborate medical metaphor of Polyc. 2. The verb παρεμπλέκειν occurs in other connexions in Clem. Hom. vi. 19 and ib. Ep. Clem. 5. καταξιοπιστευόμενοι 'imposing by their professions of honesty'; comp. Polyb. xii. 17. Ι ίνα δὲ μὴ δόξωμεν τῶν τηλικούτων ανδρών καταξιοπιστεύεσθαι, μνησθησόμεθα μιας παρατάξεως κ.τ.λ. For the bad sense of ἀξιόπιστος, 'specious, plausible', and so 'an impostor,' see the parallel passage Philad. 2 πολλοί γάρ λύκοι άξιόπιστοι ήδονη κακή αίχμαλωτίζουσιν τούς θεοδρόμους (with the note). From this comes the verb άξιοπιστεύεσθαι, which on the analogy of ἀσωτεύεσθαι, διαλεκτικεύεσθαι, περπερεύεσθαι, παραβολεύεσθαι, etc. (see the note on Philippians ii. 30), signifies 'to play the αξιόπιστος', 'to make loud professions of honesty'. It does not appear to occur in extant standard writers, but is recognised by Hesychius s. v. βρενθύεσθαι, θυμοῦσθαι, ὀργίζεσθαι, ἀξιοπιστεύεσθαι, and by Suidas s. v. αναπειστηρίαν, άξιοπιστεύονται δε οί διδάσκαλοι λέγοντες κ.τ.λ. (from the scholiast on Arist. Nub. 866). Hence the compound καταξιοπιστεύεσθαι, 'to overpower, or impose upon, by playing the part of an ἀξιόπιστος', on the analogy of καταλαζονεύεσθαι, κατανεανιεύεσθαι, κατασοβαρεύεσθαι, κατασωτεύεσθαι, κατειρωνεύεσθαι, κατεμβριθεύεσθαι, κατισχυρεύεσθαι, etc. There can be no doubt about the reading here, though it depends solely on the quotation in the Parall. Rupef.

I. οἰνομέλιτος 'wine mixed with honey'; comp. Polyb. xii. 2.7. Dioscorides (Mat. Med. v. 16) explains wherein it differs from οἶνος μελιτίτης, how it is made, and what are its medicinal qualities. For the idea in the text comp. Theoph. ad Autol. ii. 12 καθάπερ φάρμακόν τι δηλητήριον συγκραθέν μέλιτι η οίνω η έτέρω τινί το παν ποιεί βλαβερον κ.τ.λ., Anon. adv. Marc. i. 85 (Tertull. Op. 11. p. 783, Oehler) 'dulcique cruentum circumfert miseris mixtum cum melle venenum', Lactant. D. I. v. I 'incautos animos facile irretire possunt suavitate sermonis...mella sunt haec venenum tegentia...circumlinatur modo poculum caelesti melle sapientiae', Ephrem Syrus Op. Syr. II. p. 554 A 'et propinavit simplicibus amaritudines (venena) dulcedine commixtas' (speaking of the hymns of the heretic Bardesanes). Thus these impostors were mimicking genuine physicians, who disguised their curative drugs in the same way: Plut. Mor. p. 13 D λατρολ τὰ πικρὰ τῶν Φαρμάκων τοῖς γλυκέσι χυμοίς καταμιγνύντες την τέρψιν έπὶ τὸ συμφέρον πάροδον εὖρον, Julian Caesar. p. 314 οὐκ οἶσ θ α, $\vec{\omega}$ Πρόβε, ὅτι τὰ πικρὰ φάρμακα μιγνύντες οί ιατροί τῷ μελικράτω προσφέρουσι;

 $\vec{a}\delta\epsilon\hat{\omega}s$] 'without apprehension', as e.g. Plut. Mor. p. 477 ἀδεώς καὶ ἀνυ- $\pi \acute{o}\pi \tau \omega s$. I venture on this conjecture, which is suggested by the interpolator's paraphrase ίνα ὁ πίνων, τῆ γλυκυτάτη κλαπείς ποιότητι την γευστικήν αίσθησιν, άφυλάκτως τῷ θανάτω περι- $\pi a \rho \hat{\eta}$. The alternative would be to eject ήδέως altogether, as a gloss of έν the reading of the Greek MS κάκει το $\hat{a}\pi o \theta a \nu \epsilon \hat{i} \nu$ is tempting; but the parallel passage Philad. 2 (quoted above on καταξιοπιστενόμενοι) is decisive in favour of κακη (rather than κάκεί), and this is also supported by the great preponderance of authorities.

VII. 'Therefore be on your guard against such men. Your best security is to shun pride and self-sufficiency, and to hold fast to Jesus Christ, to your bishop, and to the ordinances of the Apostles. He only is pure, who is within the pale of the altar. In other words, he that acts apart from the bishop and presbyters and deacons is not pure in conscience.'

See 7 ὁ δὲ...ων οὐ καθαρός ἐστιν] qui vero extra altare est the lower note. non mundus est L; om. G (doubtless owing to homœoteleuton). The clause is recognised in g, where the sentence is abridged ὁ δὲ ἐκτὸς ὧν οὖτός ἐστιν ὁ χωρίς κ.τ.λ. For the whole sentence ὁ δὲ ἐκτός...τουτέστιν A has merely et: the translator perhaps had before him a text with the same omission as in G and, finding nothing to explain τουτέστιν, struck it out and substituted a connecting particle in its place.

4. μή φυσιουμένοις Comp. Magn. 12 οίδα ὅτι οὐ φυσιοῦσθε. In both passages Ignatius refers to the pride of self-assertion, which rebels against lawful authority.

Θεοῦ] Probably this word should be omitted with the Armenian Version. Though Ignatius frequently speaks of Jesus Christ as God, it may be questioned whether he ever so styles Him without some explanatory or qualifying phrase; see the note on Ephes. inscr. τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν. Hence the awkwardness of the expression is at once apparent. For other doubtful cases see Smyrn. 6, 10, with the notes. If Θεοῦ be retained, it should perhaps be separated from Χριστοῦ, 'of God, of Jesus Christ, and of the bishop, etc.'; but the absence of the connecting particle is hardly consistent with the genius of the Greek language. Instances of such omission occur indeed in the existing Greek text of Ignatius; § 12 είς τιμήν πατρός, Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ τῶν ἀποστόλων, Philad. 9 την παρουσίαν τοῦ Κυρίου ήμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, τὸ πάθος αὐτοῦ, καὶ τὴν ἀνάστασιν, but in both passages there are good grounds for questioning the reading (see the notes).

5. τῶν διαταγμάτων κ.τ.λ.] The reference is doubtless to the institution of episcopacy. Early tradition points to S. John as mainly instrumental in establishing an episcopal organisation in Asia Minor, and to him more especially Ignatius may be referring here; comp. Clem. Alex. Quis Div. Salv. 42 (p. 959) ὅπου μέν ἐπισκόπους καταστήσων, ὅπου δὲ ολας έκκλησίας άρμόσων κ.τ.λ., Fragm. Murat. p. 33 (ed. Tregelles) 'cohortantibus condiscipulis et episcopis suis', Tert. adv. Marc. iv. 5 'ordo episcoporum ad originem recensus in Ioannem stabit auctorem.' So Irenæus iii. 3. 4 says of Polycarp ύπὸ ἀποστόλων κατασταθείς είς τὴν 'Ασίαν ἐν τῆ ἐν Σμύρνη ἐκκλησία ἐπίσκοπος, while elsewhere (v. 20. I), more especially in reference to the Asiatic elders, he speaks of 'episcopi quibus apostoli tradiderunt ecclesias'. See Philippians p. 212 sq.

6. ὁ έντὸς θυσιαστηρίου κ.τ.λ.] For the meaning of θυσιαστήριον, 'the place of sacrifice', 'the court of the altar', and for the application here, see the note on Ephes. 5. It symbolizes the congregation lawfully gathered together under its duly appointed officers.

If $\pi \rho \epsilon \sigma \beta \nu \tau \epsilon \rho i \sigma \nu$ could be retained, διακόνου might stand. The alternative is to eject καὶ διακόνου as a later interpolation, since it is wanting in the Armenian.

The same metaphor of the flock guarded against the attacks of wild beasts appears to underlie both these Ignatian passages. The false teachers are wolves in sheep's clothing: comp. 5. πραϋπάθειαν] The word occurs only once in the Greek Bible, I Tim. vi. II, where the common text has πραότητα, which the interpolator substitutes here also. The verb πραϋπαθεῖν (πραοπαθεῖν) occurs Philo de Prof. I (I. p. 547), and the substantive πραϋπάθεια ib. de Abr. 37 (II. p. 31).

6. ἀναλαβόντες] 'taking up', i.e. 'as your proper arms of defence'; comp. e.g. Eph. vi. 13, 16, ἀναλάβετε τὴν πανοπλίαν, ἀναλαβόντες τὸν θυρεόν.

mon; e.g. Epict. Diss. iii. 25. 4, Jos. Ant. ix. 6. 4, Dion Chrys. Or. vii. p. 223. As it denotes recovery after fatigue or hunger or sickness or wounds or the like, we must suppose that the peril of the Trallians was more serious than Ignatius was willing to state in words $(0 \dot{v}_{\kappa} \dot{\epsilon}_{\pi} \epsilon) \dot{\epsilon}_{\gamma \nu \omega \nu}$ κ.τ.λ.). The metaphor in both $\dot{a}_{\nu \alpha}$ $\lambda a \beta \dot{\epsilon}_{\nu} \dot{\nu}$ and $\dot{a}_{\nu \alpha} \kappa \tau a \sigma \partial a \dot{\nu} \dot{\nu} \dot{\nu}$ is probably taken from campaigning; comp. Polyc. 6. If the other verb $(\dot{a}_{\nu \alpha} \kappa \tau (\dot{\epsilon}_{\nu} \iota \nu))$ had been used, the words would have been $\dot{a}_{\nu \alpha} \kappa \tau (\dot{\nu}_{\alpha} \dot{\nu} \dot{\nu}) \dot{\nu}$ rather than $\dot{a}_{\nu \alpha} \kappa \tau (\dot{\nu}_{\alpha} a \sigma \partial \dot{\nu}) \dot{\nu}$.

ő ἐστιν σὰρξ κ.τ.λ.] This is the food which their refreshment demands. The reference is only indirectly to the eucharist. The eucharistic bread and wine, while representing the flesh and blood of Christ, represent also faith and love. Faith is the flesh, the substance of the Christian life; love is the blood, the energy coursing through its veins and arteries. See esp. Clem. Alex. Paed. i. 6 (p. 121) βρώμα δὲ ή πίστις εἰς θεμέλιον της κατηχήσεως συνεστραμμένη, η δη στερεμνιωτέρα της ακοης ύπαρχουσα Βρώματι ἀπεικάζεται...καὶ ὁ Κύριος... έτέρως έξήνεγκεν διὰ συμβόλων, Φάγετέ μου τὰς σάρκας, εἰπών, καὶ Πίετέ μου τὸ αίμα, ἐναργὲς τῆς πίστεως καὶ τῆς έπαγγελίας το πότιμον άλληγορών, δί ων ή έκκλησία... ἄρδεταί τε καὶ αὔξεται, συγκροτείται τε καὶ συμπήγνυται έξ άμφοῖν, σώματος μὲν τῆς πίστεως, ψυχῆς δὲ τῆς ἐλπίδος, ὥσπερ καὶ ὁ Κύριος ἐκ σαρκὸς καὶ αίματος τῷ γὰρ ὄντι αίμα της πίστεως ή έλπίς, εφ' ης συνέχεται, καθάπερ ύπὸ ψυχης, ή πίστις διαπνευσάσης δὲ τῆς ἐλπίδος δίκην ἐκρυέντος αίματος τὸ ζωτικὸν τῆς πίστεως ὑπεκλύεται, where the application of the image is exactly the same as here, except that 'hope' is substituted for 'love'. Zahn (I. v. A. p. 349 sq) explains the words here differently; he supposes that faith and love are so described, as the means whereby we participate in the flesh and blood of Christ, i.e. are united with Him. See Rom. 7 ἀρτὸν Θεοῦ θέλω ὅ ἐστιν σὰρξ τοῦ Χριστοῦ...καὶ πόμα θέλω τὸ αξμα αὐτοῦ ὅ ἐστιν ἀγάπη ἄφθαρτος (with the note). In Philad. 5 προσφυγών τῷ εὐαγγελίω ώς σαρκὶ Ἰησοῦ, we have a different application of the eucharistic metaphor. See also the notes on Ephes. 5, Smyrn. 6, 12.

Οὐαὶ γὰρ κ.τ.λ.] A loose quotation from Is. lii. 5 θαυμάζετε καὶ ὀλολύζετε τάδε λέγει ὁ Κύριος, Δι' ύμᾶς διὰ παντὸς τὸ ὄνομά μου βλασφημεῖται έν τοις έθνεσιν, a passage which is likewise quoted indirectly by S. Paul Rom. ii. 24; comp. 1 Tim. vi. 1, Tit. ii. 5. See also Ezek. xxxvi. 23. None of these other passages however account for the departure of the Ignatian quotation from the LXX of Isaiah: nor is it explained by the original Hebrew. The interpolator brings it somewhat nearer to the LXX; Oval γάρ, φησὶν ὁ προφήτης ώς ἐκ προσώπου τοῦ Θεοῦ, δι' οὖ τὸ ὄνομά μου βλασφημείται έν τοις έθνεσιν, but the chief peculiarity Ovai...di' ov remains. As the Armenian Version omits the whole clause Οὐαὶ γὰρ...ἐπί τινων βλασφημεῖται, it might be thought that this quotation was a later interpolation; see instances of interpolated quotations, Ephes. 1, 2, Rom. 3, 6. But, besides that it is found in all the other authorities, the passage of Isaiah is similarly quoted in Polycarp Phil. 10 'Vae autem [illi] per quem nomen Domini blasphematur', and twice in the Apost. Const. i. 10, iii. 5, Οὐαὶ γάρ, φησί, δι' οῦ τὸ ὄνομά μου βλασφημείται έν τοις έθνεσιν (but without the Ovai in a third passage, vii. 24); and as both these writers had the Epistles of Ignatius before them, there is a certain presumption that they derived the quotation from him. Moreover the Armenian omission is easily explained by the homœoteleuton βλασφημήται, βλασφημείται. There is no trace of the Oval in the Hexaplaric versions; and Justin (Dial. 17, p. 235) and Tertullian (adv. Marc. iii. 23, iv. 14) both quote the passage without it. For instances in later fathers where it is quoted Οὐαὶ κ.τ.λ., as here, see Cotelier on Apost. Const. i. 10. In [Clem. Rom.] ii. 13 we have apparently this same passage quoted in two forms (see the note there).

8. ἀληθῶs] The watch-word against Docetism; as in Magn. 11, Smyrn.

The opposition to Docetism is a main characteristic in Ignatius; but it has various degrees of prominence in the different letters. In the Epistle to the Romans, as addressed to a foreign church, and in the Epistle to Polycarp, as addressed to an individual, it does not appear at all. The letter to the Ephesians contains allusions to it, but they are indirect (inscr. thereality of the passion, § 18 the scandal of the cross, §§ 7, 20, the stress laid on Christ's humanity). In the four remaining letters heresy is directly attacked. In Trall. (inscr., 2, 9, 10, 11) and even more fully in Smyrn. (§§ 1—8) Docetism, as such, is denounced at length. In Magn. (§§ 8, 9, 10) and in Philad. (§§ 5, 6, 8, 9) he appears to be attacking Judaism rather than Docetism; but from incidental notices (Magn. 9 ου τινες άρνοῦνται, § II πεπληροφορήσθε έν κ.τ.λ., πραχθέντα άληθῶς καὶ βέβαίως; Philad. inscr. άγαλλιωμένη κ.τ.λ., § 3 τῷ πάθει οὐ συγκατατίθεται, § 5 ώς σαρκὶ Ἰησοῦ, § 8 ό σταυρός αὐτοῦ κ.τ.λ.), it appears that this Judaism was Docetic, so that it is the same with the heresy of the Trallian and Smyrnæan Epistles, though attacked from the other side. This Docetism, as appears from the notices in these two epistles, was extended to the birth, passion, and resurrection, in fact to the whole human life of Christ.

- 4. ἐγείραντος κ.τ.λ.] Apparently a reminiscence of 2 Cor. iv. 14 εἰδότες ὅτι ὁ ἐγείρας τὸν Κύριον Ἰησοῦν καὶ ἡμᾶς σὰν Ἰησοῦ ἐγερεῖ, 1 Thess. iv. 14 εἰ γὰρ πιστεύομεν ὅτι Ἰησοῦς ἀπέθανεν καὶ ἀνέστη, οὕτως καὶ ὁ Θεὸς τοὺς κοιμηθέντας διὰ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ ἄξει σὰν αὐτῷ: see also Rom. viii. 11. So too Polyc. Phil. 1 ὁ δὲ ἐγείρας αὐτὸν ἐκ νεκρῶν καὶ ἡμᾶς ἐγερεῖ.

κατὰ τὸ ὁμοίωμα κ.τ.λ.] For the sense see Rom. vi. 5 ἀλλὰ καὶ $[\sigma \dot{\nu}\mu$ -φυτοι τῷ ὁμοιώματι] τῆς ἀναστάσεως ἐσόμεθα, which passage Ignatius probably had in his mind. The sentence would be simplified by the transposition, ôς καὶ κατὰ τὸ ὁμοίωμα for κατὰ τὸ ὁμοίωμα ôς καὶ, as suggested by the versions; but in a transposition they are not a safe guide. Zahn goes further and reads οὖ καὶ κατὰ τὸ ὁμοίωμα. An easier correction would be ώς for ος, so that κατὰ τὸ ὁμοίωμα ώς would be equivalent to ὁμοίως ώς. The tautology κατὰ τὸ ὁμοίωμα...οὕτως is explained by the circumstances under which the letter was written: see the next note.

6. δ πατὴρ αὐτοῦ] Added to show that the agent intended is not Christ, as the form of the sentence might otherwise suggest. This is one of many instances, in which these letters betray haste of composition. Markland, Petermann, and others would omit these words, but without sufficient reason. It is true that they are wanting in the Armenian; but, as the Syriac from which the Armenian was taken contains them, the omission is obviously due to the Armenian translator or to some transcriber.

τὸ ἀληθινὸν ζῆν] See the note on Ephes. II.

X. 'If it be true, as these godless unbelievers affirm, that Christ did not really die, then why am I a prisoner? Why do I desire to fight with wild beasts? In this case I die for nothing; and I lie against the Lord.'

8. ἄθεοι, κ.τ.λ.] 'godless men, I mean disbelievers'. The first, word, not being strictly applicable to these heretics, needs explanation: 'They are disbelievers', says Ignatius, 'and therefore they have severed themselves from God'. By calling them ἄθεοι (see § 3 above) he places them on a level with the heathen; comp. Orig. c. Cels. ii. 3 αἰρέσεων ἀθέων καὶ Ἰησοῦ πάντη ἀλλοτρίων. So Tertull. de Carn. Chr. 15 'merito ethnici talia, sed merito et haeretici: num quid enim inter illos distat, nisi quod ethnici non credendo credunt, at haeretici credendo non credunt?', speaking also of a form of Docetism. The same epithet ἄπιστος is applied to these Docetics in Smyrn. 2, 5, as not believing in the reality of Christ's birth, life, and death. Comp. Iren. iii. 18. 7 'Venit...omnibus restituens eam quae est ad Deum communionem: igitur qui dicunt eum putative manifestatum, neque in carne natum neque vere hominem factum, adhuc sub veteri sunt damnatione...non devicta secundum eos morte'. Ignatius seems to have the same idea here. It is the reality of Christ's humanity, as well as of His deity, which makes communion with God possible to the believer. Those therefore, who deny this, hold themselves aloof from God; they are still ἄθεοι έν τῷ κόσμῳ (Ephes. ii. 12). See also Cyrill. Hier. Cat. iv. 9 (p. 56) φαγών ώς ήμεῖς ἀληθώς καὶ πιών ώς ήμεῖς ἀληθώς καὶ πιών ώς ήμεῖς ἀληθώς· εἰ γὰρ φάντασμα ἦν ἡ ἐνανθρώπησις, φάντασμα καὶ ἡ σωτηρία.

9. τὸ δοκείν] 'in appearance'. For this adverbial use of τὸ δοκείν comp. Smyrn. 2, 4. The former of these passages is almost word for word the same as here. See also Tertull. de Carn. Chr. I 'et partus virginis et ipsius exinde infantis ordo τὸ δοκείν haberentur', where some editors read τῶ δοκείν. But the dative is read in the interpolator's recension here and in Smyrn. 2, 4; and so also in Philo Leg. ad Cai. 34 (p. 584), 42 (p. 594), Orig. in Hieron. c. Ioann. Hieros. 25 (II. p. 431), Hieron. c. Pelag. ii. 14 (It. p. 758), at least in the printed texts. The accusative however seems altogether to be preferred here. The construction is different in Plat. Gorg. 527 Β μελετητέον οὐ τὸ δοκεῖν εἶναι ἀγαθὸν ἀλλὰ τὸ εἶναι, which Jacobson quotes as a parallel.

αὐτοὶ ὄντες κ.τ.λ.] 'being themselves nothing but outward profession'. Similarly Iren. iv. 33. 5 'judicabit autem eos qui putativum inducunt... putativum est igitur, et non veritas, omne apud eos'; Tertull. adv. Valent. 27 'ita omnia in imagines urgent, plane et ipsi imaginarii Christiani'. Hippolytus plays on the word δοκητης in another way; Haer. viii. 11

τ τί δὲ καὶ] L* (but with a v. l.) Sev-Syr 2; τὶ δὲ G; et quare S_1A ; καὶ [g].

2 ἄρα οὖν] Voss; ἄρα οὖ GL; quare S_1 (the same interrogative with which it has twice translated τί just before); ἄρα (om. οὖν) [g] Sev-Syr (at least οὖν is not translated); et A. But S_1A seem to have transferred ἄρα οὖν to the sentence ἐγὼ τί δέδεμαι.

5 οὖ] GLg Dam-Rup r Sev-Syr. There is no authority for the reading ὧν. I do not quite understand Zahn's statement, 'ὧν Sf 1, 15 [i.e. S_1] A, quorum hic ad fructus, ille ad propagines traxit pronomen, uterque enim καρπουν θανατηφορουν habet.' S_1 translates the sing. καρπὸν here (as it does καρπόν just below) by the plur. of ΝΊΝΣ, this being a common practice with Syriac translators, and necessarily therefore it substitutes a plural in place of οὖ. In this it is followed by A. In A the form of this plural pronoun gives no indication of gender, and it might be referred equally well to π αραφυάδας, if we had not the Greek to determine the reference for us. In S_1 the δοκητὰς έαυτοὺς προσηγόρευσαν ὧν οὐ τὸ δοκεῖν εἶναι τινὰς κατανοοῦμεν ματαἴζοντας, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἐκ τοσαύτης ὕλης δοκὸν ἐν ὀφθαλμῷ φερομένην διελέγχομεν. Pearson (on Smyrn. 2) compares Epiphan. Haer. lxxvi. 10 (p. 923) ἀνόμοιον πατρὶ λέγων σὰ ἀνόμοιος γέγονας, κληρωθεὶς τοῦτο τὸ ὅνομα, μηκέτι ὅμοιος ὑπάρχων τῶν ἐν Θεῷ σωζομένων. In the same vein Plato makes merry with the views of those philosophers whom he calls οἱ ῥέοντες, Theæt. 181 A.

ἐγὼ τί δέδεμαι] i.e. 'The atonement becomes an unreality, and therefore my sufferings for Christ are vain'. The argument is put in a somewhat different form in Smyrn. 4 εἰ γὰρ τὸ δοκεῖν ταῦτα ἐπράχθη ὑπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου, κἀγὼ τὸ δοκεῖν δέδεμαι.

εὔχομαι θηριομαχῆσαι] 'I pray that I may fight with wild beasts': comp. Ephes. 1, Rom. 5. The same verb occurs with an aorist infinitive, § 12 below, Ephes. 2, Rom. 5, Smyrn. 11. This passage is obviously a reminiscence of 1 Cor. xv. 32 εἰ κατὰ ἄνθρωπον ἐθηριομάχησα κ.τ.λ., as the argu-

 21 ἄρα Χριστὸς δωρεὰν ἀπέθανεν.

ἄρα οὖν κ.τ.λ.] 'in this case I lie against the Lord', i.e. 'my life and my preaching alike are a falsehood against Him, for they assume that Christ really did rise'. The whole argument here is founded on I Cor. xv. 12 sq: see especially ver. 15 εύρισκόμεθα δὲ καὶ ψευδομάρτυρες τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὅτι ἐμαρτυρήσαμεν κατὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ ότι ήγειρεν τον Χριστον κ.τ.λ. For άρα οὖν comp. Rom. v. 18, vii. 3, 25, viii. 12, etc. The reading ov (which requires to be read interrogatively, apa $o\vec{v} = nonne$) is possible in itself (see Kühner Gramm. II. p. 1027), but not good here.

able fruit—the Cross, whereby He calleth us unto Him, being His own members. The Head cannot be found apart from the members, forasmuch as God promiseth union, which union is nothing else than Himself.'

4. παραφυάδας] 'excrescences, offshoots'; comp. Clem. Alex. Paed. i. 8 (p. 138) καθυλομανεί γάρ μή κλαδευομένη ή ἄμπελος, οῦτως δὲ καὶ ὁ ἄνθρωπος καθαίρει δε αὐτοῦ τὰς εξυβριζούσας παραφυάδας ὁ λόγος, ή μάχαιρα, κ.τ.λ. The word is used of an adventitious shoot or other growth of a plant. Aristotle, Plant. i. 4 (p. 819), writes παραφυάδες δέ είσι τὰ ἀπὸ τῆς ρίζης τοῦ δένδρου βλαστάνοντα, but Theophrastus Hist. Plant. ii. 2. 4 contemplates their springing from other parts besides the root, for he says έαν από ρίζης ή παραφυάς ή. This word occurs several times in the LXX, where however it is not used with any precision. The metaphorical sense is naturally very common, and appears at least as early as Aristotle, Eth. Nic. i. 4 (p. 1096). See also the allegory of the παραφυάδες in Hermas Sim. viii. 1 sq.

6. παραυτά] 'forthwith'; comp. Mart. Ign. Ant. 6. It is a good classical word: see Lobeck Phryn. p. 47.

φυτεία πατρόs] So again Philad. 3 διὰ τὸ μὴ εἶναι αὐτοὺς φυτείαν πατρός. The reference is to Matt. xv. 13 πᾶσα φυτεία ἡν οὖκ ἐφύτευσεν ὁ πατήρ μου ὁ οὖράνιος κ.τ.λ., which passage the interpolator has introduced into his text here.

7. κλάδοι τοῦ σταυροῦ] This they are not, for they deny the reality of the Passion. On the prominence given to the Cross by Ignatius in refuting Docetism, see Ephes. 18, Philad. 8, Smyrn. 1, with the notes.

8. ἄφθαρτος] For the Cross is the true ξύλον ζωῆς.

δι' οὖ] sc. τοῦ σταυροῦ; comp. Gal. vi. 14, Eph. ii. 16, Col. i. 20. See also Ephes. 9 διὰ τῆς μηχαυῆς Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὄς ἐστιν σταυρός. The intermediate clause, καὶ ἦν ἃν ὁ καρπὸς αὐτῶν ἄφθαρτος, is parenthetical.

1. προσκαλεῖται] i.e. probably ὁ Χριστός, to whom the preceding and following αὐτοῦ must necessarily refer: comp. Clem. Rom. 22, where προσκαλεῖται ἡμᾶς is said of Christ.

μελη] As in Rom. xii. 4 sq, 1 Cor. vi. 15, Eph. v. 30, and especially 1 Cor. xii. 12 sq, which last passage has suggested the words following here: comp. ver. 21 οὐ δύναται...η κεφαλη κ.τ.λ. See also Clem. Rom. 37, 46; comp. also Ephes. 4.

οὐ δύναται οὖν] 'Now it is not possible (in the nature of things) that a head should be born without limbs'; and therefore the existence of Christ as the Head implies the attachment of the believers to Him as His members. Perhaps however we should read γενηθῆναι for γεννηθῆναι.

2. τοῦ Θεοῦ ἔνωσιν κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'God supplying the principle of cohesion, which principle is nothing else than Himself'; comp. John xvii. 21 sq ΐνα πάντες ἐν ὧσιν, καθὼς σύ, πάτερ, ἐν ἐμοὶ κὰγὼ ἐν σοί, ἵνα καὶ αὐτοὶ ἐν ἡμῖν ὧσιν κ.τ.λ. With ὅς ἐστιν αὐτός comp. Ephes. 14 τὰ δὲ δύο ἐν ἑνότητι γενόμενα Θεός ἐστιν, and see the note Magn. 15. For the attraction of δς see the note on Magn. 7. The interpretation suggested by Smith, 'qui Deus est ipse Christus,' is quite out of place.

XII. 'The churches present with me at Smyrna join in my salutation. I appeal to you by the chains which I wear in Christ: Remain in unity and prayerfulness. It is your duty one and all, but especially the presbyters, to assist and cherish the bishop, to the honour of God, of Christ, and of the Apostles. Listen to me, lest this letter rise up as a witness against you. I desire your prayers that by God's mercy I may attain the martyr's crown for which I thirst, and may not be rejected.'

4. rais συμπαρούσαις μοι κ.τ.λ.] The churches who were present in the person of their representatives; comp. Magn. 15 καὶ αἱ λοιπαὶ δὲ ἐκκλησίαι...ἀσπάζουται ὑμᾶς. Among these were the Ephesians (Ephes. 1 sq.) and the Magnesians (Magn. 1), from both which churches several delegates were present with him.

5. κατὰ πάντα κ.τ.λ.] On this common Ignatian phrase see the note Ephes. 2.

6. σαρκί τε κ.τ.λ.] See the note on Ephes. 10.

παρακαλεῖ ὑμᾶς κ.τ.λ.] For similar appeals in S. Paul see Eph. iv. 1 παρακαλῶ οὖν ὑμᾶς ἐγὼ ὁ δέσμιος κ.τ.λ., Philem. 9 μᾶλλον παρακαλῶ, τοιοῦτος ὢν ὡς Παῦλος...δέσμιος Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ; comp. Col. iv. 18.

8. $\Theta \epsilon o \hat{v} \ \hat{\epsilon} \pi \iota \tau \nu \chi \epsilon \hat{\iota} \nu$] So too below, § 13. For this favourite Ignatian phrase see the note on Magn. 1.

διαμένετε] These are the words of the appeal $(\pi a \rho a \kappa a \lambda \epsilon \hat{\iota})$ which his bonds address to them. For this favourite construction in Ignatius, who prefers the imperative to the infinitive after $\pi a \rho a \kappa a \lambda \epsilon \hat{\nu}$, see the note on \S 6 $\chi \rho \hat{\eta} \sigma \theta \epsilon$ above.

10. $\tau \circ \hat{\imath} s \kappa a \theta' \tilde{\epsilon} \nu a$] See Eph. v. 33 for this expression. Similarly $\circ \hat{\imath} \kappa a \tau' \tilde{a} \nu \delta \rho a$ below, § 13 (see the note on Ephes. 4). In Rom. xii. 5 we have the strange expression $\tau \hat{o} \kappa a \theta' \epsilon \hat{\imath} s$.

ἐξαιρέτως καὶ] The transposition καὶ ἐξαιρέτως, suggested by Jacobson, seems unnecessary; comp. § 13 ὁμοίως καὶ (with the note). For the adverb ἐξαιρέτως comp. Smyrn. 7 (with the note), and for the corresponding adjective ἐξαίρετος, Philad. 9. Neither word is found in the N.T., but ἐξαίρετος occurs in the LXX, Gen. xlviii. 22, Job v. 5.

II. $\partial u \psi \dot{v} \chi \epsilon \iota v$ See the note on els τιμὴν κ.τ.λ.] For this Ignatian mode of expression see the note on Ephes. 21.

πατρὸς κ.τ.λ.] If the Greek MS of Ignatius be followed we must punctuate 'to the honour of the Father of Jesus Christ, and of the Apostles' (making Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ dependent on πατρὸs), rather than 'to the honour of the Father, of Jesus Christ, and of the Apostles'; for the latter connexion would almost necessarily require a connecting particle, καὶ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ (see the notes on § 7 ἀχωρίστοις Θεοῦ κ.τ.λ., and Philad. 9 την παρουσίαν). But in this case the omission of 'the honour of Jesus Christ' would be inexplicable. The probability however is that the right reading is preserved in the interpolator's text, which inserts another καὶ εἰς τιμὴν before Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, and that a transcriber has ejected the words as a superfluity. Zahn defends the common text on the ground 'scriptoris menti similitudinem illam obversari, quam et inter episcopum Deumque Christi patrem, et inter presbyteros apostolosque intercedere existimat' (comp. Magn. 6).

13. εἰς μαρτύριον ω̃] Comp. Philad. 6 καὶ πᾶσι δὲ, ἐν οἶς ἐλάλησα, εὕχομαι ἵνα μὴ εἰς μαρτύριον αὐτὸ κτήσωνται. The ἐν should probably be retained, in which case γράψας will stand by itself, 'by my writing.' The interpolator has omitted the preposition in conformity with the very common idiom εἰς μαρτύριόν τινι, Matt. viii. 4, x. 18, xxiv. 14, Mark i. 44, vi. 11,

τοῦ κλήρου] i.e. the glory of martyrdom, as in Rom. I εἰς τὸ τὸν κλῆρόν μου ἀνεμποδίστως ἀπολαβεῖν, Philad. 5 ἡ προσευχὴ ὑμῶν εἰς Θεόν με ἀπαρτίσει, ἴνα ἐν ῷ κλήρῳ ἠλεήθην ἐπιτύχω. The word is used in the same connexion elsewhere; Mart. Polyc. 6 ἵνα ἐκεῖνος τὸν ἴδιον κλῆρου ἀπαρτίση, Ε̞ρ. Vienn. et Lugd. § 3 (in Euseb. H. E. v. I) ἀνελήφθη καὶ αὐτὸς εἰς τὸν κλῆρον τῶν μαρτύρων.

οὖπερ ἔγκειμαι κ.τ.λ.] 'which I am eager to attain.' I know no better emendation of the obviously corrupt οὖ περίκειμαι than this conjecture of Bunsen's (Br. p. 141), corresponding to the Latin qua conor potiri; but I am not quite satisfied with it. I do not know whether ἔγκεισθαι elsewhere takes an infinitive; its common construction is with a dative of the thing or person. The common text might mean 'to obtain the lot with which I am invested' (οὖ by attraction for őν), but this is hardly sense.

4. ἵνα μὴ ἀδόκιμος κ.τ.λ.] Suggested by I Cor. ix. 27. The idea of a race seems to be present here (e.g. in ἔγκειμαι ἐπιτυχεῖν), as in S. Paul.

XIII. 'The Smyrnæans and Ephesians salute you. Pray for the Church in Syria, of which I am an unworthy member. Farewell in Christ. Be obedient to your bishop and presbyters, and love one another. My spirit is devoted to you, not now only, but when I shall find God. At present I am still exposed to dangers; but the Father is faithful to fulfil your prayers and mine in Christ Jesus, in whom may we be found blameless.'

5. ἡ ἀγάπη κ.τ.λ.] Comp. Rom. 9, Philad. 11, Smyrn. 12. This is not a mere complimentary title, as Pearson and others would take it; see note on § 3 της ἀγάπης ὑμῶν.

In our passage ή έντολη is used absolutely, as in Rom. vii. 8 ἀφορμην λαβοῦσα ή άμαρτία διὰ της έντολης κ.τ.λ., I Tim. vi. 14 τηρησαί σε την έντολην ἄσπιλον κ.τ.λ. Not satisfied with this, the translators have added 'Dei.' This absolute use is not consistent with Pearson's interpretation of Smyrn. l. c. 'tamquam Dei praecepto institutos,' i.e. 'as being God's ordinance' (where he refers to this passage). The Trallians are told to obey the bishop's orders, as they would obey God's orders. The sense of $\epsilon \nu \tau o \lambda \dot{\eta}$ here is active, not passive; 'the voice ordering,' not 'the thing ordered.'

12. ὅταν Θεοῦ ἐπιτύχω] i.e. 'by my martyrdom'; see above § 12.

13. ὑπὸ κίνδυνον] Comp. Ephes. 12 έγω ύπο κίνδυνον, ύμεις έστηριγμένοι (with the note). There is still the risk that either by his own weakness or by the interposition of others he may be robbed of the martyr's crown.

πιστὸς ὁ πατήρ] Compare S. Paul's πιστος ο Θεος and similar expressions; I Cor. i. 9, x. 13, 2 Cor. i. 18, I Thess. v. 24, 2 Thess. iii. 3.

TO THE ROMANS.

TO THE ROMANS.

Like the three preceding letters, the Epistle to the Romans was written and despatched from Smyrna. The Ephesian delegates, who were still with him, acted as amanuenses; and, as the name of Crocus is singled out for mention, we may suppose that he was the chief penman on the occasion. This is the only letter which bears a date. It was written on August 23rd (§ 10).

Ignatius had been preceded by certain members of the Syrian Church, who however are not mentioned by name. He assumes that they will have arrived in Rome before the letter; he bespeaks for them a kindly welcome; and he wishes them to be informed of his speedy arrival. Of these persons nothing is said elsewhere. Probably they had been despatched from Antioch direct to Rome, immediately after the condemnation of the saint, with the news of his impending visit. The letter throughout assumes that the Roman Christians are informed of his fate, and will act upon the information.

But, though the letter was despatched from the same place and probably about the same time with the Epistles to the Ephesians, Magnesians, and Trallians, though it closely resembles them in style and expression, yet the main topics are wholly different. The subject matter is changed with the change in the relations between the writer and the readers. There is no direct allusion to the Judæo-Gnostic heresy, which occupies so large a place in his letters to the Asiatic Churches. The Roman Church is complimented in the opening as 'filtered clear from every foreign colouring,' and from first to last the epistle contains no reference to false doctrine of any kind. On the correlative topic also, the duty of obedience to the bishop and other officers of the Church, which shares with the denunciation of heresy the principal place in the other letters, he is equally silent here. Indeed we might read the epistle from beginning to end without a suspicion that the episcopal office existed in Rome at this time, if we had no other grounds for the belief. On the relation of this phenomenon to other early documents bearing on the Roman Church I have spoken elsewhere (S. Clement of Rome I. p. 68; comp. Philippians p. 217 sq).

On the other hand the letter is almost wholly taken up with one single topic, which appears only casually in the other epistles-his coming martyrdom. We have seen how the news of his conviction had preceded him to Rome. He was alarmed at its possible effects. Perhaps he had good reason to fear the too officious zeal of his friends from Syria. At all events there were Christians holding influential positions in Rome at this time, more especially about the court (see the note on § 1 φοβοῦμαι κ.τ.λ.). What, if they should attempt to obtain a reversal or a commutation of his sentence? Their inopportune kindness would be his ruin (§ 4). The whole letter is a passionate cry for martyrdom, an eager deprecation of pardon. The altar is ready. Will they then withhold the libation (§ 2)? Will they refuse the sacrifice (§ 4)? It will be an act of jealousy (§ 5 ζηλώσαι), a display of envy (§ 3 έβασκάνατε, § 7 βασκανία), an infliction of wrong (§ 1 ἀδικήση), an outbreak of hatred (§ 8 ἐμισήσατε), an abetting of Satan (§ 7 βοηθείτω αὐτῷ), to rob him of his crown. Even though he himself on his arrival in Rome should crave their intercession, which now he deprecates, he intreats them not to listen to him (§ 7). Martyrdom is the new birth, is the true life, is the pure light (§ 6). Martyrdom is the complete discipleship, the final enfranchisement (§ 4). The martyr's crown is better than all the kingdoms of the earth (§ 6). Only then, when he sets to the world, will he rise to God (§ 2). The teeth of the wild beasts are the mill which grinds the fine flour for the sacrificial bread. Therefore he will entice them, will provoke them, to mangle, to crush, to pulverize his limbs for the altar of God ($\sec{1}{2} 4.5). Crowned by martyrdom, his life becomes an utterance of God; robbed of martyrdom, it is a vague unmeaning cry (§ 2).

The Epistle to the Romans had a wider popularity than the other letters of Ignatius both early and late. It appears to have been circulated apart from them, sometimes alone, sometimes attached to the story of the martyrdom. Thus it seems to have become in some sense a vade mecum of martyrs in the subsequent ages. At all events we find it quoted before any of the other epistles (Iren. v. 28. 4; see § 4, p. 207 below); and its influence on the earliest genuine Acts of Martyrdom extant—those of Polycarp, and those of Perpetua and Felicitas—seems to be clearly discernible (see the notes on § 6 $\pi poor \beta \iota \acute{a} \sigma o \mu a \iota$, § 5 'Ovaíμην $\kappa.\tau.\lambda$.; comp. also the note on § 4 $\mathring{a} \pi \epsilon \lambda \epsilon \iota \acute{b} \epsilon pos \kappa.\tau.\lambda$.). Moreover in the Menæa for Dec. 20, the day assigned to S. Ignatius in the later Greek Calendar, we meet again and again with expressions taken from it, whereas there is no very distinct coincidence with the other epistles. On the other hand, where the interest was doctrinal and not practical, as for instance in the Monophysite controversy, the other letters are prominent and the Epistle to the Romans recedes into the background. Owing to these circumstances, the history and the phenomena of the text are different in several respects from those of the other epistles (see above, p. 5 sq).

'IGNATIUS to the CHURCH OF ROME, preeminent in position as in love, worthy of all good things and filtered clear from all defilement, abundant greeting in Christ.'

'My prayer has been more than granted; for I shall see you in my bonds. Only do not interpose, that so my course, which has begun well, may also end well (§ 1). The opportunity is great; do not mar it. If you keep silence, God will speak through me. The altar is ready for sacrifice; chant ye the hymn of praise round the victim (§ 2). Teach me my duty, as you have taught others. Pray that I may have strength to do, as well as to say. I shall be seen most plainly then, when I have ceased to be seen. Christianity is not talk, but might (§ 3). I tell all the churches that I die freely. Leave me to the wild beasts. I am the fine meal ground in the mill for sacrifice. Stir up the wild beasts to devour me wholly. I cannot command you as Peter and Paul did; for I am only a criminal and a slave (§ 4). I am fighting with wild beasts the whole way from Syria to Rome. Yet the cruelty of my guards is a wholesome discipline to me. I trust and pray that the beasts will devour me at once; that they will be eager, as I am eager. Let no power in heaven or on earth envy me my crown. I am ready for any torture (§ 5). All the kingdoms of the earth are nothing to me. I desire Christ; I desire light and life. Let me imitate the passion of my God (§ 6). Satan would seize on me as his prey; do not abet him. Obey me in these words which I write now. My earthly passions are crucified. I desire not the food of corruption.

I crave the bread and the cup of God (§ 7). Once again; do not thwart me. I write briefly, but Christ will interpret. It is God's own will that I declare (§ 8).'

'Pray for the Syrian Church, which has no bishop now but God, and of which I am an unworthy member. The churches which have received and escorted me join in my salutation (§ 9). I write this from Smyrna, with the assistance of the Ephesians, especially Crocus. Tell the Syrians who have preceded me, that I shall arrive shortly. Written on ix Kal. Sept. Farewell, be patient to the end (§ 10).'

3. ηγαπημένη] So to be read, as in Trall. inscr. Though ήγιασμένη has very high support, yet it ought probably to be rejected, as a likely word (comp. 2. προκάθηται 'has the chief seat, presides, takes the precedence.' The word is used of preeminence or superiority generally in writers of about this time; e.g. Dion Chrysost. Or. xxxv (p. 68) της τε Φρυγίας προκάθησθε καὶ Λυδίας κ.τ.λ. (of the town of Celænæ), Galen XIX. p. 22 (Kühn) ηξίωσάν τινες των άξιολόγων λατρών έν προεδρεία καθεζόμενοι κ.τ.λ., Greg. Naz. Or. xliii. 14 (I. p. 780) to Buζάντιον, την προκαθεζομένην της έώας πόλιν. Schol. to Soph. Electr. 234 Μυκηναι ή προκαθεζομένη τοῦ "Αργους. See the inscription in Bull. de Corresp. Hellén. VII. p. 283 Τάρσος...των γ' ἐπαρχειῶν, [Κιλικίας], Ισαυρίας, Λυκαονία s, προ καθεζομένη, with the reference (ib. p. 285) to Basil of Seleucia Op. p. 275 (Paris, 1622) Σελεύκεια... προεδρεύουσα καὶ προκαθεζομένη πάσης Ίσαυρίδος πόλεως. Pearson quotes an edict ascribed to the Dictator Cæsar in Ioann, Malal. Chron. ix. p. 216 (ed. Bonn.) Έν Αντιοχεία τη μητροπόλει, ίερα και ἀσύλω και αὐτονόμω καὶ ἀρχούση καὶ προκαθημένη τῆς ἀνατολης, Ἰούλιος Γάιος Καίσαρ κ.τ.λ. Leo the Great thus apostrophizes Rome herself at a later date (Serm. 82, Op.

I. p. 322, Venet. 1753), 'civitas sacerdotalis et regia, per sacram beati Petri sedem caput orbis effecta, latius praesideres religione divina quam dominatione terrena.'

έν τόπω κ.τ.λ.] These words probably describe the limits over which the supremacy or jurisdiction extends; comp. Tert. de Praescr. 36 'percurre ecclesias apostolicas apud quas ipsae adhuc cathedrae apostolorum suis locis praesident.' In this case it might be thought that there was a reference more especially to the presidency of the Roman see over the suburbicarian bishops, who formed a sort of college under the bishop of Rome as their head-a constitution out of which the later college of Cardinals grew. But, not to mention that the presidency is here assigned not to the Roman bishop but to the Roman Church, such a reference would probably be a great anachronism. Though some have seen distinct traces of this relation between the bishop of Rome and the suburbicarian sees at least as early as the beginning of the third century (Bunsen Hippolytus I. p. 422 sq, ed. 2; Milman Lat. Christ. I. p. 41; comp. Ruggieri de Port. Hippol. Sed. ii. 8 in Lumper Hist. Sanct. Patr. VIII. p. 518 sq), yet there is really no evidence of such a constitution till a very much later date, while many facts point in the opposite direction; see Döllinger Hippolytus u. Kallistus p. 108 sq. The τόπος χωρίου 'Ρωμαίων therefore will have a looser signification, denoting generally 'the country or district of the Romans' (comp.

καὶ προκάθηται ἐν τόπω χωρίου 'Ρωμαίων, ἀξιόθεος, decorum, as Cureton and Petermann suggest) et beatitudine (άξιομακάριστος) et laude (ἀξιέπαινος) et memoria (perhaps = ἀξίαγνος, ΝΙ memoria being a corruption of κ'ΣΙΤ purificatio) et digna prosperitate (ἀξιεπίτευκτος) Σ; om. M.

Macar. Magn. Apocr. iii. 38, p. 135, έν σκήπτρφ καὶ χώρα 'Ρωμαίων ἀναπα- $\tau \hat{\omega} \nu$); and the Church of Rome itself is so entitled, as the principal church in this region, just as the Church of Jerusalem might be said προκαθησθαι έν τόπω χωρίου Ἰουδαίων.

On the other hand it might be urged that ἐν τόπω κ.τ.λ. describes not the range of the supremacy, but the locality of the supreme power itself. In this case προκάθηται would be used absolutely of a certain precedence assigned to the Church of Rome, as situated in the metropolis of the empire and the world, over the other churches of Christendom. The expression would then be allied to the 'potentior principalitas,' which Irenæus (iii. 3. 2) assigns to the Roman Church; though not so strong in itself. But, if this were the meaning, it is difficult to see why Ignatius should write ἐν τόπω χωρίου 'Ρωμαίων in place of ἐν Ῥώμη, which alone would be natural to describe merely the locality. The idea of the 'cathedra Petri' therefore has no place here.

For the pleonastic τόπω comp. Clem. Hom. i. 14 ποθώ ἐπὶ τὸν τῆς Ἰουδαίας γενέσθαι τόπον, Letter of Abgar in Euseb. H. E. i. 13 σωτηρι άγαθῷ ἀναφανέντι ἐν τόπῳ Ἱεροσολύμων (comp. Doctrine of Addai p. 4, ed. Phillips). It may perhaps be regarded as a Syriasm, since the Syrians constantly insert the corresponding word אתרא in translating from the Greek, where it has no place in the original; e.g. Acts ii. 9, 10, iv. 36, xi. 19, xiv. 24, xvi. 7, 8, xviii. 2, xx. 2, etc., in the Peshito. In Origen in Ioann. ii. 12 (IV. p. 172) πεποίηκεν έκει του τόπου χωρίου παρακλήσεως, quoted by Pearson and others as a parallel to the expression here, we ought probably to read xwplov. The explanation of Bunsen, who governs χωρίου by προκάθηται and interprets $\dot{\epsilon}_{\nu}$ τόπω in dignitate, in officio suo (Br. p. 114), appears to me quite untenable. Nor again does it seem possible to accept Zahn's solution (I. v. A. p. 311 sq, and ad loc.), who takes the same construction but substitutes $\tau \dot{\nu} \pi \phi$ for $\tau \dot{\sigma} \pi \phi$, making $\dot{\epsilon} \nu \tau \dot{\nu} \pi \phi$ signify 'as an example,' i.e. to the other churches. We should expect eis τύπον or ως τύπος in this case; and indeed the extreme awkwardness of the whole expression condemns it.

χωρίου] 'region.' The words χώρος ('place'), $\chi \omega \rho \alpha$ ('country'), and $\chi \omega$ ρίον ('district'), may be distinguished as implying locality, extension, and The last limitation, respectively. word commonly denotes either 'an estate, a farm,' or 'a fastness, a stronghold,' or (as a mathematical term) 'an area.' Here, as not unfrequently in later writers, it is 'a region,' 'a district'; but the same fundamental idea is preserved. relation of χώρος to χωρίον is the same as that of ἄργυρος, χρυσός, to άργύριον, χρυσίον, the former being the metals themselves, the latter the metals worked up into bullion or coins or plate or trinkets or images, e.g. Macar. Magn. Apocr. iii. 42 (p. 147) ταῦτ' ἐκ χρυσοῦ καὶ ἀργύρου καὶ χαλκοῦ καὶ σιδήρου πλαττόμενα μορφώματα άργύριον καὶ χρυσίον.

άξιόθεος κ.τ.λ.] On the frequency of these compounds of agus in Ignatius see the note on Ephes. 4 à Étoνόμαστον. In this passage, though symmetrical in composition, they are άξιοπρεπής, άξιομακάριστος, άξιέπαινος, άξιεπίτευκτος, άξίαγνος, καὶ προκαθημένη τῆς ἀγάπης, χριστόνομος, πατρώνυμος· ἡν καὶ ἀσπάζομαι ἐν ὀνόματι Ἰησοῦ ι ἀξιεπίτευκτος] g^* (but l has fide dignae) G (written ἀξιοεπίτευκτος) Σ (see the last note) A_mS_m ; digne ordinata L; digna precibus A: see the lower note.

2 χριστόνομος] g* (though the common text has χριστώνυμος); christi habens hardly so in meaning, but take their complexion from the other component element, 'worthy of praise,' 'worthy in purity,' etc. For the word ἀξιόθεος itself see Trall. inscr. (note).

I. ἀξιεπίτευκτος] The meaning of the word may be doubtful. According as an active or a passive sense is assigned to -επιτευκτος, it will signify 'worthy of success' or 'worthy of associating with.' Jacobson indeed says of this latter sense, 'mire Vedelius dignissima quae invisatur.' But it is suggested by the passive form; it is supported by such analogies as άξιοζήλωτος, άξιοθέατος, άξιόκτητος, and especially ἀξιοκοινώνητος (Plat. Resp. p. 371 E); and it would harmonize with Ignatius' expressed desire to see the Romans (§ 1). On the other hand ἀνεπίτευκτος, εὖεπίτευκτος, both of them late and rare words, are used in the sense 'unsuccessful,' 'fortunate,' respectively. All those versions also, which had the word uncorrupted, agree in so rendering it; digna prosperitate S; digna assecutione (desideriorum) Am; digna iis quae petiit Sm: and this fact may perhaps be allowed to decide the meaning. Of the others, digne ordinata in L represents agieπίτακτος, and fide digna in 1 άξιοπίστευτος, while digna precibus in A is due to a corruption in the Syriac text (and precatione for prosperitate) which the Armenian translator had before him, as Petermann has pointed out.

Yet δυσεπίτευκτος seems to have a passive sense 'difficult of attainment' (unless indeed its meaning is 'difficult of success') in Diod. Sic. xvii. 93 όρων δυσεπίτευκτον την έπι τους Γανδαρίδας στρατείαν οὖσαν, ib. xxxii. exc. είς πολλάς έπιβολάς δυσεπιτεύκτους $\tilde{\epsilon}\sigma\chi\epsilon$ $\tau \hat{a}s$ $\pi\rho \hat{a}\xi\epsilon\iota s$, and so certainly Methodius Conv. i. I (p. II, ed. Jahn) σπάνιον πάνυ καὶ δυσεπίτευκτον άνθρώποις άγνεία; while Hesych, uses it in a somewhat different sense, but still passive, 'difficult of access, unsociable,' when he writes δυσπετέστερος · δυσκολώτερος, δυσεπιτευκτότερος. As regards the form of the word, άξιεπίτευκτος is more in accordance with analogy (e. g. ἀξιέπαινος just above, ἀξιέντρεπτος Clem. Alex. Proph. Ecl. 28, p. 997).

2. ἀξίαγνος] 'worthily pure.' Bunsen (Br. p. 115) conjectures ἀξίαινος, supposing that the previous ἀξίαπος is a transcriber's gloss to explain the unusual word ἀξίαινος. But the convergence of so many and various authorities in favour of the reading in the text forbids such a violent alteration.

προκαθημένη τῆς ἀγάπης] Comp. Clem. Hom. Ep. Clem. 2, 17, where προκαθέζεσθαι ἀληθείας is said of Clement as the successor of S. Peter. There is doubtless here a reference back to the foregoing προκαθημένη ἐν τόπφ κ.τ.λ. The Church of Rome, as it is first in rank, is first also in love. A noble testimony is borne to the spirit which distinguished the early Roman Church by Dionysius of Corinth, who writes as follows to the legem L; in lege christi [Σ] S_m ; lege christi A; χριστώνυμος G; def. M. A_m gives both readings, christi-habens-legem (aut; christi-habens-nomen). In the passage which follows, Σ is greatly abridged.

Christians in Rome (c. A.D. 170), ¿ξ άρχης ύμιν έθος έστι τοῦτο, πάντας μέν άδελφούς ποικίλως εὐεργετείν, έκκλησίαις τε πολλαίς ταίς κατά πάσαν πόλιν έφόδια πέμπειν, ώδε μεν την των δεομένων πενίαν αναψύχοντας, έν μετάλλοις δέ άδελφοις ύπάρχουσιν έπιχορηγουντας δι' ών πέμπετε άρχηθεν έφοδίων πατροπαράδοτον έθος 'Ρωμαίων 'Ρωμαΐοι φυλάττοντες, and he adds that Soter, their present bishop, had more than sustained the traditional reputation of his church for deeds of charity; Euseb. H. E. iv. 23. The Epistle of Clement itself is a happy illustration of this spirit.

χριστόνομος] 'observing the law of Christ': comp. I Cor. ix. 21 ἔννομος Χριστοῦ, and see also Gal. vi. 2 ἀναπληρώσετε τὸν νόμον τοῦ Χριστοῦ, Magn. 2 ὡς νόμω Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. Considering the great preponderance of the best authorities in favour of χριστόνομος, and the likelihood of alteration into χριστώνυμος for the sake of conformity with the following word, there can be no doubt about the reading.

3. πατρώνυμος] See Ephes. iii. 14, 15, πρὸς τὸν πατέρα ἐξ οὖ πᾶσα πατριὰ ἐν οὐρανοῖς καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς ὀνομάζεται. The lexicons give no other example of this word, though the derivatives πατρωνυμικός, πατρωνυμικώς, ατε not uncommon in later writers, and πατρωνύμιος occurs even in Æschylus Pers. 151 τὸ πατρωνύμιον γένος ἡμέτερον (where Blomfield would read τὸ πατρώνυμον ὧν κ.τ.λ.). This same play also offers a good analogy to the preceding word in Περσόνομος ver. 916.

4. σάρκα καὶ πνεῦμα] See the note on Ephes. 10.

ήνωμένοις] 'united to', and so 'acting in unison with'; comp. Magn. 6, Smyrn. 3.

5. ἀδιακρίτως] not 'inseparably', but 'without wavering, with undivided allegiance, with singleness of heart'; comp. Philad. inscr. ἀγαλλιωμένη ἐν τῷ πάθει τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν ἀδιακρίτως. 6. ἀποδιυλισμένοις strained clear, 'filtered'; comp. Philad. 3 οὐχ ὅτι παρ' ύμιν μερισμόν εύρον άλλ' αποδιυλισμόν. The single compound διυλίζειν occurs literally in Amos vi. 6, Matt. xxiii. 24 (comp. Clem. Alex. Strom. ii. 20, p. 489), and metaphorically in Clem. Alex. Proph. Ecl. 7 (p. 991) το καὶ πνεύματα ἀκάθαρτα συμπεπλεγμένα τῆ ψυχη διυλίζεσθαι κ.τ.λ. The construction and metaphor here are well illustrated by a fragment attributed to Archytas in Stobæus Flor. i. 73 Θεὸς...εἰλικρινῆ καὶ διυλισμέναν ἔχει τὰν ἀρετὰν ἀπὸ παντὸς τῶ θνατῶ πάθεος. I. 'My petition has been more than answered, when I prayed that I might see your faces: for I hope at length to salute you as a prisoner of Jesus Christ, if it be God's will that I complete my course. The beginning indeed is well ordered, if only I am successful to the end, so that no one interposes to rob me of my portion. I say this, because I am apprehensive of your love. It is easy for you to do as you will; but it is difficult for me to find God, unless you stay your hands'.

3. 'Επεὶ εὐξάμενος κ.τ.λ.] 'Seeing that in answer to my prayers'. The sentence is an anacoluthon; dependent clauses crowd upon each other in succession; and the thread of the grammar is lost. For similar instances in the openings of these epistles see Ephes. I 'Αποδεξάμενος (with the note). The anacoluthon here has a close parallel also in Magn. 2 Επεί οὖν ηξιώθην κ.τ.λ. (see the note). The subject on which he here 'flies off at a tangent' is his fear lest the Roman Christians should interpose and rob him of his martyr's triumph. Here, as in similar cases, the transcribers and critics have attempted to mend the syntax. Such an attempt, for instance, is the substitution of $E\pi\epsilon v$ ξάμενος for 'Επεὶ εὐξάμενος (Vedelius, Ussher, Pearson, etc, with the Latin Versions and some MSS of the Metaphrast), or the reading Πάλαι ἐπευξάμενος (Bunsen after the Syriac), or the omission of γαρ after δεδεμένος (the editors commonly after the Medicean MS).

4. ἀξιόθεα] See the note on Trall. inscr. The authorities for ἀξιοθέατα are too slight to justify its adoption, though plausible in itself. I cannot find that ἀξιόθεος (or indeed any compound in $-\theta \epsilon o s$) is ever derived from $\theta \epsilon a$, and therefore equivalent to $\dot{a} \xi \omega$ θέατος (as maintained by Zahn I. v. A. p. 558, though ad loc. he is disposed to retract this opinion). In C. I. G. 4943 ἀξιθέους in ver. 3 has not the same meaning as ἀξιθέωρον in ver. 4 but refers to the 'shrines' which are mentioned in the same line. Alciphron Ep. iii. 55 is quoted in the lexicons for this sense, but the reading is probably ἀξιόχρεα, not ἀξι-ώς καὶ κ.τ.λ.] 'so that I have received even more than I asked for'. He had prayed that he might see the Romans; he was permitted to visit them, decorated with a prisoner's fetters and (so he ventured to hope) crowned with a martyr's chaplet. For the ideas associated with δέσμιος in the mind of Ignatius see the notes on Ephes. 3, 11, Magn. 1. For ws with the infinitive, expressing the consequence, see e.g. Acts xx. 24 (v. l.), Clem. Hom. i. 20 ώς έκπλαγέντα με θαυμάζειν, 3 Μαςς, i. 2 ώς μόνος κτείναι αὐτόν. It is not very uncommon in classical authors, e.g. Æsch. Eum. 36, Xen. Anab. i. 5. 10, i. 8. 10, iii. 4. 25, iv. 3. 29 (with Kühner's notes), and fairly common in later writers. The reading of the MSS here seems quite unintelligible, though the editors have hitherto acquiesced in it. I have remedied the fault by the repetition of a single letter, πλέον η ητούμην for πλέον ητούμην (comp. e.g. the vv. ll. in Gal. v. 1, Clem. Rom. 35, ii. 8). For the construction comp. Aristid. Op. I. p. 48 σκέπης έδει πλείονος ή φέρειν δυναίμην. Another simple emendation would be $\pi\lambda \acute{\epsilon}o\nu$ $\acute{\omega}\nu$ for $\pi\lambda \acute{\epsilon}o\nu$, as the ων might easily have been omitted owing to homœoteleuton; comp. Polyc. Ι αἰτοῦ σύνεσιν πλείονα ἦs ἔχεις, ib. 3 πλέον σπουδαίος γίνου οδ εί.

I. εὐοικονόμητος] So too δυσοικονόμητος, e.g. Artem. Oneir. ii. 58. The words more often have the meaning 'digestible', 'indigestible', e.g. Diphilus of Siphnus in Athen. ii. p. 54, where both occur. They are rare in any sense.

πέρατος] 'the termination, goal', as e.g. Lucian Harmon. 2 ἐπὶ τὸ πέρας ἀφίξη τῆς εὐχῆς. This reading, which I have restored, seems to follow from a comparison of the authorities as given above. We can there trace the genesis of the variations. The original reading would be emended thus χάρι $\dot{\epsilon}$ αν πέρατος, whence would arise two variations; (1) $\dot{\epsilon}$ άνπερ χάριτος, the reading of GL; (2) $\dot{\epsilon}$ άν πέρατος χάριτος, the reading of A_m , which is also the foundation of Sm g.

2. τὸν κλῆρόν μου] See the note on Trall. 12 for this use of κλῆρος, referring to his martyrdom. In ἀπολαβεῖν, 'to secure', the preposition probably denotes that it was his proper, destined lot: comp. [Clem. Rom.] ii. 8, and see the notes on Galatians iv. 5.

3. φοβοῦμαι κ.τ.λ.] For the construction see Winer § lxvi. p. 782.

The persecutions in the reign of Domitian show that Christianity had already forced its way upwards to the highest ranks of society in Rome (see Clement of Rome I. p. 29 sq). Although Ignatius had been condemned to death, yet the intercession of powerful friends in the metropolis, whether open Christians or secret sympathisers, might have procured, if not a pardon, at least a commutation of his sentence. An instance of such interposition with the emperor on behalf of Christian convicts at a later date is given by Hippol. Haer. ix. 12. The strenuous efforts of the Christians under like circumstances are described in Lucian Peregr. 12 έπεὶ δ' οὖν ἐδέδετο, οἱ Χριστιανοί συμφοράν ποιούμενοι τὸ πράγμα πάντα ἐκίνουν ἐξαρπάσαι πειρώμενοι αὐτόν. Ignatius appears to have heard that such efforts were contem5 δύσκολόν έστιν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐπιτυχεῖν, ἐάνπερ ὑμεῖς μὴ φείσησθέ μου.

5. Θεοῦ ἐπιτυχεῖν] See the note on Magn. 1.

μη φείσησθέ μου] 'if you should not spare me', i.e. 'should interpose to rob me of my desire.' To Ignatius martyrdom is life: comp. § 6 μη έμποδίσητέ μοι (not θανείν, as we might have expected, but) ζησαι. Whosoever stands between him and this his true life, does him a wrong (ἀδικήση just above). Such a person grudges him a blessing (§ 3 οὐδέποτε έβασκάνατε οὐδενί, § 7 βασκανία ἐν ὑμῖν μή κατοικείτω). Hence in his nomenclature the meaning of words is reversed. To 'spare' means to deliver to death, because death is life. From not understanding this, transcribers here have omitted the negative. Similarly μη was omitted in some texts in § 6 μη θελήσητέ με ἀποθανεῖν (see the note there).

II. 'I would not have you please men but God, as indeed you are doing. For me this is the great opportunity of finding God, while for you it will be the noblest achievement to hold your peace. If you are silent and leave me to my fate, I shall become an utterance of God; if you are solicitous for my life in the flesh, I shall be reduced again to an inarticulate cry. Permit me—I ask nothing more—to pour out my blood as a libation to God, while there is still an altar ready. Encircle this altar as a chorus, and sing your hymn of thanksgiving to God in Christ for summoning the bishop of Syria from the rising to the setting of the sun. Yes, it is good for me to set from the world, that I may rise unto God.'

7. ἀνθρωπαρεσκήσαι κ.τ.λ.] For the opposition see Gal. i. 10, 1 Thess. ii. 4. The adjective ἀνθρωπάρεσκος is a Pauline word, Eph. vi. 6, Col. iii. 22, and it occurs also in Ps. lii. 7; comp. [Clem. Rom.] ii. § 13. The verb is not found either in the LXX or in the N. T. Justin (Apol. i. 2) uses ἀνθρωπαρέσκεια. This family of words seems to be confined to biblical and ecclesiastical Greek. On these forms see Lobeck Phryn. p. 621. By 'pleasing men' he means abetting those friends who desired to save him, or gratifying the merely human cravings of his own nature: comp. έὰν ἐρασθῆτε τῆς σαρκός μου just below.

Other authorities supply different words; sum A_m; sum mihi S_m Joann-Mon (once); ero Σ Joann-Mon (once); fiam A; but there is no reason to think that any corresponding word stood in their Greek text. There is no sufficient authority for the omission of έγὼ (with Zahn): it appears directly in GLAA_mMg Joann-Mon (once), and is represented, though less emphatically, in the sum mihi of S_m Joann-Mon (once). λ όγον θεοῦ] L*ΣS_m Joann-Mon (twice); θεοῦ (om. λ όγον) GMg; ego verbum sum (aut; ego dei sum) A_m (where both readings are recognised, but the first imperfectly, for there is no other evidence for έγὼ λ όγον without θ εοῦ). A has si siletis a me verbo ego pars dei fiam. This departure from the infinitive after καιρὸν τοιοῦτον comp. e.g. Hom. Od. vii. 309 οὔ μοι τοιοῦτον ἐνὶ στήθεσσι φίλον κῆρ μαψι-δίως κεχολῶσθαι, and see Kühner II. pp. 580, 1011.

I. κρείττονι κ.τ.λ.] 'have your name attached to, have ascribed to you, win the credit of, any nobler achievement': as e.g. Plut. Mor. p. 326 Ε την τύχην τοις κατορθώμασιν έαυτην ἐπιγράφουσαν, Dionys. A. R. vii. 50 τοις έκβαίνουσι παρά τὰς ύμετέρας συνθήκας οὐ τὴν τύχην ἀλλὰ τὴν ύμετέραν έπιγράφει διάνοιαν, Ælian Η. Α. viii. 2 τοις άλλοτρίοις έαυτον πόνοις οὐκ ἐπιγράφων. Sometimes the dative is omitted, and ἐπιγράφειν τινά signifies 'to give the credit to a person', e.g. Clem. Hom. ix. 16, 17, 18, xii. 11, while ἐπιγράφεσθαι is 'to have the credit', ib. xi. 9. So in Latin Seneca de Brev. Vit. 16 'quid aliud est vitia nostra incendere, quam auctores illis inscribere deos'. The metaphor is taken from a public tablet, where the name of the person is added to the mention of the achievement.

2. $\sigma \iota \omega \pi \dot{\eta} \sigma \eta \tau \epsilon \ d\pi' \ \dot{\epsilon} \mu o \hat{v}$ With reference to what follows, 'Silence in you is speech in me'. The twice repeated $\dot{\epsilon} \dot{a} \nu \ \sigma \iota \omega \pi \dot{\eta} \sigma \eta \tau \epsilon$ shows the nature of the efforts which Ignatius feared from his Roman friends. They might plead for his life. The words 'be silent from me' are a condensed expression for 'be silent and leave me

λόγος Θεοῦ κ.τ.λ.] 'a word of God'. The saint's career, if it is left to work out its course and ends in martyrdom, will be a word of God; it will be an expressive testimony to the Gospel, a manifestation of the Divine purpose: but, if interfered with, it will be reduced to a mere inarticulate meaningless cry. The point of this sentence depends on a recognised distinction between λόγος and φωνή, as denoting respectively 'an intelligible utterance' and an 'irrational cry'; comp. Arist. Probl. xi. 55 (p. 905) λόγου κοινωνεί μόνον (ἄνθρωπος), τὰ δὲ ἄλλα φωνῆς, de Interpr. 4 (p. 16) λόγος δέ έστι φωνή σημαντική κ.τ.λ. It was a Stoic definition also that λόγος ἀεὶ σημαντικός ἐστι (Diog. Laert. vii. 57). See Lersch Sprachphilos. d. Alten iii. p. 32 sq, 42 sq. Thus φωνή, as Aristotle says elsewhere (de Gen. An. v. 7, p. 786), is merely the $\tilde{v}\lambda\eta$ of λόγος. It has in it the making of hóyos. The three words hóyos, φωνή, ψόφος, are in a descending scale, and denote respectively; (1) the utterance of a rational being; (2) the cry of an animate creature, whether articulate or not; (3) a mere confused indistinguishable sound; comp. Arist. de An. ii. 8 (p. 420) ή φωνή ψόφος τίς έστιν έμψύχου. They are respectively 'an utterance', 'a cry', and 'a noise'. It will be seen from γάρ σιωπήσητε ἀπ' έμοῦ, έγω λόγος Θεοῦ· έὰν δὲ έρασ-

the Syriac may be explained in several ways; (1) A may have read verbo for verbum, and pars dei may represent θεοῦ; (2) There may have been in the Syriac text of the translator a corruption verbum, and a subsequent correction, so that both words were retained; (3) The mixed result may be due to a confusion of the two Greek readings εγὼ λόγος θεοῦ and εγὼ γενήσομαι θεοῦ, the Armenian text having been clumsily and imperfectly corrected by a Greek Ms which had the latter. The substitution of currens in the next clause from such a Greek Ms favours this last explanation.

this distinction, why Ignatius uses φωνή rather than ψόφος; for φωνή, as such, though it does not imply reason, yet expresses animal emotion, Arist. Pol. i. 2 (p. 1253) ή μεν οὖν φωνή τοῦ λυπηρού και ήδέος έστι σημείου, διό καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ὑπάρχει ζώοις... ὁ δὲ λόγος έπὶ τῷ δηλοῦν έστι τὸ συμφέρου καὶ τὸ βλαβερόν, ωστε καὶ τὸ δίκαιον καὶ τὸ ἄδικον τοῦτο γὰρ πρὸς τἆλλα ζῶα τοις ανθρώποις ίδιον, το μόνον άγαθοῦ καὶ κακοῦ καὶ δικαίου καὶ ἀδίκου καὶ τῶν άλλων αισθησιν έχειν. Hence φωνή stands to hoyos in the same relation as the ψυχικός ἄνθρωπος to the πνευματικός. So again Plut. Mor. p. 1026 Α ώς δὲ φωνή τις ἐστὶν ἄλογος καὶ ἀσήμαντος, λόγος δε λέξις έν φωνή σημαντική διανοίας; comp. Plato Theaet. p. 203 Β εὖ ἔχει λέγεσθαι αὐτὰ ἄλογα, ὧν γε τὰ έναργέστατα... Φωνην μόνον έχει, λόγον δὲ οὐδ' ὁντινοῦν.

This distinction of $\lambda \delta \gamma o s$ and $\phi \omega v \dot{\gamma}$ was at once pressed into the service of Christian theology. Melito (Fragm. xv, ed. Otto: see Cureton Spicil. Syr. pp. \rightarrow , 53) speaks of our Lord as 'among angels the Archangel, among voices the Word', where the editors (Renan, Cureton, Sachau) all have the singular 'in voce', 'in the voice', but where we ought certainly to read the plural \leftarrow with ribui. So again Heracleon the Valentinian saw this distinction in John i. I, 14, where our Lord is called $\delta \lambda \delta \gamma o s$, as contrasted with i. 23, where the Baptist styles himself φωνή βοώντος, adding that the prophets were $\eta \chi os$ and arguing την φωνην οίκειοτέραν οδσαν τῷ λόγῳ λόγον γίνεσθαι (Orig. in Ioann. vi § 12, IV. p. 121). And Origen himself, though rejecting the comments of Heracleon, assumes the distinction of λόγος and φωνή as underlying the language of S. John, and argues at length from it, the φωνή being the minister and forerunner of the λόγος (ib. ii § 26, p. 85; vi § 10, p. 118 sq; comp. c. Cels. vi. 9). The Docetæ too in Hippolytus (Haer. viii. o) base some of their speculations on this distinction. See also Clem. Alex. Protr. I (p. 8) πρόδρομος 'Ιωαννής, καὶ ή φωνη πρόδρομος τοῦ λόγου κ.τ.λ.: comp. Strom. viii. 2, p. 914 sq. From Origen more especially the distinction would find its way into later fathers; comp. Meletius in Epiph. Haer. lxxiii. 30 (p. 878), Ephr. Syr. Evang. Conc. Exp. 3 sq, 39 (ed. Mæsinger).

The passage of Ignatius is explained accordingly by John the Monk in the latter part of the fourth century (see Quotations and References no. 21), who writes, 'The Word is not of the flesh but of the Spirit, whereas the Voice is not of the Spirit but of the flesh...for every beast and bird together with cattle and creeping thing of the earth utter the voice only; but because man has in him a

It should be noticed that in G the words πάλιν ἔσομαι τρέχων are omitted in the text and added in the margin, though apparently by the same hand. The alterations in this context, (1) the insertion of γενήσομαι, (2) the omission of λόγος, (3) the substitution of τρέχων for φωνή, all hang together; see the lower note. The departure of A here from the original text of the Syriac Version, as shown by readings of Σ Joann-Mon, must be explained as the alteration of some later scribe who substituted in a familiar quotation the form with which he was acδέ] MLg; jam Am; igitur Sm; quainted. πλέον] GM; πλείον g. om. soul and is not like the rest of the other bodies, he uses the Word and the Voice etc.', with much more to the same effect, and he refers in the context to the contrast between the Word and the Voice in John i. 1, 14, 23. This is doubtless substantially the meaning of Ignatius. His martyrdom alone would make his life an intelligible utterance; otherwise it was no better than the passionate cry of some irrational creature to whom life is pleasure or pain, and nothing more. In the highest sense of all One only is the Aóyos, the Word of God; but all His saints, made perfect in knowledge, are utterances, words, of God, as fragments of the One Word.

Partly because he did not understand this distinction of $\lambda \acute{o} \gamma o s$ and $\phi \omega \nu \acute{\eta}$, and partly (we may suppose) because he shrank from applying the term $\lambda \acute{o} \gamma o s$ $\theta \acute{e} o \iota o$ to any one but Christ, the interpolator has altered the passage after his wont, substituting $\acute{e} \gamma \acute{\omega} \gamma \epsilon \nu \acute{\eta} \sigma \sigma \mu a \iota \theta \epsilon o \iota o$ for $\acute{e} \gamma \acute{\omega} \lambda \acute{o} \gamma o s$ $\theta \acute{e} o \iota o$ and $\tau \rho \acute{e} \chi \omega \nu$ for $\phi \omega \nu \acute{\eta}$. Wordsworth (Church History I. p. 143) translates $\pi \acute{a} \lambda \iota \nu \tau \rho \acute{e} \chi \omega \nu$ 'renegade, backslider', referring to his note on παλινδρομείν, S. Hippolytus p. 124 (ed. 2); but the interpolator probably meant that Ignatius, instead of receiving the crown of victory, would be put back again to run the race (comp. Macar. Magn. iii. 40, p. 138, κέκλεισται τῶν πόνων καὶ των δρόμων τὸ στάδιον...καὶ σὺ πάλιν ανοίγεις καὶ τρέχειν ἐπιτάττεις κ.τ.λ.: and for the metaphor see also Polyc. Ι προσθείναι τῷ δρόμω σου; 50 too τρέχειν in 1 Cor. ix. 24, 26, Gal. ii. 2, v. 7, Phil. ii. 16, etc., and δρόμος Acts xx. 24, 2 Tim. iv. 7). But he has spoiled the antithesis. From the interpolator it has got into the Greek MS of Ignatius. Cureton suggested ηχώ for τρέχων on account of the similarity of the letters, and this not very happy conjecture is adopted by Bunsen p. 96, by Lipsius S. T. pp. 75, 196, and by Zahn, though Cureton himself (C. I. p. 292) retracted it in favour of φωνή. But obviously the case here is not one of a clerical error, but of a deliberate alteration. Moreover $\phi\omega\nu\dot{\eta}$ is required as well by the common antithesis of λόγος and φωνή, as also by the renderings of the versions; e.g. the Latin 'vox', which is not an equivalent to πλέον κ.τ.λ.] 'give me nothing more on your part', 'I ask no favour of you beyond this.' Οn παρέχεσθαι see the note Colossians iv. I.

2. τοῦ σπονδισθηναι 'to be poured out as a libation'. The idea is taken from S. Paul, Phil. ii. 17 εἰ καὶ σπένδομαι έπὶ τῆ θυσία κ.τ.λ., 2 Tim. iv. 6, έγω γαρ ήδη σπένδομαι. In both these passages it occurs in immediate connexion with the metaphor of the stadium, and this may possibly have suggested $\tau \rho \epsilon \chi \omega \nu$ to the interpolator. The word occurs also in Joann. Damasc. Ep. ad Theoph. 18 (I. p. 639) ύπὸ τοῦ μαθηματικοῦ Ἑβραίου τῷ διαβόλφ σπονδιζόμενος. The lexicons give the meaning 'to be reconciled' $(=\sigma\pi\epsilon\nu\delta\sigma\mu\alpha\iota)$ in both passages. This meaning might be possible in John Damascene, as the word might there be middle, but in Ignatius neither

ώς ἔτι θυσιαστήριον κ.τ.λ.] 'while yet there is an altar ready', i.e. prepared for the sacrifice. The altar intended is, we may suppose, the Flavian amphitheatre, the scene of his approaching martyrdom.

3. χορὸs] The Roman Christians are asked to form into a chorus and sing the sacrificial hymn round the altar; comp. Ephes. 4 καὶ οἱ κατ' ἄν-δρα δὲ χορὸς γίνεσθε. The metaphor is taken from a heathen sacrificial rite; see K. F. Hermann Gottes-dienstl. Alterth. ii. § 29. For a similar figure borrowed from a heathen religious procession see Ephes. 9 ἐστὲ οὖν καὶ σύνοδοι κ.τ.λ.

4. τὸν ἐπίσκοπον Συρίαs] 'the bishop belonging to Syria', i.e. 'from the distant east'; the genitive denoting, not the extent of his jurisdiction, but the place of his abode. On the supposition that episcopal jurisdiction is implied, objection has been taken to Συρίας (which is wanting in one copy of the Curetonian Syriac) as an anachronism in the time of Ignatius, and therefore as an indication of the spuriousness of the Greek Epistles (Bunsen

Moreover the other MS of the Syriac version contains the word, and therefore its omission in this one copy must be due, not to the text which was before the original translator, but to an excision practised by a later scribe.

S. Chrysostom obviously alludes to this passage in his oration on Ignatius, Op. besides several other allusions to this passage more or less direct. See also Ephrem Syrus Op. Graec. III. p. 261 ἔδυσαν ἀπὸ κόσμου καὶ πρὸς Χριστὸν ἀνέτειλαν, quoted by Zahn.

2. καλὸν τὸ δῦναι κ.τ.λ.] He was following the course of the sun; his life would set to the world in the far west; but as the sun rises, so it also would rise again to God. For this expressive intermingling of the actual and the metaphorical, see κατάκριτος § 4. There is a somewhat similar turn in 2 Tim. ii. 9 ἐν ῷ κακοπαθῶ μέχρι δεσμῶν, ὡς κακοῦργος, ἀλλὰ ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ οὖ δέδεται.

The name will follow in due course. My faithfulness will then be manifest, when I am no more seen by the world. Nothing visible is of any worth. Our God Jesus Christ Himself is the more clearly seen, since He has returned to the Father. The work of the Gospel is not a matter of persuasive rhetoric: Christianity

4. ἐβασκάνατε οὐδενί] 'grudged any one', i.e. the triumph of martyrdom: comp. § 7 βασκανία ἐν ὑμῖν μὴ κατοικείτω, where he is speaking of the same thing. 'Do not', writes Ignatius, 'depart from your true character; you have hitherto sped the martyrs forward to victory, do not now interpose and enviously rob me of my crown.' For the form and meaning of ἐβασκάνατε see Galatians iii. I. The dative is required here: for $\beta a \sigma$ καίνειν τινά is either 'to bewitch' or 'to calumniate', while βασκαίνειν τινί is 'to envy'; see Lobeck Phryn. p. 463.

άλλους εδιδάξατε 'you instructed others', i.e. in the training of the Christian athlete; comp. Rome had hitherto been the chief arena of martyrdom; the Roman brethren had cheered on many a Christian hero in this glorious contest during the persecutions of Nero and Domitian. The expression might therefore refer to the Roman martyrs themselves, in which case ἄλλους would be 'others besides myself'. Perhaps however allows here means 'others besides yourselves'. In this case Ignatius would refer to the exhortations of the Romans, whether by letter or by delegates, to foreign churches. More especially we may suppose that he had in his mind the Epistle of Clement, which contains several references to confessors and martyrs, with exhortations to patient endurance founded on these examples; e.g. § 7 ταῦτα, ἀγαπητοί, οὐ μόνον ύμας νουθετούντες έπιστέλλομεν κ.τ.λ., § 46 τοιούτοις οὖν ὑποδείγμασιν κολληθηναι καὶ ήμας δεί κ.τ.λ., § 55 ίνα δὲ καὶ ὑποδείγματα ἐθνῶν ἐνέγκωμεν κ.τ.λ. There are other slight indications also in Ignatius that he was acquainted with the Epistle of Clement; and the fact of his mentioning S. Peter and S. Paul in connexion a little below (§ 4), just as they are mentioned in Clement (§ 5), makes this inference very probable. Zahn (I. v. A. p. 313) supposes that Ignatius alludes also to the Shepherd of Hermas, which is directed to be sent els τας έξω πόλεις (Vis. ii. 4); but this assumes the early date of Hermas, which is at least doubtful.

5. $\epsilon\gamma\dot{\omega}$ de $\theta\epsilon\lambda\omega$ k. τ . λ .] 'For myself, I only desire that you should be consistent, so that the lessons, which you thus give to your disciples, may not fail when it comes to a practical issue in my own case.' Ignatius always uses $\mu\alpha\theta\eta\tau\epsilon\dot{\nu}\epsilon\nu$ as a transitive verb; comp. § 5 below, and $E\rho\hbar\nu\epsilon$ s. 3, 10. So too Matt. xiii. 52, xxviii. 19, Acts xiv. 21, and probably also Matt.

Zahn (Add. et Corr. p. 404) has pointed out that this expression is quoted by Origen de Orat. 20 (I. p. 229) οὐδεν φαινόμενον καλόν έστιν, οίονει δοκήσει ον και ουκ άληθως.

- IV. 'I write and tell all the churches that I die gladly for Christ, unless you hinder me. I beseech you, be not inopportune in your kindness. Give me to the wild beasts, that so I may be given to God. I am the wheat of God, and am ground by their teeth, that I may be made pure bread for a sacrificial offering. Lure the wild beasts that they may devour me wholly and leave no part of my body to be a trouble to any. So shall I be truly a disciple, when the world sees me no more. Pray God, that I may be found a fit sacrifice to Him. I do not command you, as if I were Peter or Paul. I am only a convict, not an apostle; only a slave, not a free man. Yet, if I suffer, I shall be liberated by Christ, and be free in the resurrection. At present I am learning from my bonds to crush all my desires'.
- 1. πάσαις ταις έκκλησίαις] So Lucian relates of Peregrinus (§ 41) φασι δέ πάσαις σχεδὸν ταις ένδόξοις πόλεσιν έπιστολὰς διαπέμψαι αὐτὸν κ.τ.λ. Ignatius was afterwards prevented by circumstances from entirely fulfilling this intention: Polyc. 8 ἐπεὶ πάσαις ταις εκκλησίαις οὐκ ἢδυνήθην γράψαι

- $\kappa.\tau.\lambda$. It may have been the apparent contradiction between these two passages which led to the omission of $\pi \dot{\alpha} \sigma a \iota s$ in some texts of Ignatius here.
- 3. εἴνοια ἄκαιρος] They were kindness itself to him, but this kindness was inopportune. An easy alteration would be εἶνοία ἄκαιροι, but the text is probably correct as it stands. It seems to be a reference to the proverb ἄκαιρος εῗνοι οὐδὲν ἔχθρας διαφέρει (Zenob. Paroem. i. 50); comp. § 8 ἐὰν ἀποδοκιμασθῶ, ἐμισήσατε.
- 4. $\theta\eta\rho i\omega\nu$] The opposition between $\theta\eta\rho i\omega\nu$ and $\Theta\epsilon\hat{o}\hat{v}$ is studied. He must first be the wild-beasts', that in the end he may be God's; comp. Smyrn. 4 $\mu\epsilon\tau a\hat{\xi}\hat{v}$ $\theta\eta\rho i\omega\nu$, $\mu\epsilon\tau a\hat{\xi}\hat{v}$ $\Theta\epsilon\hat{o}\hat{v}$. The insertion of $\beta\rho\hat{\rho}\hat{a}\nu$ or $\beta\rho\hat{\omega}\mu a$ in the existing Greek texts entirely mars the antithesis.
- Θεοῦ ἐπιτυχεῖν] See the note on Magn. I.
- 6. ἀλήθομαι] 'I am ground'; the present indicative being used, as in ἀποθνήσκω above. The correction ἀλήθωμαι is unnecessary and weakens the sense. As regards the form, ἀλεῖν is considered by some more Attic than ἀλήθειν; see Lobeck Phryn.

Νοια ἄκαιρος γένησθέ μοι. ἄφετέ με θηρίων είναι, 5 δι' ὧν [ἔν-]εστιν Θεοῦ ἐπιτυχεῖν. σῖτός εἰμι Θεοῦ, καὶ δι' ὀδόντων θηρίων ἀλήθομαι, ἵνα καθαρὸς ἄρτος εὐρεθῶ

p. 151. The latter form occurs in other dialects, and even in Pherecrates (quoted by Suidas s.v.) $\partial \nu \eta \rho$ (δè) $\gamma \epsilon \rho \omega \nu$ $\partial \nu \delta \omega \tau \sigma s$ $\partial \lambda \eta \theta \epsilon \iota$, which illustrates the expression as well as the form here. Meineke however (Fragm. Com. II. pp. 285, 292) gives reasons for questioning the reading. From $\partial \lambda \epsilon \nu$ comes the substantive $\partial \lambda \epsilon \sigma \mu \delta s$, which is better supported than $\partial \lambda \eta \sigma \mu \delta s$ below, in § 5.

καθαρὸς ἄρτος 'a pure, clean loaf'; comp. Jos. Ant. iii. 10. 5 καθαρὰς πρὸς ἀλεστῶν (v. l. ἀλεσμὸν) τὰς κριθάς ποιήσαντες τῷ βωμῷ ἀσσάρωνα $\pi \rho \circ \sigma \acute{a} \gamma \circ \upsilon \sigma \iota \tau \acute{\varphi} \Theta \epsilon \acute{\varphi}$. The epithet is especially applied to ἄρτος; e.g. Alexis (Fragm. Com. III. p. 483, Meineke) ἄρτος καθαρὸς εἶς έκατέρω, ποτήριον ύδατος, of the Pythagoreans; Hermeias (Athen. iv. p. 149 Ε) ἔπειτα έκάστω παρατίθεται άρτος καθαρός, of a sacred banquet; Lamprid. Vit. Alex. Sev. 37 'panis mundus', opposed to 'panis sequens' (i.e. 'seconds'). The purest bread (ὁ καθαρώτατος ἄρ-Tos), according to Galen, was called in Latin σιλιγνίτης (i. e. 'siliginea'), the next quality in point of pureness being σεμιδαλίτης (Ορ. VI. p. 483, Kühn.). As symbolical of purity, ἄρτοι καθαροί were offered in sacrifice;

e.g. Herod. ii. 40. See also the passage of Josephus quoted above. This is doubtless the quaint but beautiful thought of Ignatius here. He was the grain of God; by the teeth of the wild beasts he would be ground into fine flour; thus he would become a pure sacrificial loaf fit for the altar of God. See Θεοῦ θυσία below, and comp. σπονδισθῆναι § 2. See the Μενικα (Dec. 20) σῖτος Θεοῦ καθαρὸς εἰμί, ἔλεγες, καὶ δὶ ὀδόντων θηρίων ἀλήθομαι, ἵνα ἄρτος γένωμαι ἱεροτελούμενος τῷ ἐραστῆ καὶ Θεῷ κεκαθαρμένος.

So far the metaphor is clear. But we may perhaps go a step further and see a reference to the offering of the Pentecostal loaves. These were ordered to be made of fine flour (Lev. xxiii. 17); it was sifted twelve times to insure the greatest purity (Mishna Menachoth vi. 7); the loaves were eaten the same night, and no fragment was allowed to remain till the morning (Jos. Ant. iii. 10. 6). The language of Josephus, describing this last regulation, closely resembles the context of Ignatius here; προσάγουσι τῷ Θεῷ ἄρτον...καὶ καταλιπείν οὐδέν έστιν έξ αὐτῶν εἰς την έπιουσαν συγκεχωρημένον.

Ignatius: see the note on Polyc. 2. 2. τάφος γένωνται | So in the Menæa (Dec. 20) it is said of Ignatius σπλάγχνα θηρίων σοι τάφος γεγόνασιν. Gorgias spoke of vultures as $\xi \mu \psi \nu \chi o \iota$ τάφοι (Longin. de Subl. iii. 2). Our own Spenser has the expression 'to be entombed in the raven or the kight', Fairy Queen ii. 8. 16. The last two passages, with others from Latin writers, are given by Munro on Lucret. v. 993 'Viva videns vivo sepeliri viscera busto'. Compare Suicer Thes. s.v. τάφος for other illustrations. μηθέν καταλίπωσιν] In one Martyrology, the Antiochene (§ 6), it is related that the saint's wish was almost literally fulfilled, ἵνα μηδενὶ τῶν ἀδελφων ἐπαχθής διὰ τῆς συλλογῆς τοῦ λειψάνου γένηται, καθώς έν τη έπιστολή την ιδίαν έπεθύμει γενέσθαι τελείωσιν. μόνα γὰρ τὰ τραχύτερα τῶν λειψάνων περιελείφθη, άτινα είς την 'Αντιόχειαν $\dot{a}\pi\epsilon\kappa o\mu i\sigma\theta\eta$ κ.τ.λ. In the other, the Roman, this wish is entirely ignored, (§ 10) οἱ λέοντες...προσπεσόντες ἀπέπνιξαν [αὐτὸν] μόνον, οὐκ ἔθιγον δὲ αὐτοῦ τῶν σαρκῶν, ἵνα τὸ λείψανον αὐτοῦ εἴη φυλακτήριον τῆ 'Ρωμαίων πόλει κ.τ.λ., though in this latter document the passage has been altered in one copy to conform it to the other account (see the note on the passage). In either legend the narrative has been framed to meet the claims of certain cities to the possession of the saint's reliques. It may safely be said that the saint had no thought of the preservation Κύριον ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ, ἵνα διὰ τῶν ὀργάνων τούτων Θεοῦ θυσία εὐρεθῶ. Θεοῦ θνοία] The omission of Θεοῦ in some texts must be explained by the similar letters θγθγcια. For this reason Θεοῦ is to be preferred to Θεοῦ. See however the v. l. in Clem.

Rom. 10 θυσίαν [τώ Θεώ].

7. ως Πέτρος καὶ Παῦλος] S. Peter and S. Paul are especially mentioned, because they had been at Rome and had given commandments (διετάξαντο) to the Roman Church; see the note on Ephes. 12 Παύλου συμμύσται. For the combined mention of these two Apostles in connexion with the Roman Church in early writers see the note on Clem. Rom. 5, where also their names appear in conjunction. It is worth observing that this phenomenon appears in the earliest document emanating from, as well as in the earliest document addressed to, the Roman Church, after the death of the two Apostles.

κατάκριτος] 'a convict.' His judicial condemnation by the Roman power was a type of his unworthiness, his conviction, in the sight of God; his δικαίωσις was yet to come (§ 5 οὐ παρὰ τοῦτο δεδικαίωμαι). inferred from this (Bunsen Ign. p. 58, Ritschl Altkath. Kirche p. 412), that Ignatius was, or had been, actually a slave. This inference is at all events supported by the analogy of κατάκριτος, which describes an actual fact, though taken as the symbol of a spiritual state. Some external fact indeed seems to be required; but probably Ignatius means nothing more than that, as a prisoner, he was subject to the despotic will of others; see Zahn I. v. A. p. 410 sq.

I will lure them on to devour me. Even if they are unwilling, I will force them to it. Pardon me, I know what is good for me. I would not have anything visible or invisible stand between me and God. theatre will be to me then.' The metaphor of θηριομαχῶ is suggested by I Cor. xv. 32 εἰ κατὰ ἄνθρωπον ἐθηριομάχησα ἐν ἙΦέσῳ, but it has reference to the literal θηριομαχία which awaits him. See the saying of Pompeius in Appian Bell. Civ. ii. 61 οῖοις θηρίοις μαχόμεθα, and Lucian Pisc. 17 οἰ γὰρ τοῖς τυχοῦσι θηρίοις προσπολεμῆσαι δεήσει μοι, ἀλλὶ ἀλαζόσιν ἀνθρώποις καὶ δυσελέγκτοις, quoted in Wetstein on I Cor. l. c. δια γης και θαλάσσης This expression has been thought to militate against the statement in Mart. Ign. Ant. 3 κατελθών ἀπὸ 'Αντιοχείας είς την Σελεύκειαν, έκειθεν είχετο του πλόος καὶ προσχών μετὰ πολύν κάματον τῆ Σμυρναίων πόλει κ.τ.λ., as the few miles from Antioch to its port Seleucia would hardly justify the διά vis. The difficulty however is not serious. Ignatius is referring to the whole journey, not yet completed, so that not only the stay at Smyrna, but the way across the continent from Neapolis and Philippi to Dyrrhachium will be included. On the other hand Eusebius speaks of it as a land journey through Asia Minor, Η. Ε. iii. 36 την δι' 'Ασίας ανακομιδήν, and this is required by another expression in this epistle, § 9 των έκκλησιών των δεξαμένων με...ούχ ώς παροδεύοντα· καὶ γὰρ αί μὴ προσήκου- σ αί μοι τ $\hat{\eta}$ όδ $\hat{\varphi}$ κ.τ.λ. In this case the difficulty is to explain διὰ θαλάσσης; but the answer is the same. It is far from improbable indeed that (as Zahn suggests, I. v. A. p. 253) they should have taken ship from Seleucia to some Cilician or Pamphylian harbour, in order to shorten the route; but, even without this, the saint is contemplating the voyages from Smyrna to Troas, from Troas to Neapolis, and from Dyrrhachium to Puteoli or Ostia or Portus, which are yet to come.

4. ἐνδεδεμένος This reading is better supported and more appropriate than δεδεμένος. The saint was attended by a company of ten soldiers, who relieved guard in turn, so that he was always bound night and day to one of them by a αλυσις or 'coupling-chain.' On this 'custodia militaris' see Philippians p. 8 sq. It is probable that the soldiers were in charge of other prisoners also, though these are not mentioned by Ignatius. We might have conjectured that among these were Zosimus and Rufus who are mentioned by Polycarp (Phil. 9) together with Ignatius, as visiting Philippi (apparently) on their way to martyrdom. But if his fellow-prisoners had been Christians, he would probably have alluded to them.

1. λεοπάρδοις This is the earliest occurrence of the word in any extant writing. Thirty or forty years before however Pliny (N. H. viii. 17) speaks of 'leones quos pardi generavere,' so that the word was then on the point of formation, if not already formed. And about fifty years later than Ignatius, we find it in Galen (Op. v. p. 134, Kühn) έπὶ λεόντων καὶ λεαινών καὶ παρδάλεών τε καὶ λεοπάρδων, ἄρκτων τε καὶ λύκων, οἱ τὰς σάρκας αὐτών ήδέως έσθίοντες άφίστανται του σπληνὸς ώς ἀβρώτου, where it is used as a familiar word. The work quoted, de Atra Bile, appears to have been one of Galen's earliest treatises; see Op. I. p. lxxviii. Again in a rescript of Marcus and Commodus (i.e. between A.D. 177-180), quoted by Marcianus in Dig. xxxix. 4. 16, mention is made of 'leones, leaenae, pardi, leopardi, pantherae,' among commodities liable to customs' duty. Again in the contemporary Acts of Perpetua and Felicitas, who were sacrificed to grace a birthday of Geta about A.D. 202, this word occurs several times; § 19 'leopardum experti,' ib. 'ab uno morsu leopardi,' § 21 'ab uno morsu leopardi' (again), ib. 'leopardo objectus.' Of this Geta too it is related (Spartian. Vit. Get. 5) that he used to ask questions about the cries of different criminals, as 'leones rugiunt, leopardi rictant, elefanti barriunt.' Again of Heliogabalus we are told (Lamprid. Vit. Hel. 21) that he 'habuit leones et leopardos exarmatos in deliciis,' and again (ib. § 25) that he 'subito nocte leones et leopardos et ursos exarmatos inmittebat,' among his drunken friends,

'ita ut expergefacti in cubiculo eodem leones ursos pardos...invenirent,' so that Lampridius appears to use 'leopardus' and 'pardus' as synonymes. Under the younger Gordian again mention is made, among other foreign animals exhibited at Rome, of 'leopardi mansueti triginta,' Capitol. Vit. Gord. 33. Of Probus too it is related (Vopisc. Vit. Prob. 19) that 'editi deinde centum leopardi Libyci, centum deinde Syriaci.' This last word explains why leopards should occur to Ignatius as naturally as lions or tigers. In the edict of Diocletian also leopards are mentioned, Corp. Inscr. Lat. III. p. 832 δέρμα λεοπάρτου ἄεργον, είργασμένον, 'pellis leopardina infecta, eadem confecta.' The word occurs also in one text of the Acta Philippi 36, but this work is of uncertain date and cannot be very early. In Cant. iv. 8 'pardorum' is quoted 'leopardorum' by Jerome adv. Fovin. i. 30 (II. p. 286).

Bochart (Hierozoicon Pars I. Lib. iii. c. 8) alleged the word as a proof of the late date of the epistles, asserting that it was not used till the age of Constantine. He attempted to set aside some of the passages from the Augustan Historians on the ground that they represented the language of the narrators, and not of the times to which the events belong. Pearson (V. I. p. 456 sq), and Cotelier (ad loc.), besides other considerations, referred to the Acts of Perpetua and Felicitas in reply. But they overlooked the earlier passages from Galen and the Digests, which, so far as I know, are adduced here for the first time; and τούμενοι χείρους γίνονται. ἐν δὲ τοῖς ἀδικήμασιν αὐτῶν

copats p. 156).

The form of the word seems to show that it was of Roman and not Greek origin. The more natural Greek would be λεοντοπάρδαλις, like καμηλοπάρδαλις. Theognostus however (Bekker Anecd. p. 1394) treats it as Greek, and justifies it by the analogy of γεροκόμος (from γέρων), 'Απολλογένης, 'Απολλοφάνης (from 'Απόλλων). In Athanas. Vit. Anton. 9 (I. p. 640), where $\lambda \epsilon o \pi \acute{a} \rho \delta \omega \nu$ occurs, there is a v. l. λεοπαρδάλων (see Festus quoted below). The name originated in the mistaken belief that the animal was a hybrid; see (besides Pliny l. c.) Festus (p. 33, ed. Mueller) 'Bigenera dicuntur animalia ex diverso genere nata, ut leopardalis ex leone et panthera' (where for leopardalis inferior MSS have leopardus), Philostr. Vit. Apoll. ii. 14 (p. 30) λέγεται δὲ καὶ περὶ τῶν λεαινών λόγος, ώς έραστας μέν ποιοθνται τους παρδάλεις κ.τ.λ...στικτά γάρ τίκτουσιν. On the animals intended by the ancients under the several names πάνθηρ, πάρδαλις, pardus, etc., see Wiegemann in Oken's Isis 1831, p.

ο ἐστιν κ.τ.λ.] This looks like a gloss at first sight, but it is found in all the copies. It is added somewhat awkwardly in explanation by Ignatius, as his obscure metaphor might otherwise have been misunderstood.

στρατιωτικὸν τάγμα] 'a company of soldiers.' The word τάγμα here might be rendered in Latin by 'manipulus,' if the disposition of the legion, which Vegetius describes (ii. 13), already prevailed when Ignatius wrote: 'Centuriae in contubernia divisae sunt, ut decem militibus sub uno papilione degentibus unus quasi praeesset decanus, qui caput contubernii nominatur; contubernium autem manipulus vocabatur etc.'; comp. Spartian. Vit. Pesc. Nig. 10 'decem commanipulones.' This is a great departure from the earlier sense of 'manipulus,' which was equivalent to 'centuria,' and contained 100 or 120 men; see Marquardt Röm. Alterth. iii. 2, p. 458 sq (comp. ib. p. 253 sq). The Greek τάγμα is used widely, to denote any body of soldiers, whether maniple or cohort or legion. The very expression which we have here, στρατιωτικόν τάγμα, occurs in Dion. Halic. A. R. vi. 42 of a legion; comp. Dion Cass. lxxi. 9 καλοῦσι δὲ τὸ τάγμα οἱ Ῥωμαῖοι λεγεώνα; but more properly it denoted an 'ordo' or maniple, as in Polyb. vi. 24. 5. For στρατιωτικών τάγμα see Euseb. Quaest. ad Marin. (Ορ. IV. p. 984) ή γαρ κουστωδία στρατιωτικόν έστι τάγμα, Vit. Const. iii. 44, 47, iv. 56, 68, 70, 71. For the number ten comp. Joseph. B. εὐεργετούμενοι κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'the more they receive in gratuities, the harsher and more extortionate they become'; as rightly explained by Pearson (V. I. p. 511) who, to illustrate this mode of procuring comforts for Christian confessors and martyrs, cites Lucian Peregr. 12 συνεκάθευδον ἔνδον μετ' αὐτοῦ διαφθείροντες τοὺς δεσμο-ζηλώσαι] Not ζηλώσαι. The optative is wanted rather than the infinitive. The word here seems to have its common meaning 'envy'; comp. § 3 έβασκάνατε, § 7 βασκανία, with the notes. Zahn however gives it a different sense; 'ζηλοῦν τινά, i.e. studiose gratiam alicuius quaerere omnibusque artificiis aliquem captare', as in Gal. iv. 17, 2 Cor. xi. 2. The expression Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐπιτυχεῖν is equivalent to μαθητής είναι in the language of Ignatius. Both will at length be realised in his martyrdom.

7. νῦν ἄρχομαι κ.τ.λ.] The commencement of his sufferings is the inauguration of his discipleship (see Ephes. 1, 3, notes). This discipleship will only then be complete, when his sufferings are crowned by his passion; comp. § 4 τότε έσομαι μαθητής άληθώς κ.τ.λ.

8. ὁρατῶν ... ἀοράτων] See Trall.

I. συστάσεις] 'conflicts, grapplings with'. As συστάδην μάχεσθαι is a common phrase for 'comminus pugnare', so σύστασις denotes 'a hand to hand engagement', e.g. Plut. Vit. The word σκορπίζειν is an illustration of the exceptional character of the Attic dialect. It appears in Hecatæus, and reappears in writers, sacred and profane, of the post-classical ages; it is called by some an Ionic, by others a Macedonian word; but in Attic it seems not to occur. See Lobeck Phryn. p. 218, and comp.

Pathol. p. 295. For similar instances see Galatians vi. 6, and p. 92; Philippians i. 28, ii. 14.

3. $a\lambda\epsilon\sigma\mu$ οί] For this form see the note on $a\lambda\eta\theta$ ομαι § 4. The reading $a\lambda\nu\sigma\mu$ οί, 'restlessnesses', 'distractions', has no authority (see the upper note) and is inappropriate. It was first introduced into the interpolator's text by the editor Morel, who prints $a\lambda\nu\sigma\mu$ οὶ, and is not found (as Smith states) in the Cod. August. of the interpolator's text.

6. με ώφελήσει] With an accusative, as Mark viii. 36, I Cor. xiv. 6, Heb. iv. 2. This is the common construction; but it sometimes takes a dative, more especially in poetry. See Kühner II. pp. 251, 252.

τὰ πέρατα τοῦ κ.τλ.] 'the boundaries of the earth', i.e. 'the whole earth from one end to the other.' In the LXX τὰ πέρατα τῆς γῆς (τῆς

3. ὁ τοκετός κ.τ.λ.] 'My birthpangs are at hand'. The image refers not only to the birth of the child, but to the pangs of the mother also. Ignatius stood in the position of both the one and the other. His martyrdom represented the pains of labour. They were suffered by the earthly Ignatius; they resulted in the birth of the heavenly. The ωδίνες τοῦ θανάτου (Acts ii. 24) were with him the 'natalicia' of his higher life. For the metaphor, as regards the mother, comp. Gal. iv. 19 τεκνία μου, ούς πάλιν ώδίνω κ.τ.λ.; and as regards the child, e.g. August. Serm. 381 de Natali Apost. (v. p. 1481) 'Natalicio ergo Petri passus est Paulus, non quo ex utero matris in numerum fusus est hominum, sed quo ex vinculo carnis in lucem natus est angelorum', a passage which has more than one resemblance to the language and thoughts of Ignatius here. As this interpretation was written down some years before Zahn's book appeared, I am confirmed in its correctness by finding that he had expressed independently and in other language the same view respecting the double reference in τοκετός (I. v. A. p. 561 sq). The word takes a genitive either of the mother (Ephes. 19, Job xxxix. 1, 2) or of the child (Ecclus. xxiii. 14).

On the other hand the Latin Version renders it 'lucrum', and the Armenian Martyrology gives as an alternative translation 'fenus et lucrum.' So also some modern critics, e.g. Smith p. 99, Denzinger p. 62, who compare Phil. i. 21 τὸ ἀποθανεῖν ἐπίκειται. σύγγνωτέ μοι, ἀδελφοί· μὴ ἐμποδίσητέ μοι 5 ζῆσαι, μὴ θελήσητέ με ἀποθανεῖν. τὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ θέλοντα εἶναι κόσμω μὴ χαρίσησθε, μηδὲ ὕλη κολακεύσητε.

def. M. S.A favour τον...θέλοντα as against θέλοντά με, but otherwise they have a corrupt text: see the next note.

6 χαρίσησθε] gA_mS_m (which has deducatis, a loose rendering) Tim-Syr (for doubtless we should read for Karlongor G; separetis (χωρίσησθε, taken as if χωρίσητε) L; def. M. In S_2 the whole sentence is rendered, illum qui non vult esse in mundo ne honoretis me in hoc, and similarly in A qui non volo manere in mundo, ne honoretis sic. The explanation of this rendering seems to be this; (1) Some letters dropped out, Ton[τογθε]ογθελοντα, owing to the recurrence of similar letters, so that it was read τὸν οὐ θέλοντα κ.τ.λ.; (2) In order to make sense, κόσμω was attached to the preceding words; (3) χαρίσησθε was inaccurately translated honoretis. At all events the coincidence of S_2A shows that the corruption is not in the Armenian, as Petermann not unnaturally supposed, but existed already in the Syriac Version. μηδὲ τὸλη κολακεύσητε] see the lower note; neque per materiam seducatis L; neque per hylen adulemini (blandiamini) me Tim-Syr; neque provocctis-me-ad-aemulationem κέρδος, and similarly Leclerc. This arises from a confusion of words. While τόκος frequently bears this secondary sense of 'interest', τοκετός seems never to have it.

6. μηδὲ ὅλη κολακεύσητε] For ὅλη 'matter', i.e. 'external things', see the note on φιλόϋλον § 7. The words missing in the existing Greek text have been supplied μήθ ὅλη ἐξαπατᾶτε by Petermann, μήθ ὅλη παραζηλώσητε by Lipsius, and μηδὲ ὅλη ἐξαπατήσητε by Zahn (I. v. A. p. 560, and in loc.) and Funk. They have rightly substituted μηδὲ for μήτε, since there is no reason for introducing a connexion μή...μήτε which is only not solœcistic. The word ὅλη is preserved in the Syriac of Timotheus. For the verb I have preferred κολακεύσητε, because it explains all the versions better than έξαπατάτε (έξαπατήσητε) or παραζηλώσητε, while moreover παραζηλώσητε does not give the right sense. The verb שרל, which the translator of Timotheus uses here, occurs in Σ as the rendering of κολακεύειν in Polyc. 2, and the substantive from the same root appears in the Peshito of I Thess. ii. 5 for κολακεία. The word in the Syriac Version So (from which the Armenian A is translated), טנן (Aphel, provocare ad zelum, stimulare), though neither well suited to the context nor a good rendering of κολακεύειν, is closely allied in meaning to גרג (excitare) which is used by Σ in Rom. 4, 5, the only remaining passages where κολακεύειν occurs in Ignatius; and indeed the two roots are connected together in the Peshito rendering of 2 Cor. xi. 2 τὸ ὑμῶν ζῆλος ἤρέθισεν τοὺς πλείονας. On the other hand in the Latin Version blandiri is the consistent rendering of κολακεύειν in these epistles elsewhere, while seducatis occurs here. For the sense of κολακεύειν comp. Clem. Hom. xx. 4 κολακευούση ἁμαρτία, and see the note on Polyc. 2.

I. ανθρωπος 'a man' in the highest and truest sense, 'a rational, immortal being'. In the language of Scripture generally, as in other writers, ἄνθρωπος is a disparaging term, suggesting the weakness, the sins, the mortality of human nature; see esp. I Cor. iii. 4 οὐκ ἄνθρωποί ἐστε; (where the received reading, ovy) σαρκικοί έστε; is a mere paraphrase). Here however the case is different. Ignatius speaks of the καινὸς ἄνθοωπος. the man regenerate, in whom the Divine image (Gen. i. 26) is renewed. So used, it is higher than ἀνήρ; for while ανήρ implies either maturity (opposed to νήπιος, e.g. I Cor. xiii. II őτε γέγονα ἀνήρ) or courage (opposed to γυνή, e.g. Hom. Il. vi. 112 ἀνέρες $\xi \sigma \tau \epsilon$, $\phi i \lambda \sigma i$), $\alpha \nu \theta \rho \omega \pi \sigma s$ denotes the ideal of humanity. The use of the word here is partially illustrated by M. Antonin. iv. 3 ελεύθερος έσο καὶ όρα τὰ πράγματα, ώς ἀνήρ, ώς ἄνθρωπος, ώς πολίτης, ώς θυητὸν ζῶου, Χ. 15 ἱστορήτωσαν οί ἄνθρωποι ἄνθρωπον άληθινον κατά φύσιν ζώντα, χί. 18 ἄρξαι ποτὲ ἄνθρωπος είναι, εως ζης. Thus too Menander says (Fragm. Com. IV. pp. 355, 372) ώς χάριεν εστ' ἄνθρωπος, ὅταν ἄνθρω- π os $\tilde{\eta}$, quoted by Clem. Alex. (Strom. viii. 3, p. 916) whose comment is οντως ανθρωπος, ό τὰς κοινὰς φρένας κεκτημένος. So again in the wellknown story of Diogenes the Cynic (Diog. Laert. vi. 41) λύχνον μεθ' ήμέραν άψας, "Ανθρωπον, έφη, ζητώ, and in another story of this same philosopher (ib. vi. 60) ἐπανήει ἀπὸ 'Ολυμπίων· πρός οὖν τὸν πυθόμενον εἰ όχλος ἦν πολύς, Πολύς μέν, εἶπεν, ὄχλος, ολίγοι δὲ ἄνθρωποι. helped out the meaning in different ways, as the critical note shows. The reading of the Greek MS $dv\theta\rho\omega$ - $\pi os \Theta \epsilon o\hat{v}$ was probably suggested to the scribe as a scriptural expression, e.g. I Tim. vi. II, 2 Tim. iii. I7.

2. μιμητὴν εἶναι κ.τ.λ.] Comp. Ephes. I μιμηταὶ ὅντες Θεοῦ, ἀναζωπυρήσαντες ἐν αἴματι Θεοῦ (with the notes). Anastasius of Sinai (Hodeg. i. 12, p. 196 Migne) mentions this as one of the passages in earlier writers, which the Monophysites quoted in support of their doctrine. The quotations in the extant fragments of the Monophysite Severus confirm this statement.

VII. 'The prince of this world desires my ruin. Do not ye abet. him in his purpose; but espouse my cause, which is God's cause also. Do not talk of Jesus Christ and desire the world at the same time. Let no man grudge me my crown. Obey not my prayers, if I should entreat you by word of mouth, but rather obey my letter, as I now write to you. For though living, I write to you, desiring to die. All my earthly longings have been crucified. There is no more any flame of passion in me, but living water, which speaks and summons me to the Father. I have no delight in corruptible food or in this life's pleasures. I desire the bread of God, which is the flesh of Christ the son of David, and His blood, which is imperishable love.'

The word έρως, so frequent in classical Greek, is found only twice in the LXX, and in both passages it denotes strong sensual passion, as a term of reproach; Prov. vii. 18 δεύρο καὶ ἐγκυλισθώμεν έρωτι, ΧΧΧ. 16 άδης καὶ έρως γυναικός κ.τ.λ. In the New Testament it does not occur at all. Conversely the common term for Christian love in the New Testament, ἀγάπη, is almost, if not quite, unknown in classical writers (in Plut. Mor. p. 709 ἀγάπης ὧν has been rightly corrected into ἀγαπήσων). Ignatius therefore would necessarily use "pws in a bad sense to denote the passions of his former unregenerate life. His $\dot{a}_{\gamma}\dot{a}_{\pi\eta}$, we might say, was perfected, when his ἔρως was crucified.

His meaning therefore being clear, it is strange that Origen should have given a wholly different interpretaσθητέ μοι, τούτοις δὲ μᾶλλον πιστεύσατε, οἶς γράφω 5 ὑμῖν. ζῶν [γὰρ] γράφω ὑμῖν, ἐρῶν τοῦ ἀποθανεῖν· ὁ ἐμὸς ἔρως ἐσταύρωται, καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν ἐμοὶ πῦρ usual contractions of πατρός and σταυρός (with its derivatives). The double rendering in A amor meus crux est, meum desiderium crucifixum est, is owing to the ambiguous צליבא of the Syriac, which may be either crux or crucifixus. έστιν] έστην G. πῦρ φιλόϋλον, ὕδωρ δὲ ζῶν καὶ λαλοῦν] G; πῦρ φιλόϋλον, εδωρ δὲ μάλλον ζών καὶ λαλοῦν Μ Theod-Stud (Menæa Dec. 20); πυρ φιλούν τι, ύδωρ δὲ ζών άλλόμενον g (1 omits πυρ φιλούν τι and translates the remaining words aqua autem viva alia manet, i.e. ὕδωρ δὲ ζων ἄλλο μένον); ignis amans aliquam (leg. aliam?) aquam sed vivens et loquens est (πυρ φιλούν τι ύδωρ ζων δὲ καὶ λαλοῦν) L; ignis in amore alio (v. l. amoris alius) Σ (perh. π ῦρ φιλόαλλον, a corruption of φιλόϋλον; the rest of the words are omitted); alius calor amoris. aqua bona et vivida...existit (πῦρ φιλόαλλον, ὕδωρ καλὸν καὶ ζῶν) A; ignis amandi (alienum quidquam) aqua vivida et loquens est Am (where the words in brackets may be merely an explanatory gloss or may betoken a v. l.); ignis alienus, diligo enim aquas vividas et loquentes Sm. The Menæa (Dec. 20) have οὐκ ἔσχες πῦρ φιλόϋλον ἐν σοί, ἰγνάτιε, ὕδωρ δὲ ζῶν μᾶλλον καὶ λαλοῦν...ὕδωρ τὸ ἀλλόμενον κ.τ.λ. Thus the authorities exhibit a strange confusion of -υλου, άλλο, καλου, μάλλου, άλλόμενον: see the lower note.

tion to the words; Prol. in Cant. III. p. 30 'Nec puto quod culpari possit si quis Deum, sicut Ioannes [1 Joh. iv. 8] caritatem [ἀγάπην], ita ipse amorem [ἔρωτα] nominet. Denique memini aliquem sanctorum dixisse, Ignatium nomine, de Christo Meus autem amor crucifixus est, nec reprehendi eum pro hoc dignum judico.' Origen is followed by some later writers. Thus the false Dionysius the Areopagite, de Div. Nom. iv. 12 (p. 565 ed. Cord.), accounts for the expression by saying that it was thought by some θειότερον είναι τὸ τοῦ ἔρωτος ὄνομα τοῦ τῆς ἀγάπης. So also Theodorus Studites, Catech. 3 (Grabe Spic. II. p. 229) ὁ ἐμὸς ἔρως ἐσταύρωται Χριστός (where Χριστός is his own gloss), ib. Jamb. 70 (p. 1797 Migne) έχων έρωτα Χριστον έν ση καρδία. Hence too in the Menæa (Dec. 20) ώς τετρωμένος έρωτι αγάπης τοῦ Κυρίου σου, 'Ο ἐμὸς ἔρως, ἐβόας, Χριστὸς ἐσταύρωται θέλων, besides several other allusions to this saying, in all which it is interpreted in the same way. In favour of this interpretation it might be urged that $\epsilon \rho \hat{a} \nu$, έραστής, are applied in the LXX (Prov. iv. 6, Wisd. viii. 2) to the pursuit of Divine wisdom; comp. Justin Dial. 8 (p. 225 B) ἐμοὶ δὲ παραχρημα πυρ ἐν τῆ ψυχη ἀνήφθη καὶ έρως εἶχέ με τῶν προφητῶν καὶ τῶν ανδρών εκείνων οί είσι Χριστού φίλοι, Clem. Al. Coh. 11 (p. 90) 6 γέ τοι ουράνιος καὶ θεῖος ὄντως ἔρως, ib. Fragm. p. 1019 βαθύν τινα τὸν τοῦ κτίστου περιφέρωμεν έρωτα. So Chrysostom says of Ignatius himself (Op. ΙΙ. p. 599) τοιοῦτοι γὰρ οἱ ἐρῶντες· όπερ αν πάσχωσιν ύπερ των έρωμένων, μεθ' ήδονης δέχονται, though he may not have been thinking of this passage. But the fatal objection to this interpretation is that, even if otherwise admissible, it would tear the clause out of the context. Obviously έρως and $\pi \hat{v} \rho$ are synonymous here, as they are in the passage of Justin. See the saying ascribed to Buddha, φιλούλον, ύδωρ δὲ ζῶν †καὶ λαλοῦν† ἐν ἐμοί, ἔσωθέν μοι λέγον· Δεῦρο πρὸς τὸν πατέρα. οὐχ ήδομαι τροφῆ Dhammapada 251 'There is no fire like passion' (Buddhaghosha's Parables, by Rogers, p. cxxviii).

I. φιλόϋλον] 'matter-loving,' 'sensuous,' 'carnal'; comp. § 6 μηδέ ύλη κολακεύσητε. On the other hand the Holy Spirit is πῦρ ἄϋλον 'ignis materiae expers' in the Liturgy of S. Cyril (Renaudot Lit. Orient. I. p. 38). The word $\tilde{v}\lambda\eta$ has here its secondary sense 'matter,' as e.g. in Wisd. xi. 18, xv. 13, Clem. Rom. 38. It is too fanciful to see (with Zahn p. 563) a reference also to its primary sense, as if Ignatius had in view the same metaphor as in James iii. 5 ήλίκον πῦρ ήλίκην ὕλην ἀνάπτει (comp. Is. x. 17, Ecclus. xxviii. 10). There seems indeed to be the double reference in the passage to which he refers, Clem. Alex. Paed. ii. 1 (p. 164) οί παμφάγοι, καθάπερ τὸ πῦρ, τῆς ἕλης έξεχόμενοι (where however we should perhaps read έξεχόμενον); but it is there brought out by the form of the sentence. For the compound φιλόϋλος, which is very rare until a later age, comp. Orig. Fragm. in Luc. φιλούλων καὶ φιλοσωμάτων λόγοι πιθανοί (ΙΙΙ. p. 982, Delarue). For the Gnostic (Valentinian) tinge of the sentiment see the notes on Ephes. inscr.

I have adopted $\phi \iota \lambda \dot{\upsilon} \dot{\upsilon} \lambda o \nu$ here on authority which elsewhere would not deserve a preference, for several reasons. (1) It is so obviously the best reading; (2) It explains the other main variations, $\phi \iota \lambda o \dot{\upsilon} \nu \tau \iota$ and $\phi \iota \lambda o \dot{\upsilon} \nu \tau \dot{\iota} \lambda o \dot{\upsilon}$, which would be substituted for $\phi \iota \lambda \dot{\upsilon} \dot{\upsilon} \lambda o \nu$, if either mis-written or unintelligible to the scribe; (3) Conversely it is not usual for a transcriber to show such intelligence as appears in the substitution of an unusual word $\phi\iota\lambda\delta\mathring{v}\lambda\delta\nu$ for either $\phi\iota\lambda\delta\mathring{v}\nu$ $\tau\iota$ or $\phi\iota\lambda\delta\mathring{v}\nu$ $\mathring{u}\lambda\lambda\delta$.

τοωρ δὲ ζῶν] Doubtless a reference to John iv. 10, 11, as indeed the whole passage is inspired by the Fourth Gospel. This water at once quenches the fires of sensual passion and supplies an unfailing draught of spiritual strength; comp. Justin, Dial. 114 (342 B) τῆς καλῆς πέτρας... ὕδωρ ζῶν ταῖς καρδίαις τῶν δὶ αὐτοῦ ἀγαπησάντων τὸν πατέρα τῶν τὸν βρυούσης.

+καὶ λαλοῦν+] According to Jortin (Eccles. Hist. I. p. 356 sq, quoted by Jacobson) there is an allusion to the heathen superstition that certain waters communicated a prophetic power to the person drinking them; e.g. Anacreont. 11 (13) δαφνηφόροιο Φοίβου λάλον πιόντες ύδωρ (comp. Stat. Sylv. i. 2. 6, v. 5. 2). As there was one of these 'speaking' fountains at Daphne (Sozom. H. E. v. 19, Evagr. i. 16) the famous suburb of Antioch, he supposes that the image would readily suggest itself to Ignatius. This reference seems to me more than doubtful, even if the text were correct. But I am disposed to believe that the right reading is preserved in the interpolator's text, άλλόμενον for καὶ λαλοῦν. The various readings show that the text here has been much tumbled about in very early times; and this being so, \u03b1a-

meus intus dicens mihi, doubtless reading the masculine λέγων (with G) and wishing accordingly to give it a personal application. Similarly Severus translates πρὸς τὸν πατέρα ad patrem meum, thus giving a personal reference to the participle, and he too perhaps read λέγων: see the lower note. 2 οὐχ ἥδομαι] οὐκήδομαι G. 3 Θεοῦ] GM; τοῦ θεοῦ g.

λοῦν might very easily suggest itself to a scribe from the following λέγον. If άλλόμενον be correct, it is taken from John iv. 14 πηγη ύδατος άλλομένου είς ζωήν αἰώνιον. Combined from this and the preceding passage (ver. 10, 11) in the same Gospel, the expression ὕδωρ ζῶν ἀλλόμενον took a prominent place in the speculations of the second century; e.g. of the Naassenes, Hippol. Haer. v. 9 ἔδωκεν αν σοι πιείν ύδωρ (ων άλλόμενον; of the Sethians, ib. v. 19 ἀπελούσατο καὶ έπιε το ποτήριον (ώντος ύδατος άλλομένου; of Justin the Gnostic, ib. v. 27 όπερ έστι λουτρον αυτοίς, ώς νομίζουσι, πηγή ζωντος εδατος άλλομένου. This makes the combination the more probable here. Heracleon in Orig. in Ioann. xiii. § 10 (IV. p. 220), the earliest commentator on this Gospel, lays great stress on άλλομένου.

2. λέγον κ.τ.λ.] Similarly Philad. 7 τὸ δὲ πνεῦμα ἐκήρυσσεν, λέγον τάδε· Χωρὶς τοῦ ἐπισκόπου κ.τ.λ. See also Dion. Alex. in Euseb. H. E. vii. 7. § 2, 3. I have not ventured to substitute the masc. λέγων, though the evidence is in its favour. This reading would identify the ὕδωρ ζῶν directly with Christ (see the upper note), and thus the reference to John iv. Io sq would be made more distinct. For a similar instance of an alternative between λέγον or λέγων see Philad. l. c.

 This sentence involves a distinction between βίος and ζωή (in τδωρ ζων), which is brought out more definitely in the interpolator's text by the insertion of ἄρτον ζωῆs in the next sentence. The former denotes the lower earthly life, the latter the higher divine life. If ζωή is sometimes used of the earthly life, Bios is never used of the heavenly. distinction holds in the writings of the Apostolic Fathers, not less than in the N. T. It is founded on an essential difference between the two words, recognised by Greek philosophers; but to the Christian their relative position is exchanged, because his point of view is altered. As ζωή is the principle of life, vita qua vivimus, Bios denotes the process, the circumstances, the accidents of life, in its social and physical relations, vita quam vivimus; comp. Athenag. Resurr. 19 ή τῶν ἀνθρώπων ζωή καὶ σύμπας ὁ βίος. Hence Aristotle could say βίος ἐστὶ λογική ζωή (Ammonius s. v. Bios); for with him Bios was the higher term of the two. See Trench N. T. Syn. § xxvii. p. 86 sg, and Field in Fournal of Philology x. p. 178 sq (1882). But in Christian philosophy the principle of life is not physical, but spiritual; and thus, while Bios remains at its former level, ζωή has been translated into a higher sphere and takes the precedence. So too Dion Cass. lxix. 19 βιούς μεν έτη τόσα, ζήσας δε έτη έπτά. Accordingly, while θάνατος is opposed to ζωή, it may be identical with Bios; [Clem. Rom.] ii. I ὁ βίος ήμῶν όλος άλλο οὐδεν ην εί μη θάνατος. Contrast I Joh. iii. 15 ζωήν αἰώνιον with

Ι αὐτὸς τοῦ νῦν βίου βιαίως το ζην μετήλλαξεν (i.e. 'received true life in exchange for this earthly life'), ib. xii. 14 οπως άβασανίστως τοῦ ζην τον βίον μεταλλάξαι δυνηθής (which passage, like the former, seems to have been altogether misunderstood by the critics), whereas ib. i. 14 we have τὸν πάντα μου τῆς ζωῆς βίον, but there an only half-converted heathen is speaking; Clem. Alex. Paed. ii. I (p. 168) οἱ ταπεινόφρονες, χαμαιγενεῖς, τον εφήμερον διώκοντες βίον, ώς οὐ ζησόμενοι (comp. ib. p. 163), Orig. c. Cels. iii. 16 (I. p. 457) περὶ τῆς έξῆς τῷ βίφ τοίτφ ζωῆs, Macar. ἄρτον Θεοῦ] Here again is an expression taken from S. John's Gospel, vi. 33. Indeed the whole context is suggested by this portion of the Evangelist's narrative. The contrast of the perishable and imperishable food—the bread and the cup as representing the flesh and blood of Christ—the mystical power emanating therefrom—are all ideas contained in the context (vi. 48—59). The later interpolator has seen the source of Ignatius' inspiration, and has introduced expressions freely from the Gospel; 'the heavenly bread' (vi. 31, 32, 50, 58), 'the bread of life' (vi. 48), 'eternal life' (ζωὴ alώνιος, vi. 27, 40, 54). For ἄρτος Θεοῦ compare also Ephes. 5 with the note.

The reference here is not to the eucharist itself but to the union with Christ which is symbolized and pledged in the eucharist. Obviously any limitation to the actual reception of the eucharistic elements and the blessings attendant on such reception would be inadequate; for Ignatius is contemplating the consummation of his union with Christ through martyrdom. The indirect reference to the eucharistic elements is analogous to that which our Lord makes in John vi.

1. τοῦ ἐκ σπέρματος Δαυείδ] i.e. 'who was really and truly incarnate': see the note on Ephes. 18. The reality of Christ's humanity is necessary to the full power and significance of communion with Him; because only so is our own manhood truly united with God. The shadow of Docetic antagonism, which was rife in Asia Minor, rests for a moment even on this letter to the Church of Rome, though the Romans were ἀποδινλιστμένοι ἀπὸ παντὸς ἀλλοτρίου χρώματος, and though there is no direct mention of this heresy in it.

Ephes. 7 έν σαρκὶ γενόμενος.

2. ὅ ἐστιν ἀγάπη ἄφθαρτος The relative refers to τὸ αἶμα αὐτοῦ. As the flesh of Christ represents the solid substance of the Christian life, so the blood of Christ represents the element of love which circulates through all its pores and ducts, animating and invigorating the whole. See especially Trall. 8, where the flesh and the blood are separated in a similar way, and made to represent respectively the faith and the love of the Christian; and compare also the passage from Clem. Alex. Paed. i. 6 (p. 121) there quoted, in which there is an analogous application. Ignatius does not here directly say what he means by the flesh, as distinguished from the blood; but we may supply the omission from the parallel passage in Trall. 8, and say that he refers to faith as the substance of man's union with Christ. See also for partial illustrations of this passage Clem. Alex. Paed. ii. 2 (p. 177) τοῦτ' ἔστι πιείν τὸ αίμα τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, τῆς κυριακῆς μεταλαβείν άφθαρσίας, λοχύς δε τοῦ λόγου τὸ πνεῦμα, ώς αἶμα σαρκός, Quis div. salv. 23 (p. 948) ἄρτον ἐμαυτὸν διδούς, οὖ γευσάμενος οὐδεὶς ἔτι πεῖραν θανάτου λαμβάνει, καὶ πόμα καθ' ήμέραν ἐνδιδοὺς ἀθανασίας. 'I desire,' Ignatius appears to mean, 'that heavenly sustenance which is derived from union with a truly incarnate Christ through faith and love.' But it is impossible to be confident about the interpretation of language so obscure.

On the other hand Zahn (I. v. A. p. 348 sq, and ad loc.) would apply the relative clause & ἐστιν ἀγάπη άφθαρτος not to τὸ αἶμα αὐτοῦ, but to both clauses of the preceding sentence, i.e. 'which participation in the flesh and blood', so that it will no longer be parallel to δς ἐστιν σὰρξ Χριστοῦ. Accordingly he supposes that in ἀγάπη there is a secondary reference to the 'love-feast' (comp... Smyrn. 8) of which the eucharist formed a part. This reference to the agape is, I think, barely possible; but the grammatical construction thus adopted seems to me altogether harsh. It is true that the parallelism, as I take the sentence, is grammatical, rather than logical. The logical parallelism would have been ἄρτον θέλω την σάρκα τοῦ Χριστοῦ ή ἐστιν πίστις ἄτρεπτος κ.τ.λ.; and in a more finished and less hurried writing it might have been so expressed. But instances of parallelism not strictly logical are common, and here it is too obtrusive to be set aside; while it is further confirmed by the very similar passage, Trall. 8.

3. ἄφθαρτος] The interpolator adds καὶ ἀένναος ζωή, an expression occurring in the LXX apparently only in 2 Macc. vii. 36, and never in the N.T. But it was doubtless suggested εἰμὶ ίκανὸς καλεῖσθαι ἀπόστολος κ.τ.λ. Objection was taken to ἐκτιτρώσκειν, ἔκτρωμα, etc., in this sense, instead of the approved words ἀμβλίσκειν, ἄμβλωμα, etc., by purists (see Lobeck Phryn. 208 sq); but they occur as early as Hippocrates and Herodotus (iii. 32); and ἔκτρωμα is mentioned by Aristotle as a common word, de Gen. An. iv. 5 (p. 773) κυήματ' ἐκπίπτει παραπλήσια τοις καλουμένοις έκτρώμασιν. In the same sense it occurs also in the LXX, Num. xii. 12, Job iii. 16, Eccles. vi. 3. See also references to other writers in Wetstein on I Cor. l.c. For the metaphorical use compare Philo Leg. All. i. 25 (I. p. 59) ού γὰρ πέφυκε γόνιμον οὐδὲν τελεσφορείν ή τοῦ φαύλου ψυχή, α δ' αν δοκή προσφέρειν, άμβλωθρίδια εύρίσκεται καὶ ἐκτρώματα (referring to Num. xii. 12 ώσεὶ ἴσον θανάτω, ώσεὶ ἔκτρωμα ἐκπορευόμενον έκ μήτρας μητρός), Clem. Alex. Exc. Theod. 68 (p. 985) ἀτελη καὶ νήπια καὶ ἄφρονω καὶ ἀσθενῆ καὶ ἄμορφα, οἷον έκτρώματα προσενεχθέντα, Iren. i. 8. 2, ἐν ἐκτρώματος μοίρα. The idea in the metaphor, as used by S. Paul and by Ignatius, is twofold: (1) irregularity of time, referring to an unexpected, abrupt, conversion; and (2) imperfection, immaturity, weakness of growth. Ignatius, like S. Paul, we must suppose, had been suddenly brought to a knowledge of the Gospel. The late story, that he was the child whom our Lord took up in His arms and blessed, is doubtless founded on a misinterpretation of Θεοφόρος (see the note on Ephes. inscr.) and cannot be reconciled with his expressions here. It is very possible that his early life had been stained with the common immoralities of heathen society; but at all events this expression throws a flood of light on his position and explains the language of self-depreciation which he uses so freely. See on this point Zahn I. v. A. p. 403 sq. In the letter of the Gallic Churches, Euseb. H.E. v. 1, the same metaphor is twice similarly applied. In § 4 it is said of some who shrank from martyrdom, έφαίνοντο δε οί ανέτοιμοι καὶ αγύμναστοι καὶ ἔτι ἀσθενεῖς, ἀγῶνος μεγάλου τόνον ενεγκείν μτ δυνάμενοι, ών καὶ έξέτρωσαν ώς δέκα τὸν ἀριθμόν: and in § 12 of others, who had before denied their faith but at the last moment gave themselves up to die, ἐνεγίνετο πολλή χαρά τη παρθένω μητρί [i.e. τη έκκλησία], ους ώς νεκρούς έξέτρωσε, τούτους ζώντας ἀπολαμβανούση.

He was also attended about this time by several delegates from the Magnesians (Magn. 2 sq), and by one at least from the Trallians (Trall. 1). These churches also would be included. By $\tau \hat{\omega} \nu \delta \epsilon \xi a \mu \acute{\epsilon} \nu \omega \nu$ he intends not only those churches which (like Philadelphia and Smyrna) he had visited in person, but those which (like Ephesus and the others) had welcomed him through their representatives.

3. els "voua i.e. 'having regard to the name', i.e. 'because I bear the authority of', 'because I represent Christ': comp. Matt. x. 41, 42, δ δεχόμενος προφήτην είς όνομα προφήτου ... ο δεχόμενος δίκαιον είς ονομα δικαίου: and see Buxtorf Lex. Talm. p. 2431 for the corresponding usage of לשם. Ignatius seems here to have in his mind the context of this same passage of S. Matthew, ver. 40 ὁ δεχόμενος ύμας έμε δέχεται: comp. Ephes. 6 ούτως δεί ήμας αὐτὸν δέχεσθαι ώς αὐτὸν τὸν πέμψαντα κ.τ.λ. The reading εis must be preferred to ώs, because (1) It is the more difficult reading of the two; (2) The scribes would naturally alter els into ús to produce uniformity with the words following, ούχ ώς παροδεύοντα. Independently of this reason, the tendency is to change els into ús in such cases; e.g. Potter on Clem. Alex. Strom. i. 15 (p. 359) ον ... είς θεον τετιμήκασι writes 'seu potius ω_s $\theta \epsilon \delta \nu$ ', though

ούχ ώς παροδεύοντα] 'not as a chance wayfarer, a mere passer by', as e.g. Ezek. xxxvi. 34; comp. Ephes. 9 έγνων δε παροδεύσαντάς τινας εκείθεν, Mart. Ign. Ant. 5 δια Φιλίππων παρώδευεν Μακεδονίαν (of Ignatius himself). See also πάροδος, Ephes. 12. On the other hand Hilgenfeld (A. V. p. 191 sq) here, as in Ephes. 9, gives to παροδεύειν the sense 'to take a by-way', understanding it of one who has deserted the true path of the Gospel, which is par excellence 'the way', and supposing that an antithesis is intended between this odos κατὰ Θεὸν and the όδὸς κατὰ σάρκα mentioned in the next sentence. To this it is sufficient to answer; (I) That παροδεύειν, though a fairly common word, never has this meaning elsewhere; and (2) That such an antithesis would be meaningless here, even if the readers of the letter could have discovered it.

4. καὶ γὰρ αἱ μὴ κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'for not only have those churches through which I passed welcomed me; but also those which lay out of the way, etc.' The Curetonian Syriac text, as represented by one MS Σ_2 , omits the negative and reads 'for even those which were near to the way, etc.' It has been contended that this was the original reading, and this supposed fact has been alleged as favouring the priority of the Curetonian letters by Lipsius (S. T. p. 136). But (1) The negative cannot be dispensed with, for it alone gives any significance to καὶ γὰρ 'for even', 'for also'; and (2) Though absent in one (Σ_0) of the two Syriac MSS, it is present in the other (Σ_3) , and the latter elsewhere preserves the correct reading as against the former; see Ephes. 19 with the note. S. Chrysostom indeed says of Ignatius ai γάρ κατά την όδον πόλεις συντρέχουσαι πάντοθεν ήλειφον τὸν άθλητην και μετά πολλών έξέπεμπον τῶν ἐφοδίων κ.τ.λ. (Ορ. 11. p. 598); but the expression diverges too far from the words of Ignatius to justify the inference that the negative was omitted in his copy of Ignatius; and indeed the word συντρέχουσαι implies the presence of those churches which did not lie on the actual

Χ. Γράφω δὲ ὑμῖν ταῦτα ἀπὸ Cμύρνης δι' Ἐφεσίων τῶν ἀξιομακαρίστων. ἔστιν δὲ καὶ ἄμα ἐμοὶ σὺν ἄλλοις πολλοῖς καὶ Κρόκος, τὸ ποθητόν [μοι] ὄνομα.

This passage is quite inconsistent with the account in the Antiochene Martyrology, which represents Ignatius as sailing direct from Seleucia the port of Antioch to Smyrna. To save the credibility of this Martyrology, Pearson (ad loc.) translates αί μὴ προσήκουσαί μοι, 'which do not belong to me', i.e. 'are not under my jurisdiction', separating $\tau \hat{\eta}$ $\delta \delta \hat{\omega} \kappa.\tau.\lambda$; and so too Smith 'multi ab ecclesiis non mei juris et ad me neutiquam spectantibus [μη προσήκουσαί μοι], in hoc nimirum ultimo itinere, quod in mundo restat emetiendum $[\tau \hat{\eta}]$ όδῷ τῆ κατὰ σάρκα], ut mihi obviam irent missi, me singulas civitates ingressurum honoris causa praecessere'. It will be seen that Zahn (I. v. A. p. 254) is mistaken, when he charges Smith with giving to odos the sense 'episcopal jurisdiction'; but though Smith is not guilty of this error, his separation of $\tau \hat{\eta}$ $\delta \delta \hat{\phi}$ from προσήκουσαι and his general interpretation of the passage (in which he follows Pearson) are too harsh to be tolerable. Even if this interpretation were possible, κατὰ πόλιν would remain an insuperable difficulty. The only land journey which on this hypothesis Ignatius had hitherto taken was from Antioch to Seleucia, some 15 or 16 miles (130 stades, Procopius Bell. Pers. ii. 11, I. p. 199 ed. Bonn.; 120 stades, Strabo xvi. 2, p. 751). For the double dative comp. 2 Cor. xii. 7 ἐδόθη μοι σκόλοψ τη σαρκί, and see Kühner § 424 (II. p. 375 sq), Winer § xxxii. p. 276.

Luke viii. 1, 4, Acts xv. 21, xx. 23; for $\pi \rho o a \gamma \epsilon w$, Matt. xiv. 22, xxvii. 32, xxviii. 7, Mark xi. 9, etc. Zahn (I. v. A. p. 255) rightly objects to taking it as an equivalent to $\pi \rho o \pi \epsilon \mu \pi \epsilon w$, a sense which it seems never to have; nor indeed would his guards have allowed anything like a triumphal procession. The $a \gamma \epsilon w$ of $a \gamma \epsilon w$ here is intransitive, and the construction is the same as in $a \gamma \rho o \epsilon \lambda \theta \epsilon w$ 10. When the word is transitive, it has the sense 'to put forward' or 'to drag forward'.

In all these instances the preposition would seem to denote the amanuensis. And this would appear to be the case also in the passage before us. But in Polyc. Phil. 14 'haec vobis scripsi per Crescentem', Crescens would appear to be the bearer of the letter; and in Dionys. Cor. quoted in Euseb. Η. Ε. iv. 23 την προτέραν ήμιν διά Κλήμεντος γραφείσαν, Clement is the composer of the letter, though it is sent in the name of the whole Roman Church.

In Rev. i. 9 ὑπομονη Ἰησοῦ, the right reading is apparently has the same sense here as in 2 Thess. iii. 5, but the meaning is doubtful. Most probably it is 'the patient waiting for Christ': comp. I Thess. i. 3 της ύπομονης της έλπίδος τοῦ Κυρίου κ.τ.λ., and see also Rom. viii. 25. In the LXX it is a translation of תקוה, מקוה, etc, 'expectatio', 'spes', e.g. Ps. lxii (lxi). 5, lxxi (lxx). 5, Jer. xiv. 8, xvii. 13, etc. The commentators however more commonly take it otherwise, 'such patience as Christ Himself showed'. The former sense is much more appropriate here.

TO THE PHILADELPHIANS.

TO THE PHILADELPHIANS.

THE name Philadelphia was borne by several cities (see below, p. 249). Of these perhaps the most important was the Syrian Philadelphia, the Rabbah or Rabbath-Ammon of the Scriptures; while the second in importance—if second—was the Lydian Philadelphia, with which Ignatius corresponded. But, though bearing the same name, they did not owe it to the same person. The Syrian city was so designated from the second Ptolemy of Egypt, who restored this ancient capital of the Ammonites; the Lydian city was called after the second Attalus of Pergamus (B.C. 159—138) its founder. Both these princes bore the surname Philadelphus. The foundation of the Lydian city is distinctly ascribed to the Pergamene king (Steph. Byz. s. v. 'Αττάλου κτίσμα τοῦ Φιλαδέλφου), as indeed its situation would suggest. Yet we may be tempted to suspect an error in this statement. Joannes Laurentius the Lydian, a writer of the sixth century, himself a native of this Philadelphia, in a part of his work which is not preserved, related how it was founded by the Egyptians (de Mens. iii, 32, p. 45, ed. Bonn., ὅτι τὴν ἐν Λυδία Φιλαδέλφειαν Αἰγύπτιοι ἐπόλισαν); and this notice would seem to point to Ptolemy Philadelphus, who had large possessions in Asia Minor (Theocr. Idyll. xvii. 88).

Philadelphia lies at the foot of the Tmolus mountains, which separate the valley of the Hermus on the north from that of the Cayster on the south, and is washed by the river Cogamus, an important tributary of the Hermus (Plin. N. H. v. 30 'Philadelpheni et ipsi in radice Tmoli Cogamo flumini appositi,' Joann. Lyd. de Magistr. iii. 26, p. 218. $\tau \hat{\eta} s$ ένεγκούσης με Φιλαδελφείας της ύπο τῷ Τμώλω καὶ Λυδία κειμένης). Ιτ is situated in the loop which connects the valley of the Mæander with that of the Hermus, the valley of the Cayster being shut in between the two. Hence the importance of its position, as commanding the way to the pass between the two valleys. It is nearly equidistant from Tripolis to the west and Sardis to the east (33 miles from Tripolis, 28 from Sardis, Anton. Itin. p. 336; 34 miles from Tripolis, 30 [?] from Sardis, Peuting. Tab.), lying on the great high-road between Apamea and Smyrna, which leaves the Mæander close to Tripolis and touches the Hermus near Sardis. Along this road the great king led his countless hosts on his fatal expedition against Greece; and Callatebus, at which he halted on this occasion, and where he committed the plane-tree to the guardianship of one of the Immortals, must have been not far from the site of the later city of Philadelphia1. It was along this same road also that Cyrus marched with his Greek auxiliaries from Sardis to the Mæander (Xen. Anab. i. 2. 5, see Ainsworth's Travels in the Track of the Ten Thousand Greeks p. 13 sq); but no place within these limits is mentioned by name in Xenophon's account of his march. Descriptions of the road, and of the city of Philadelphia, will be found in Smith Sept. Asiae Eccles. Not. p. 32 sq; Chandler Travels in Asia Minor etc. I. p. 303 sq (ed. Churton); Arundell Seven Churches p. 163 sq; W. J. Hamilton Researches in Asia Minor etc. II. p. 370 sq; Ainsworth l. c.; Fellows Asia Minor and Lycia p. 216 sq; Texier Asie Mineure III. p. 23 sq. For the physical features of the region see Tchihatcheff Asie Mineure P. I. p. 235 sq, 470 sq, P. IV. Vol. 3. p. 229 sq.

Philadelphia does not appear ever to have attained the magnitude or the wealth which its position might have led us to expect. The 'little power' (Rev. iii. 8 μικρὰν ἔχεις δύναμιν) of the Christian Church here

Cogamus at Aineh Ghieul (see Hamilton Asia Minor II. p. 374), near which the tamarisk grows in great abundance. This is possible; but not so the position assigned to Callatebus in Smith's Dict. of the Bible, s. v. Philadelphia, 'not far from the Mæander'; for the Mæander must be some seventy miles from Sardis—a distance far too great for Xerxes' host to traverse in the time. Cyrus took three days, marching quickly with a much more manageable force (Xen. Anab. i. 2. 5).

probably reflected the comparative size of the city itself. It lies indeed in a region of great natural fertility; and, as is frequently the case with volcanic regions, this was especially a vine-growing country. The wines of Tmolus were among the most celebrated of antiquity (Virg. Georg. ii. 98, Plin. N. H. v. 30, xiv. 9). But this physical characteristic was at the same time its most terrible scourge. It borders on the region called Katakekaumene, which is to Asia Minor what the Phlegreean Plains are to Italy; and in a country where every city was more or less liable to such catastrophes, none suffered more cruelly from convulsions of the earth than Philadelphia. On this account the city itself contained a very small population, the majority preferring to live in the country and follow agricultural pursuits. Strabo, who gives us this information, expresses his surprise that even these few are hardy enough to brave the dangers. The earthquakes, he says, are constant: the houses are continually gaping asunder with the shocks: the architects are obliged to reckon with this fact in building (Strabo xii. 8, p. 579, xiii. 4, p. 628). In the terrible catastrophe during the reign of Tiberius, when twelve cities were thrown down in one night, Philadelphia was among the sufferers (Tac. Ann. ii. 47; see also the Puteoli marble, C. I. L. x. 1624). Doubtless these subterranean forces were exceptionally active when Strabo wrote; but the account of a Philadelphian in the sixth century shows that the danger was not confined to any one epoch. This last-mentioned writer, Joannes Laurentius, also speaks of the hot springs in this region, as connected with its volcanic energy (de Ostent. 53, p. 349, ed. Bonn.)1.

In the age of Pliny (N. H. v. 30) this city had no law-courts of its own, but belonged to the jurisdictio or conventus of Sardis (see Colossians p. 7 sq). Before the middle of the next century however a change appears to have been made; for the rhetorician Aristides speaks of the legate as holding courts here (Op. 1. p. 530, ed. Dindorf, κυροῦ τὴν χειροτονίαν ἐν Φιλαδελφία [v. 1. Φιλαδελφέα] δικαστηρίοις ἀπόντος ἐμοῦ; see Masson Vit. Aristid. ib. 111. p. cxviii sq). No great weight can be attached to the fact that the epithet 'splendid' is given to Philadelphia in a Smyrnæan inscription of the age of Valerian and Gallienus (C. I. G. 3206 ἐν τῆ λαμπρῷ Φιλαδελφέων πόλει); nor again, do the titles of the two ruling bodies in the city, 'the most sacred,' or 'the most excellent Council,' and 'the most splendid People' (ή ίερωτάτη [κρατίστη] βουλή καὶ ὁ λαμπρότατος δήμος, С. І. G. 3416, 3421), imply very much. It is more important to observe that Philadelphia bore the name of 'Little Athens.' This designation was given to the city on account of its religious character. As the great Athens especially prided herself on being the most 'pious' city in Greece (see the passages in Wetstein on Acts xvii. 16, 22 sq), while from an opposite point of view the earliest historian of the Christian Church described the place as 'beset with idols' (Acts xvii. 16 κατείδωλον); so also this miniature Athens was distinguished by the number of its temples and the frequency of its festivals (Joann. Lyd. de Mens. iv. 40, p. 75, Μικράς 'Αθήνας ἐκάλουν τὴν Φιλαδέλφειαν διὰ τὰς ἑορτὰς καὶ τὰ ἱερὰ τῶν εἰδώλων). This statement is borne out by the not very numerous extant inscriptions found in or near the city. Among the festivals celebrated there we read of the Fovialia Solaria (Δεία "Αλεια Φιλαδέλφεια C. I. G. 3427, Δεία "Αλεια έν Φιλαδελφεία no. 3428, μεγάλα "Αλεια no. 3416; see Boeckh's note, 11. p. 804 sq, Lebas and Waddington no. 645), of the Communia Asiae (κοινά 'Ασίας ἐν Φιλαδελφεία, no. 1068. 3428), and of the Augustalia Anaitea (μεγάλα Σεβαστὰ 'Αναείτεια no. 3424, i.e. in honour of Artemis or Aphrodite Anaitis, a Persian and Armenian deity worshipped in these parts): while Asiarchs, panegyriachs, xystarchs, ephebarchs, hipparchs, etc., appear in considerable profusion. More especially mention is made of the 'priest of Artemis' (no. 3422) who seems to have been the patron-goddess of the city (see Mionnet IV. p. 97 sq, Suppl. VII. p. 398 sq); and the title of 'high-priest,' which occurs from time to time, probably belongs to this functionary.

It would seem from these facts that paganism had an exceptional vitality in this otherwise not very important place. At the same time, it is no less clear that Philadelphia was a stronghold of the Jews. The message to the Church in the Apocalypse contains a reference to 'the synagogue of Satan,' which is further defined as 'those that called themselves Jews, though they are not' (Rev. iii. 9); and in accordance with this notice the Epistle of Ignatius is largely occupied in controverting a stubborn form of Judaism which obviously constitutes the chief peril of the Christian Church in this city (see esp. §§ 6, 8, 9). The promise in the vision of Patmos that the Jews should come and worship 'before the feet' of the Philadelphian Church had been fulfilled meanwhile; but the influx of Jewish converts had been attended with the usual dangers.

The intimate connexion which subsisted between Philadelphia and Smyrna, where Ignatius made his long halt, appears from several circumstances. Among the coins of Philadelphia are not a few which commemorate the 'concord' ($\delta\mu\delta\nu\omega\alpha$) of the Philadelphians with the Smyrnæans (Mionnet, IV. pp. 100, 108, Suppl. VII. pp. 400, 401). The Anthology again contains a couplet recording some honour which Philadelphia, $\mu\nu\dot{\eta}\mu\omega\nu$ $\dot{\eta}$ $\pi\delta\lambda\iota$ s $\epsilon\dot{\nu}\nu\omega\dot{\mu}\eta$ s, had paid to a statue of one 'Philip ruler in Smyrna' (Anthol. II. p. 450). Again, an inscription at Smyrna mentions one Apollinaris, a citizen both of Smyrna and of Philadelphia, as of other places also (C. I. G. 3206). And lastly we hear of Philadelphian Christians crowned with martyrdom at Smyrna about the middle of the second century (Mart. Polyc. 19; see below, p. 243).

The earliest notice of Christianity in Philadelphia is the passage in the Apocalypse (iii. 7—13). But the language there used implies that this church had already existed for some years at least. In default of any information we fall back, as before (see above, pp. 102, 147), on the supposition that its evangelization was due to S. Paul and his companions; though here the distance from Ephesus, his head-quarters, was much greater than in the cases of Magnesia and Tralles.

Unlike the churches which have come before our notice hitherto Philadelphia had been visited in person by Ignatius. At the bifurcation, on the banks of the Lycus, his guards had taken the righthand road which led in a more northerly direction over the Derwend pass through Philadelphia and Sardis, by the valleys of the Cogamus and Hermus, to Smyrna (see above, p. 2). At Philadelphia they appear to have made a halt of some duration. To this visit Ignatius incidentally alludes more than once in the course of the letter. He speaks of making the acquaintance of their bishop, whose modesty and reserve and gentleness he praises highly (§ 1). After the example of S. Paul, he appeals to the character of his intercourse with them. was entirely free from tyranny or oppressiveness of any kind (§ 6). He alludes obscurely to an attempt on the part of certain persons to lead him astray-an allusion which (in the absence of information) it were lost time to attempt to explain. He reminds them that he had warned them emphatically 'with the voice of God' to give heed to the bishop and other officers of the church (§ 7). He had done all that one man could do (τὸ ἴδιον ἐποίουν) to promote unity. He recals a dispute apparently held at Philadelphia-when the Judaizers had pleaded the ancient charters (τὰ ἀρχεῖα) against the Gospel, while he himself declared that Christ's Cross and Resurrection were their own witnesses and superseded any such appeal (§ 8).

Nor is this the only point in which the Epistle to the Philadelphians differs from the previous letters. It was also written from a different place. Since the despatch of the earlier letters, the saint had moved onward from Smyrna to Alexandria Troas, and was waiting there to embark for Europe. This interval had somewhat altered the position of affairs. Two persons had meanwhile joined him from the east after his arrival at Troas, or at all events after his departure from Smyrna—Philo, a deacon of Cilicia, and Rhaius Agathopus, a member of the Syrian Church. They had followed in his track, and halted at Philadelphia. Here they had received a hearty welcome from the main body of the church; but some persons—doubtless his Judaizing opponents—had treated them with contempt (§ 11). From them he probably heard of those misrepresentations of his conduct during his stay at Philadelphia, which he considers it necessary to rebut (§§ 6, 7).

But at the same time, they brought him more welcome news also. The prayers of the churches had been heard. The persecution at Antioch had ceased. He therefore urges the Philadelphians to despatch a deacon to Syria, as their representative, to congratulate the brethren there. Other churches which lay nearer, he tells them, had sent delegacies on a larger scale (§ 10).

But, though the letter contains this incidental charge, its direct purport and motive is different. The main burden is the heresy which troubled the Philadelphian Church. It had awakened his anxiety during his own sojourn there, and the later report of Philo and Agathopus had aggravated his alarm. What the nature of this heresy was, the tenour of his letter plainly indicates. He is attacking a form of Docetic Judaism (see the note Trall. 9), but more directly from its Judaic than from its Docetic side. The Docetism is tacitly reproved in the opening salutation, where he congratulates the Philadelphians as 'rejoicing in the Passion of our Lord without wavering,' and 'steadfast in the conviction of His Resurrection,' and salutes them 'in the blood of Jesus Christ which is eternal and abiding joy.' There are perhaps also allusions to it, when speaking of the eucharist he refers to the 'one flesh of our Lord Jesus Christ' (§ 4), and when he describes himself as 'taking refuge in the Gospel as the flesh of Jesus' (§ 5). But the Judaism is openly attacked. A Jew talking Christianity, he says, is better than a Christian talking Judaism. If any disputant is silent about Christ, he is no better than a tombstone with its epitaph inscribed (§ 6). The Judaizers allege the ancient charters: but to himself Jesus Christ—His Cross and Resurrection—is the one inviolable charter (§ 8).

The prophets are to be loved and admired, because they foretold Christ (§ 5). The priests too are not to be despised, but the great Highpriest is better than all. He is the door through whom patriarchs and prophets alike, not less than the Christian Church, must pass to the Father (§ 9). These heretics are described as treacherous wolves devouring the flock (§ 2). The heresy itself is a noxious herb, which does not belong to the husbandry of Jesus Christ (§ 3). As a safeguard against its assaults he recommends here, as elsewhere, unity and obedience to the bishops and officers of the Church (§§ 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8). In saying this, he merely repeats a charge which he had given them orally (§ 7). More especially they must not separate themselves from the one eucharistic feast (§ 4). No schismatic can inherit the kingdom of God (§ 3).

When Ignatius wrote this letter from Troas, Burrhus the Ephesian, alone of the delegates who had been with him at Smyrna, still remained in his company (see the note on Ephes. 2). He was the amanuensis of the letter (§ 11).

It will be seen from the above account, that the impression of the Philadelphian Church left by the language of Ignatius is less favourable than that which we obtain from the message in the Apocalypse, where its constancy is commended (Rev. iii. 8, 10). The warning with which the Apocalyptic message closes was not superfluous; 'Hold fast that which thou hast, that no man take thy crown (ver. 11).' At the same time the main body of the Church appears to have been sound; for Ignatius praises the steadfastness of their convictions (inscr.), and declares that he has found 'sifting, and not division,' among them (§ 2). The next notices also in point of time are honourable to the Philadel-She numbered among her sons eleven martyrs, who phian Church. suffered at Smyrna in the persecution which was fatal to Polycarp, A.D. 155 (Mart. Polyc. 19). We are also told of one Ammia a prophetess of Philadelphia (ή ἐν Φιλαδελφεία ᾿Αμμία) who appears to have flourished early in the second century, for her name is mentioned in connexion with Quadratus more especially (Anon. in Euseb. H. E. v. 18). The Montanists claimed her as a forerunner of their own prophetesses; but this claim the orthodox writer quoted by Eusebius indignantly denies. The name is probably Phrygian, and occurs commonly in inscriptions belonging to these parts (see Colossians p. 307). At the council of Nicæa this Lydian Philadelphia is represented by her bishop Hetcemasius (Spic. Solesm. I. p. 535, Cowper Syriac Miscellanies pp. 11, 28, 33), as is also the Syrian by her own bishop Cyrion. On the other hand at the Council of Constantinople (A.D. 381) the only Philadelphia which puts in an appearance is the Isaurian (ib. p. 37, Labb. Conc. I. p. 1135), both her more famous namesakes being unrepresented. In the meanwhile our Philadelphia has been toying with Semiarianism. At the Synod of Philippopolis (A. D. 347) there was present one Ouirius (Κύριος) bishop of Philadelphia (see Labb. Conc. II. p. 743), apparently the Lydian city, though the name of the bishop would suggest the Syrian; and at the Synod of Seleucia (A.D. 359) again, we meet with a Theodosius, bishop of Philadelphia, here expressly defined as the Lydian city (Labb. Conc. II. p. 922). At Ephesus (A.D. 431) the Lydian Philadelphia is represented by Theophanes or Theophanius (Labb. Conc. III. p. 1086); and at later councils also her bishops appear from time to time. For some centuries Philadelphia remained a suffragan see under Sardis, but at a later date it was raised to an independent metropolitan rank, though apparently not without some vicissitudes (see the Notitiae pp. 96, 132, 156, 226, 236, 246, ed. Parthey).

It was in the last struggle for independence that Philadelphia won an undying renown. The strategical importance of the site, which doubtless had led to the foundation of the city in the first instance, was also the cause of her chief woes. Philadelphia was besieged by every invading army in turn, Byzantine, Latin, and barbarian. Against the Turkish hordes the Philadelphians offered a manly resistance. For nearly a hundred years after the neighbouring places had succumbed, Philadelphia held out. 'The whole land beneath the sun,' writes the Byzantine historian, 'was subjugated by the Turks, but this city like a star shone still in the over-clouded mid-heaven' (Ducas iv. 4. p. 19, ed. Bonn.). It is said that she was sustained in her resistance by the commendation and the promise in the Apocalypse. At length she yielded to the assaults of the victorious Bajazet, 'the thunderbolt.' But even then her fall was due quite as much to the baseness of the Byzantine emperors as to the persistence of the Turkish invader. Philadelphia was part of the price paid by John and Manuel Palæologus for the support of the Turk against rival claimants to the throne of the Cæsars in their own household. The Greek emperor summoned the Philadelphians to surrender and receive a Turkish governor. They replied proudly that 'they would not, if they could help it, deliver themselves over to the barbarians.' But it was only a question of time. The siege, aided by famine, was successful; and the Greek emperors, fighting under Bajazet, were the first to enter the defeated city; οὖτω, concludes the historian, έάλω Φιλαδέλφεια ή της Αυδίας πόλις εὐνομουμένη Έλληνίς (Chalcocond. de Reb. Turc. ii. p. 64, ed. Bonn.). Probably Philadelphia had never been more prosperous than at this epoch, for it is described as 'of vast size and very populous' (Ducas l. c. ὑπερέχουσα τῷ μεγέθει καὶ πολύανδρος οὖσα). Nor was this siege the last trial endured by this city. If she was chastised with whips by the Ottoman Bajazet¹, she was chastised with scorpions under the Tartar Timour, the conqueror of Bajazet (Ducas xvi. p. 71, xxii. p. 122). But from first to last she has never altogether forfeited her claim to the proud title of a 'Greek' city.

The present name of Philadelphia, as given almost universally by English travelers, is Ailah Shehr, 'the city of God.' The true form however seems to be Ala Shehr, 'the pied or striped city' (v. Hammer Gesch. d. Osman. Reiches I. p. 219, not 'the white city,' as in Texier L'Univers p. 270, Murray's Handbook for Turkey in Asia p. 327), but no explanation is given of this epithet. The Apocalyptic message to this Church (Rev. iii. 12), containing the promise that 'the name of the city of God' shall be written 'on him that overcometh,' may possibly have led travelers and natives alike to wrest Ala Shehr into Allah Shehr. At all events the coincidence with the language of the Revelation is purely superficial. At the present time Philadelphia contains a population variously estimated at from seven or eight to fifteen thousand, of whom a larger proportion than is common in Turkish cities—perhaps a third or a fourth—are Christians. The number of churches again is differently stated, the highest number being thirty, and the guilty. This wall is a mass of vegetable matter incrusted with a calcareous deposit, as pointed out long ago by Woodward (Addition to Catal. of Foreign and Native Fossils p. 11, 1728). A specimen procured by him may still be seen in the Woodwardian Museum at Cambridge. Tchihatcheff (P. IV. Vol. 3, p. 230 note) tells us that the Turks in the neighbourhood glory in this supposed atrocity of a former sultan. He has so little acquaintance with the writings of his predecessors, that he supposes himself to have discovered the phenomenon and unearthed the legend, though this wall was mentioned by Smith two centuries ago, and the true explanation given by Woodward a century and a half ago.

lowest fifteen; but only five or six are in common use, while the greater number lie in ruins. The Christian community here is governed by a resident bishop; and altogether its ecclesiastical arrangements betoken a vitality and influence, such as is rarely found in the cities of Asia Minor.

The often-quoted passage of Gibbon may be quoted once again, as a just tribute to a city whose past history is exceptionally bright in the midst of the surrounding darkness.

'The captivity or ruin of the seven churches of Asia was consummated: and the barbarous lords of Ionia and Lydia still trample on the monuments of classic and Christian antiquity. In the loss of Ephesus the Christians deplored the fall of the first angel, the extinction of the first candlestick, of the Revelations; the desolation is complete; and the temple of Diana, or the church of Mary, will equally elude the search of the curious traveler. The circus and the three stately theatres of Laodicea are now peopled with wolves and foxes; Sardes is reduced to a miserable village; the God of Mahomet, without a rival or a son, is invoked in the mosques of Thyatira and Pergamus; and the populousness of Smyrna is supported by the foreign trade of the Franks and Armenians. Philadelphia alone has been saved by prophecy or courage. At a distance from the sea, forgotten by the emperors, encompassed on all sides by the Turks, her valiant citizens defended their religion and freedom above fourscore years; and at length capitulated with the proudest of the Ottomans. Among the Greek colonies and churches of Asia, Philadelphia is still erect; a column in a scene of ruins; a pleasing example, that the paths of honour and safety may sometimes be the same (Decline and Fall c. lxiv).'

'IGNATIUS to the CHURCH OF PHILADELPHIA which is rooted firmly in the conviction of the Passion and Resurrection of Christ; greeting in the blood of Jesus Christ which is abiding joy, so long as there is obedience to the bishop and presbyters and deacons.'

'Your bishop has his authority from God and exercises it in love. I admire his gentleness and modesty. As the lyre to its strings, so is he strung to the commandments (§ r). As children of truth, shun dissension. Follow the shepherd, lest ye be devoured by wolves (§ 2). Abstain from noxious herbs, which are not of Christ's husbandry. Be united with the bishop, that ye may be owned by God. No schismatic shall inherit the kingdom (§ 3). Be partakers in one eucharist. There is one flesh, one cup, of Jesus Christ, one altar, one bishop (§ 4). I love you heartily, and therefore I warn you. By your prayers I hope to be made perfect, while I cling to the Gospel and the Apostles. We love the Prophets also, for they foretold Christ and were saved through Him (§ 5). Turn a deaf ear to Judaism. Whosoever speaks not of Christ, is no better than a gravestone. Flee from these snares of the devil. I thank God, that I oppressed no man, when I was with you (§ 6). They tried to mislead me in the flesh; but the Spirit cannot be misled. I told you plainly to obey your bishop and presbyters and deacons. It was the voice of the Spirit, enjoining unity (§ 7). I have done my best to promote harmony. God will forgive those who repent and return to unity. Men appeal to the archives against the Gospel; I know no archives but Jesus Christ-His Passion and Resurrection (§ 8). The ancient priesthood was good; but the great High-priest is better. Patriarchs and Prophets must enter through Him as the door. The Prophets foretold; the Gospel is the crown and fulfilment (§ 9).

'Your prayers have been answered. The Church of Syria has peace. Send a deacon to congratulate them. The nearer churches have sent bishops and presbyters also (§ 10). I thank God that you gave a welcome to Philo and Agathopus. May their enemies be forgiven. The brethren at Troas salute you. I write by the hand of

'IGNATIUS to the CHURCH OF PHIL-ADELPHIA, which is founded on godly concord and rejoices in the passion and resurrection of the Lord: greeting in the blood of Christ, if she is united with her bishop and clergy whom He ordained.'

προς φιλαδελφεῖς] Here the copies of the genuine Ignatius and of the interpolator's text agree in taking the form Φιλαδελφείς, not Φιλαδελφηνοί. Steph. Byz., s. v. Φιλαδέλφεια, after mentioning several places of the name, adds ὁ πολίτης Φιλαδελφεύς, τὸ δὲ Φιλαδελφηνὸς ἐπιχώριον. This however refers possibly not to all, but only to the last mentioned, the Philadelphia of Syria; for he adds οὖτω γὰρ Ἰώσηπος κ΄ τῆς 'Ιουδαϊκής άρχαιολογίας. Yet the same Josephus, who there (Ant. xx. I. I) uses Φιλαδελφηνοί, in an earlier passage (xiii. 8. 1) has Φιλαδελφείς, both passages referring to the Syrian Philadelphia. The same variation occurs with regard to the Philadelphians of 'Asia.' In the coins we have constantly Φιλαδελφέων (Mionnet IV. p. 97 sq, Suppl. VII. p. 397 sq), and once (perhaps by an error) Φιλαδελφείων (IV. p. 103). In the inscriptions too the form is most commonly Φιλαδελφεύς, e.g. C. I. G. 3206, 3424, 3425, 3426; but ρεγιώνος Φιλαδελφη- $\nu \hat{\eta} s$, no. 3436, and this must also have been the form in the mutilated inscription no. 3000. Joannes Lydus is styled Φιλαδελφεύς in the headings of his works. So also it is written in Nicet. Chon. Alex. vii. 16, p. 341 sq (ed. Bonn.). In Suidas s. v. Σέξτος we have 'Ηροδότου τοῦ Φιλαδελdalov, a form which seems not to occur elsewhere. The Latins commonly say Philadelphenus, Plin. N. H. v. 29 (30), Tac. Ann. ii. 47. But the version of Ignatius has 'Philadelphicis (-sis),' and the version of the interpolated text 'Ad Philadelphienses'; while in the printed texts of Jerome Vir. Ill. 16 it is 'Ad Philadelpheos.'

2. Φιλαδελφία The form Φιλαδέλφεια with the diphthong appears in the inscriptions (e.g. C. I. G. 1068, 3428 four times), and generally in the best MSS of ancient writers; comp. Moschop. Περὶ σχεδ. p. 121 Φιλαδέλφεια πόλις τὸ φει δίφθογγον, φιλαδελφία δε ιωτα (quoted in Steph. Thes. s. v., ed. Hase et Dind.). So too it is scanned in Anthol. II. p. 450 Έκ Φιλαδελφείης ξεινή α κ.τ.λ.; comp. also Anon. in Euseb. H. E. v. 17, and Eusebius himself (speaking of this epistle) H. E. iii. 36 (though with a v. l.). Accordingly it is written Philadelphea on the Puteoli marble C. I. L. x. 1624. In Apoc. i. 11, iii. 7, however the uncial MSS are generally agreed in the form Φιλαδελφία, and so it occurs on coins, Mionnet IV. pp. 98, 100, Suppl. VII. p. 399, and in an inscription C. I. G. 9911; and with this spelling apparently it is found also in the MSS of Mart. Polyc. 19. I have therefore retained this form, which alone appears in the Ignatian MSS.

 $\tau \hat{\eta} s$ 'A σlas] This town was one of several bearing this name. Another was in Isauria, a third in Egypt, a fourth (the ancient Rabbath-Ammon) in Palestine; see Steph. Byz. s. v. Thus here, as in the case of Tralles, $\tau \hat{\eta} s$ 'A σlas might have been added for the sake of identification, 'Asia' being of course the Roman province (see Trall. inscr.). The same words however are added in most texts in the case of Ephesus, where such specification was unnecessary (see Ephes. inscr.). Politically Philadelphia was in 'Asia,' but ethnographically it was in Lydia (Dioscorid. Mat. Med. v. 130 (131) Φιλαδελφίας...τῆς ἐν Λυδία, Steph. Byz. s. v. πόλις Λυδίας, Ptol. v. 2. 17, and the Notitiae generally), or in Mysia (Strabo xiii. 10, p. 628).

3. $\eta \lambda \epsilon \eta \mu \epsilon \nu \eta$] See the note Rom. inscr. Here it is used absolutely, 'having found mercy.'

ήδρασμένη έν] For this construction see Smyrn. I, and possibly Polyc. I (see the note).

όμονοία Θεοῦ] See Magn. 6, with the note.

4. ἀγαλλιωμένη κ.τ.λ.] 'rejoicing in the passion,' i.e. 'joyfully recognising it and the benefits derived from it.' For the prominence of 'the passion' in these letters, see the note on Ephes. inscr. The connexion of 'steadfastness in concord' and 'rejoicing in the Passion' is to be noticed. The Docetic teaching at once threatened the unity of the Church and assailed the reality of Christ's death.

αδιακρίτως] 'without wavering'; comp. Rom. inser. πεπληρωμένοις χάριτος Θεοῦ ἀδιακρίτως (with the note), and see also the note on ἀδιάκριτον Ephes. 3.

5. καὶ ἐν τῆ ἀναστάσει κ.τ.λ.] This is perhaps best taken with the preceding words ἀγαλλιωμένη κ.τ.λ., rather than with the following $\pi \epsilon \pi \lambda \eta \rho \phi \phi \rho \rho \eta \mu \epsilon \nu \eta$. For this co-ordination of the passion and the resurrection see

There is however no objection to the construction $\pi\lambda\eta\rho\sigma\phi\rho\rho\epsilon\hat{i}\sigma\theta$ au $\dot{\epsilon}\nu$ $\tau\hat{\eta}$ $\dot{a}\nu\alpha\sigma\tau\dot{a}\sigma\epsilon\iota$ 'to be convinced of the resurrection'; comp. e.g. Magn. II.

πεπληροφορημένη κ.τ.λ.] 'being fully convinced,' i.e. of their reality. On the meanings of πληροφορείν itself, and on its different connexions with έν, see the note Colossians iv. 12 πεπληροφορημένοι έν παντὶ θελήματι, where, as here, the preposition denotes the sphere, the surroundings, of the conviction. Their firm belief was a manifestation of God's mercy; comp. the preceding ἢλεημένη καὶ ἡδρασμένη κ.τ.λ.

1. ἀσπάζομαι ἐν αἴματι κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'whom I greet as ransomed with me and incorporate with Christ through His blood,' again an indirect condemnation of Docetism. Only those are included in his greeting who acknowledge with him the reality of Christ's passion; see below § 4 εἰς ενωσιν τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ, and comp. Ερhes. I ἀναζωπυρήσαντες ἐν αἵματι Θεοῦ, Smyrn. I ἡδρασμένους ἐν ἀγάπη ἐν τῷ αἵματι Χριστοῦ.

ητις κ.τ.λ.] 'seeing that it,' i.e. $al\mu a$ ' $I\eta \sigma o \hat{v}$ $X\rho \iota \sigma \tau o \hat{v}$, the gender of the relative being thus attracted to $\chi a\rho \dot{a}$, as e.g. I Tim. iii. 15; comp. Winer § xxiv. p. 206 sq. For similar instances of attraction in these epistles see the note Magn. 7. The blood of Jesus Christ, sincerely recognised in itself and in its practical consequences, is the source of all abiding joy. This is the simplest construction. On the other hand Zahn (I. v. A. p. 350) takes the antecedent to $\tilde{\eta}\tau\iota$ s to be the whole sentence $\tilde{a}\gamma a\lambda \lambda \iota \omega \mu \acute{e} v \eta \kappa.\tau.\lambda$. But the interposition of another feminine relative $\tilde{\eta}\nu$, referring to a wholly different antecedent, and thus isolating $\tilde{\eta}\tau\iota$ s from the words in question, seems to me to be an insuperable objection to this construction, which otherwise would be very reasonable.

2. παράμονος Comp. Ephes. inscress δόξαν παράμονον κ.τ.λ. The word occurs occasionally in classical writers, but not in the LXX or N.T.

μάλιστα κ.τ.λ.] Το be connected with ἀσπάζομαι κ.τ.λ.; comp. Polyc. 6 ἀντίψυχον ἐγὼ τῶν ὑποτασσομένων τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ κ.τ.λ.

ἐὰν κ.τ.λ.] 'if they,' i.e. the Philadelphian Christians. He still uses the third person, because the address of the letter is not yet concluded; see 2 Joh. I τοῖς τέκνοις αὐτῆς, contrasted with ver. 4 τῶν τέκνων σου. The difficulty has occasioned the substitution of the first or second person in the versions, and the reading μάλιστα ἐν ἐνὶ ὧσιν in the interpolator's text. See the upper note.

This sentence—a warning against dissension—is a sort of after-thought, which deranges the whole of the note. 3 σὖν αὖτ $\hat{\varphi}$] GL; om. Ag. 5 σὖs] GL; δs [g] (adding τὴν ἐκκλησίαν κ.τ.λ. afterwards); qui A (adding nos afterwards). Thus δs seems to have been an early corruption, which obliged Ag to supply the object to ἐστήριξεν in different ways. θ έλημα] G; β ούλημα g*. 7 οὖκ] οὖχ G.

subsequent passage. After the words $\hat{\eta}\nu$ ἀσπάζομαι κ.τ.λ. would naturally have followed καὶ εὔχομαι πλεῖστα χαίρειν (comp. Magn. inscr., Trall. inscr.). This however is forgotten; there is no opening benediction, such as we find in the other six letters; but instead of this Ignatius runs off into a justification of the Church officers thus accidentally mentioned (ἀποδεδειγμένοις κ.τ.λ.), and more especially into a eulogy of the bishop (ὃν ἐπίσκοπον ἔγνων).

4. ἀποδεδειγμένοις] 'designated,' 'appointed to office'; comp. Susann. 5 καὶ ἀπεδείχθησαν δύο πρεσβύτεροι ἐκ τοῦ λαοῦ κριταί κ.τ.λ., a very common classical usage. This word refers to the nomination or election by the human agents—whether the congregation or the officers of the Church—as the following words ἐν

ἐν γνώμη] i.e. 'with the approval of'; comp. Ephes. 3 οἱ ἐπίσκοποι οἱ κατὰ τὰ πέρατα ὁρισθέντες ἐν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ γνώμη εἰσίν (with the note).

5. οὖς κατὰ κ.τ.λ.] i.e. Christ confirmed and established in their office the persons so appointed through human agency by the gift of His Holy Spirit; where τὸ ἄδιον θέλημα is opposed to the ἀπόδειξις of man.

I. 'I know well that your bishop does not owe his office to any human appointment or any spirit of vainglory, but to the love of God the Father and of Christ. His gentleness overwhelms me; his silence is more powerful than the speech of others; for he is attuned to perfect harmony with the commandments, like the strings in a lyre. Therefore I praise and bless his godly mind, knowing its virtues and perfections, its calmness and forbearance, which are of God.'

7. $^{\circ}$ Ον ἐπίσκοπον] The relative refers to the previous σὺν τῷ ἐπισκόπω; but the antecedent being so distant, ἐπίσκοπον is added to make the reference clear. For the cause of the derangement in the sentence, which has given rise to this awkwardness of expression, see the note on μάλιστα κ.τ.λ. above. The interpolator has straightened the construction, Θεασάμενος ὑμῶν τὸν ἐπίσκοπον ἔγνων κ.τ.λ.

ἔγνων] Ignatius had passed through Philadelphia on his way to Smyrna; see above p. 241, and § 6, 7 (with the notes). There is no indication in this letter or elsewhere, that the Philadelphian bishop had visited him at Smyrna with the delegates of other

οὐκ ἀφ' ἐαυτοῦ κ.τ.λ.] An obvious reflexion of Gal. i. I οὐκ ἀπ' ἀνθρώπων οὐδὲ δι' ἀνθρώπου, where see the note on the difference of prepositions. Neither did he himself originate (ἀπό), nor did other men confer (διά), the office which he held.

ἀνθρώπων κεκτήσθαι τὴν διακονίαν τὴν εἰς τὸ κοινὸν ἀνήκουσαν, οὐδὲ κατὰ κενοδοξίαν, ἀλλ' ἐν ἀγάπη Θεοῦ πατρὸς καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ· οὖ καταπέπληγμαι τὴν ἐπιείκειαν, ὸς σιγῶν πλείονα δύναται τῶν λαλούντων συνευρύθμισται γὰρ ταῖς ἐντολαῖς, ὡς χορδαῖς 5

I διακονίαν] Gg; administrationem. L; dispensationem (domus-administrationem = olκονομίαν) A. There is no reason to suppose (with Petermann) that L read olκονομίαν. In L olκονομία elsewhere (Ephes. 6, 18, 20) is always dispensatio, whereas διακονία is rendered by ministratio in § 10 below, Magn. 6, by ministerium in Smyrn. 12, and by this very word administratio in Hero 9. On the other hand the rendering of A certainly implies οlκονομίαν, and we may suppose that this word was substituted in some texts, because διακονία seemed an unfit term to apply to a bishop. τ 0] gL; τ 0ν G, and this was also the reading of A, which translates quae decet communem hominem. 2 Θεοῦ...Χριστοῦ] GLA; 'I. Χ. καὶ θεου πατρὸς τοῦ ἐγείραντος κ.τ.λ. [g]. 4 πλείονα] GL; πλέον g; al. A. τῶν λαλούντων g* (the Gk Mss, but l om. πλέον). The Armenian word means properly 'persons gifted with λόγος,' i.e. 'speech, reason, intelligence,' and its em-

I. ϵls τὸ κοινὸν κ.τ.λ.] Comp. Smyrn. 8 τῶν ἀνηκόντων ϵls τὴν ἐκκλησίαν. For the expression ἀνήκειν ϵls see the note on Clem. Rom. 45. The verb takes a dative in Clem. Rom. 35 τὰ ἀνήκοντα τῆ ἀμώμω βουλήσει, ib. 62 τῶν ἀνηκόντων τῆ θρησκεία ἡμῶν, Herm. Sim. v. 2 ἀνήκουσαν τῆ νηστεία, and so in Polyc. 7.

2. οὐδὲ κατὰ κενοδοξίαν] 'nor with vain-glory.' Add to this the expression in § 8 μηδὲν κατ' ἐριθείαν πράσσετε, and for both combined comp. Phil. ii. 3 μηδὲν κατ' ἐρίθειαν μηδὲ κατὰ κενοδοξίαν. For the different meanings of κενοδοξία see the note on Magn. II.

Θεοῦ] The subjective genitive, as the antithesis to οὐκ ἀφ' ἐαυτοῦ κ.τ.λ. suggests; comp. Trall. 6. God's love conferred the office upon him. The genitive is perhaps objective in Rom. inscr. (see the note).

3. οὖ] sc. τοῦ ἐπισκόπου.

4. ἐπιείκειω] 'modesty, moderation, forbearance.' See the notes on Clem. Rom. 58, Ign. Ephes. 10.

There is an oxymoron in $\kappa \alpha \tau \alpha \pi \epsilon \pi \lambda \eta \gamma \mu a \iota$, since $\epsilon \pi \iota \epsilon \iota \kappa \epsilon \iota a$ is the quality to reassure, not to dismay. Similarly in the following clause silence is said to be more eloquent than speech. Comp. Ephes. 6 $\delta \sigma \sigma \nu \beta \lambda \epsilon \pi \epsilon \iota \tau \iota s \sigma \iota \gamma \omega \nu \tau a \epsilon \pi \iota \sigma \kappa \sigma \sigma \nu \nu \rho \sigma \delta \epsilon \iota \sigma \theta \omega$. See the note there.

ôs σιγῶν κ.τ.λ.] So Carlyle says of Cromwell (Life and Letters, Introd. c. 2) 'His words-still more his silences and unconscious instincts, when you have spelt and lovingly deciphered these also out of his words-will in several ways reward the study of an earnest man.' Comp. Aristoph. Ran. 913 sq. oi & έσίγων. ΔΙΟ, έγω δ' έχαιρον τη σιωπη καί με τοῦτ' ἔτερπεν οὐχ ἦττον ἢ νῦν οἰ λαλοῦντες. The interpolator and transcribers have enfeebled the expression by inserting πλέον or μάταια. The editors have retained the latter, apparently without misgiving.

5. συνευρύθμισται] 'is tuned in harmony with'; comp. Ephes. 4 τὸ ...πρεσβυτέριον...οὖτως συνήρμοσται τῷ

ἐπισκόπφ, ώς χορδαὶ κιθάρα. Here however the metaphor is not so clear. It is not easy to see in what sense the harp as a whole can be said to harmonize with the several strings; and, even if this difficulty were waived, the application of the metaphor is not good. Perhaps we should read χορδαὶ κιθάρα, as some authorities suggest. For ταις έντολaîs, used absolutely, see the note on Trall. 13. If the lexicons may be trusted, not only is συνευρυθμίζειν a ἄπαξ λεγόμενον, but neither εὐρυθμίζω nor συνεύρυθμος occurs elsewhere.

τὴν εἰς Θεὸν κ.τ.λ.] The same expression occurs Rom. 7: comp. Polyc. 1 σου τὴν ἐν Θεῷ γνώμην.

7. ἐνάρετον] The word does not occur in the LXX or N. T., but is found in 4 Macc. xi. 5, and in Clem. Rom. 62 τῶν ἀφελιμωτάτων εἰς ἐνάρετον βίον. It is a favourite word with the Stoics; see Phryn. p. 328 (Lobeck) παρὰ τοῖς Στωϊκοῖς κυκλεῖται τοὕνομα, οὐκ ὂν ἀρχαῖον, with Lobeck's note.

τέλειον] Here an adjective of two terminations, as e.g. Plat. Phaedr. p. 249 C, Leg. x. p. 951 B, Aristot. Eth. Nic. vii. 14 (p. 1153), Pol. i. 2 (p. 1252), and frequently. Compare $\delta \hat{\eta}$ -λος [Clem. Rom.] ii. 12.

το ἀκίνητον κ.τ.λ.] In apposition to την εἰs Θ. αὐτοῦ γνώμην, as explaining it. Ignatius here runs into Stoic phraseology (see the note on ἐνάρετον above). For ἀόργητος see the note on Clem. Rom. 19.

9. Θεοῦ ζῶντος] i.e. 'inspired by a living God.' There is not however much force in the epithet here, and perhaps ζῶντος should be separated from Θεοῦ and taken with αὐτοῦ, as the Armenian Version suggests; comp. § 3 ἵνα ὧσιν κατὰ Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ζῶντες.

II. 'Therefore as children of truth, avoid dissension and false-teaching. Where the shepherd is there let the sheep follow; for many wolves are prowling about, ready to seize the stragglers in the race of God. But they will have no place, so long as you are at unity.'

ΙΙ. Τέκνα οὖν [φωτὸς] ἀληθείας, φεύγετε τὸν μερισμὸν καὶ τὰς κακοδιδασκαλίας ὅπου δὲ ὁ ποιμήν ἐστιν, ἐκεῖ ὡς πρόβατα ἀκολουθεῖτε πολλοὶ γὰρ λύκοι ἀξιότ Τέκνα] GLA Dam-Rup 5; ὡς τέκνα g. φωτὸς ἀληθείας] GL* (but a v. 1. inserts et) g Dam-Rup; lucis et veritatis A. It is clear therefore that φωτὸς ἀληθείας is older than any existing authorities, though probably corrupt. The remedy however is not to insert a καὶ, as is commonly done: see the lower note. 2 δὲ] G (but the Casanatensian transcript has μὲν) g Dam-Rup; autem L; et A. 5 ἐνότητι] ἐνώτητι G. οὐχ ἔξουσιν] Gg; non habent L; non est illis A (but the freedom elsewhere used by A in translating the Syriac future deprives it of weight).

 Τέκνα κ.τ.λ.] Τέκνα φωτὸς οςcurs, Ephes. v. 8; νίοὶ [τοῦ] φωτός, Luke xvi. 8, John xii. 36, 1 Thess. v. 5. The reading of the Greek MSS φωτὸς ἀληθείας, 'of the light of truth,' cannot stand; for definite articles would almost certainly be required. The text might be mended by inserting a καί, as the Armenian Version gives 'light and truth.' On such a point however a version has little weight, since this would be a very obvious expedient for a translator. I am disposed to think that τέκνα άληθείας was the original reading of Ignatius; and that φωτὸς was first intended as a substitution or a gloss or a parallel, suggested by the familiar scriptural phrase τέκνα (νίοὶ) φωτός.

μερισμὸν] So again §§ 3, 7, 8, Smyrn. 8. The word occurs both in the LXX, and in the N. T. (Heb. ii. 4, iv. 12), but not in this sense.

- 2. κακοδιδασκαλίας] See [Clem. Rom.] ii. 10 κακοδιδασκαλοῦντες, with the note.
- 3. λύκοι] So S. Paul, Acts xx. 29 λύκοι βαρεῖς...μὴ φειδόμενοι τοῦ ποιμνίου; comp. John x. 12. In ἀξιόπιστοι there is perhaps an allusion to the 'sheep's clothing' of Matt. vii. 15 (comp. Clem. Hom. xi. 35, Iren. i. praef. I, Clem. Alex. Protr. I. p. 4). For the metaphor see also Epictetus Diss. iii. 22. 35 τί οὖν εἶ;

ποιμήν ταῖς ἀληθείαις. οὕτω γὰρ κλάεις, ώς οἱ ποιμένες, ὅταν λύκος ἀρπάση τι τῶν προβάτων αὐτῶν· καὶ οὖτοι δὲ πρόβατά εἰσιν οἱ ὑπὸ σοῦ ἀρχόμενοι: comp. ib. i. 3. 7 οἱ μὲν...λύκοις ὅμοιοι γινόμεθα, ἄπιστοι καὶ ἐπίβουλοι καὶ βλαβεροί· οἱ δὲ λέουσιν κ.τ.λ. Rhodon (in Euseb. H. E. v. 13) calls Marcion ὁ Ποντικὸς λύκος, and at a later date it is not uncommon as a designation of heretics.

άξιόπιστοι] 'specious, plausible, deceitful,' as in Polyc. 3 (where however the bad sense is not so directly prominent); comp. Trall. 6. καταξιοπιστευόμενοι (with the note). Suidas distinguishes between the earlier and later sense of this word, 'Αξιόπιστος ούχὶ ὁ κατάπλαστος λέγεται ὑπὸ τῶν παλαιών καὶ τερατεία χρώμενος, άλλ' ό πιστός καὶ δόκιμος καὶ ἀξιόχρεως. For this later and bad sense comp. Epist. ad Diogn. 8 τους κενούς καὶ ληρώδεις έκείνων λόγους ἀποδέχη τῶν άξιοπίστων φιλοσόφων, Lucian Alex. 4 πιθανήν καὶ ἀξιόπιστον καὶ ὑποκριτικην τοῦ βελτίονος, Charito iv. 9 έμνημόνευσε Καλλιρόης άξιοπίστω τῶ προσωπω (comp. ib. i. 4), Apollon. in Euseb. H. E. v. 18 Θεμίσων ὁ τὴν άξιόπιστον πλεονεξίαν ημφιεσμένος. So too ἀξιοπιστία, Joseph. B. J. ii. 13. 3 παντάπασιν ὑπ' ἀξιοπιστίας ἦσαν άνεύρετοι, Tatian ad Graec. 25 κεκραγως δημοσία μετ' άξιοπιστίας, Aristid. Art. Rhet. i. 4 (Op. 11. p. 745, ed. Dind.) άξιοπιστίας δέ καὶ τὸ έπικαταπιστοι ήδονη κακη αίχμαλωτίζουσιν τοὺς θεοδρόμους· 5 ἀλλ' ἐν τῆ ἑνότητι ὑμῶν οὐχ έξουσιν τόπον.

6 'Απέχεσθε] GL [Dam-Rup]; add. οὖν g; jam (ergo) A (prob. representing οὖν, if it be not an insertion of a translator or of a scribe). ἄστινας οὐ γεωργεῖ 'Ι. Χ.] GL; ἄστινας 'Ι. Χ. οὐ γεωργεῖ g; ὧν χριστὸς ἰησοῦς οὐ γεωργεῖ Dam-Rup (so the Ms, but Lequien omits οὐ); quas dominus noster iesus christus non plantavit A (omitting the rest of the sentence). 7 αὐτοὺς] Gg* (Mss, though edd. read αὐτάς) Dam-Rup; ipsos L (not ipsas, as commonly given); def. A. There is therefore no authority for αὐτάς. φυτείαν] φυτίαν G.

ψεύδεσθαι (with the whole chapter, which treats of ἀξιοπιστία in all its forms); and ἀξιοπίστως, Polyb. iii. 33. 17 τοις άξιοπίστως ψευδομένοις (comp. xii. 9. 3, xxviii. 4. 10), Tatian ad Graec. 2 ἀξιοπίστως ἢσωτεύσατο, Joseph. B. 7. I. 25. 2, Anon. in Euseb. H. E. v. 16. In this sense the word differs from πιθανός, as implying a show of severe honesty or downrightness. It is frequently found however in a good sense, even in late writers, e.g. Joseph. c. Apion. i. 1, 20, ii. 37, Clem. Alex. Strom. i. 2 (p. 327), ii. 5, 6 (pp. 442, 445), vii. 8, 9 (p. 862). The manner in which it slips into a bad sense will appear from Clem. Alex. Paed. iii. 11 (p. 302) μη μόνον είναι ήμας άλλα και άξιοπίστους φανηναι.

4. ηδονη κακη] This is the bait which they hold out to their victims; see the parallel passage Trall. 6, where the same phrase occurs.

αἰχμαλωτίζουσιν] As in 2 Tim. iii. 6; and so Iren. I. praef. I διὰ τῆς πανούργως συγκεκροτημένης πιθανότητος ...αἰχμαλωτίζουσιν αὐτούς (comp. ib. i. 3. 6), quoted by Pearson. In all these cases it is said of the machinations of heretical teachers.

θεοδρόμουs] 'the runners in the stadium of God,' who is the great ἀγωνοθέτης. It is the metaphor of the Christian δρόμος, which occurs so frequently in S. Paul; see the note on Rom. 2, and comp. also Clem. Rom. 6, 7, [Clem. Rom.] ii. 7 (with the notes). The idea here is much the same as in Gal. v. 7 ἐτρέχετε καλῶς τίς ὑμᾶς ἐνέκοψεν; The word θεοδρόμος occurs again Polyc. 7, but in a somewhat different sense, 'God's courier.'

5. $\epsilon^{\nu} \tau \hat{\eta} \epsilon^{\nu} \delta \tau \eta \tau \iota \kappa.\tau.\lambda.$] 'So long as you are united, they will find no place for their machinations.'

III. 'Beware of these false teachers, as of noxious weeds, which were not planted by the Father and are not tilled by Christ. Not that I found any dissension among you, but on the contrary purity of faith. Those who belong to God and Christ attach themselves to the bishop; and those too, who repent and enter again into the unity of the Church, are owned by God and live after Christ. Be not deceived. No man who follows a leader of schism can inherit the kingdom of God. He, who adheres to a false doctrine, dissevers himself from the Passion.'

6. β orav $\hat{\omega}$ v] 'weeds.' See the note on Trall. 6, where the same metaphor occurs.

7. γεωργεί] Comp. John xv. I ό πατήρ μου ό γεωργός έστιν, I Cor. iii.

πατρός. οὐχ ότι παρ' ὑμῖν μερισμὸν εὖρον, ἀλλ' ἀποδιυλισμόν. ὅσοι γὰρ Θεοῦ εἰσιν καὶ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, οὖτοι μετὰ τοῦ ἐπισκόπου εἰσίν καὶ ὅσοι ἄν μετανοήσαντες ἕλθωσιν ἐπὶ τὴν ἑνότητα τῆς ἐκκλησίας, καὶ οὖτοι Θεοῦ ἔσονται, ἵνα ὦσιν κατὰ Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν 5

The rendering of A is explained by Zahn I. v. A. p. 270. The same Syriac root signifies colare (διυλίζειν, e.g. Pesh. Matt. xxiii. 24) and clarum sonitum reddere; see Bernstein Lex. Syr. Chrestom. s. v.

6 ἀδελφοί μου] GLS₁ Dam-Rup 1 Anon Syr₁

9 Θεοῦ γεώργιον...ἐστε. Here the Father is represented as planting the field and as sending Christ to till it.

αὐτούς] i.e. 'these heretical teachers,' who are intended by the κακαὶ βοταναί. The reading is certainly αὐτούς, not αὐτάς (see the critical note); and the sudden change to the masculine is the same here as in the parallel passage, Trall. II φεύγετε οὖν τὰς κακὰς παραφυάδας...οὖτοι γὰρ οὖκ εἰσιν φυτεία πατρός.

φυτείαν πατρός] A reference to Matt. xv. 13 πᾶσα φυτεία, ἡν οὐκ ἐφύτευσεν ὁ πατήρ μου κ.τ.λ., as in the parallel passage Trall. II already cited. There is also doubtless an indirect reference to the parable of the tares sown by the Evil One, Matt. xiii. 24 sq. This reference has been seen by the interpolator; for to the words διὰ τὸ μὴ εἶναι αὐτοὺς φυτείαν πατρός he adds ἀλλὰ σπέρμα τοῦ πουηροῦ.

I. $oi\chi$ $[\delta\tau\iota]$ This sentence must be taken as parenthetical. Ignatius guards against appearing to censure the Philadelphians in what he has said. The words $[\delta\sigma\sigma\iota]$ $[\gamma\lambda\rho]$ $[\kappa.\tau.\lambda]$, are connected with the previous sentence, $[\delta\sigma\tau\iota\nu as...\pi a\tau\rho\delta s.$ For this corrective $[\delta\sigma\iota]$ $[\delta\tau\iota]$ see the note on [Magn. 3].

 $\epsilon \tilde{v} \rho \rho \nu$] 'I found.' This implies that Ignatius had himself visited Philadelphia; see above p. 241, and the notes on § 1 $\delta \nu$ ἐπίσκοπον ἔγνων, § 6 ὅτι ἐβάρησα κ.τ.λ., § 7 ἐκραύγασα μεταξὺ ών.

ἀποδινλισμόν] 'filtration.' See the note on Rom. inscr. ἀποδινλισμένοις ἀπὸ παντὸς ἀλλοτρίου χρώματος. The false teachers had been at Philadelphia; but the Philadelphian Christians had strained out these dregs of heresy. They had separated themselves from the heretics; but this separation deserved the name of 'filtering,' rather than of 'division.'

2. $\Theta \epsilon o \hat{v} \epsilon l \sigma \iota v$] For this phrase see the note on Ephes. 5.

5. κατὰ Ἰησοῦν κ.τ.λ.] So again Magn. 8. Similarly, κατὰ χριστιανισμὸν ζῆν Magn. 10, κατὰ Θεὸν ζῆν Ερhes. 8, κατὰ ἀλήθειαν ζῆν Ερhes. 6, κατὰ κυριακὴν ζῆν Magn. 9, κατὰ ἰουδαισμὸν ζῆν Magn. 8, κατὰ ἀνθρώπους ζῆν Trall. 2, Rom. 8.

6. μὴ πλανᾶσθε] As in I Cor. vi. 9, xv. 33, Gal. vi. 7, James i. 16. Here the phrase is clearly suggested by I Cor. vi. 9 sq, whence the words βασίλειαν Θεοῦ οῦ κληρονομεῖ also are borrowed. Comp. Ephes. 16, where there is the same connexion of phrases suggested by S. Paul's language.

ζώντες. μή πλανάσθε, άδελφοί μου εί τις σχίζοντι ἀκολουθεῖ, Βασιλείαν Θεος ος κληρονομεῖ εί τις ἐν ἀλλοτρία γνώμη περιπατεῖ, οὖτος τῷ πάθει οὐ συγκατατίθεται.

(but for the Syriac authorities see Clem. Rom. ii. § 13); fratres (here) A; ἀδελφοί (before μὴ πλανᾶσθε) g. σχίζοντι] txt GL Dam-Rup; add. ἀπὸ τῆς ἀληθείας [g]; add. ecclesiam Anon-Syr₁; add. ecclesiam dei S_1 ; separatoris ecclesiae A. 7 κληρονομεί] GLA Dam-Rup Anon-Syr₁; κληρονομήσει g; haereditabit S_1 . The future is taken from S. Paul, 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10, Gal. v. 21. 8 τῷ πάθει] GL; add. christi S_1A . The sentence is paraphrased in g, οὖτος οὐκ ἔστιν χριστοῦ οὔτε τοῦ πάθους αὐτοῦ κοινωνός.

σχίζοντι] 'making a rent,' 'causing a schism.' For this absolute use of σχίζειν comp. Orig. Comm. in Matth. x. § 16 (III. p. 462) οὐ σχίζων ἀπ' αὐτῆς (i.e. τῆς συναγωγῆς), Dion. Alex. Ep. ad. Novat. (in Euseb. H. E. vi. 45) ἕνεκεν τοῦ μὴ σχίσαι, passages referred to in E. A. Sophocles Lex. s. v. It is not so used in the LXX or N. T.

8. ἀλλοτρία] 'strange,' i.e. 'heretical,' as in Trall. 6 ἀλλοτρίας βοτανης, Rom. inscr. ἀλλοτρίου χρώματος, Papias in Euseb. H. E. iii. 39 τοῖς τὰς ἀλλοτρίας ἐντολὰς μνημονεύουσιν. So too ξένος, Heb. xiii. 9.

οὐ συγκατατίθεται] 'has no part or agreement with,' 'dissociates himself from'; Exod. xxiii. I, 32, Susann. 20, Luke xxiii. 51; comp. συγκατάθεσις 2 Cor. vi. 16. The full phrase would be συγκατατίθεσθαι ψῆφον, or κλῆρον, 'to cast in one's vote or lot with.' It is a good classical word. The meaning of Ignatius here is explained by the following sentence, σπουδάσατε μιᾶ εὐχαριστία χρῆσθαι. These heretics separated themselves and set up a eucharistic feast of their own. By thus severing themselves from the true eucharist of the Church, they severed themselves from the passion of Christ and all the benefits flowing therefrom; see Smyrn. 6 with the note.

IV. 'Therefore take care to keep one eucharistic feast only; for Christ's flesh is one and His blood is one; there is one altar and one bishop with his priests and deacons. Do this, and ye will do after God's bidding.'

10. μιὰ εὐχαριστία κ.τ.λ.] Comp. The heretics disobeyed this rule. These passages in Ignatius (comp. also Smyrn. 6, and perhaps Ephes. 13) are the earliest instances of εὐχαριστία applied to the Holy Communion except perhaps Doctr. Apost. 9 περί δέ της εὐχαριστίας, οῦτως εὐχαριστήσατε κ.τ.λ.: comp. Tertull. ad. Marc. i. 23 'super alienum panem alii deo gratiarum actionibus fungitur.' On the question whether the eucharist was at this time still connected with the agape or not, see the note on Smyrn. 8.

With this passage compare I Cor. xi. 18, 20 πρῶτον μὲν γὰρ συνερχομένων ὑμῶν ἐν ἐκκλησία ἀκούω σχίσματα ἐν ὑμῶν ὑπάρχειν...συνερχομένων οὖν ὑμῶν ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτό, οὐκ ἔστιν κυριακὸν δεῖπνον φαγεῖν κ.τ.λ. The heretics of Ignatius' time violated this bond of union, though not in the same way, but by holding separate eucharistic feasts; see the note on Smyrn. 6, 8.

I. μία γὰρ σὰρξ κ.τ.λ.] Doubtless suggested by I Cor. x. 16, 17 τὸν ἄρτον ὃν κλῶμεν, οὐχὶ κοινωνία τοῦ σώματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐστιν; ὅτι εἶς ἄρτος, ἐν σῶμα οἱ πολλοί ἐσμεν οἱ γὰρ πάντες ἐκ τοῦ ἐνὸς ἄρτου μετέχομεν. The 'one flesh' here is the one eucharistic loaf betokening the union in the one body of Christ.

Quisque alibi collegerit, spargit.' It would be an anachronism to suppose that Ignatius by the 'altar' here means the 'Lord's table.' Even in Irenæus, though he is distinctly speaking of the eucharist in the context (see the passage quoted above), yet only a spiritual altar is recognised; Haer. iv. 18. 6 'offerimus eum ei, non quasi indigenti sed gratias agentes [εὐχαριστοῦντες] dominationi ejus et sanctificantes creaturam...sic et ideo nos quoque offerre vult munus ad altare frequenter sine intermissione. Est ergo altare in caelis (illuc enim preces nostrae et oblationes diriguntur) et templum, etc.' Compare also the passages of Clement and Origen quoted in the note on Ephes. 5, and see Philippians p. 265 sq. Probably Ignatius here means by the term (to use Clement's definition) the "appoint a τῶν ταις εὐχαις ἀνακειμένων. See the notes on Ephes. 5, Trall. 7. For

V. 'Brethren, my love for you is unbounded, and I wish therefore to warn you-yet not I, but Jesus Christ, whose prisoner I am, anxious and fearful as yet, because not yet made perfect. But your prayers will perfect me, so that in God's mercy this my lot may be fulfilled, and I may obtain the martyr's crown. I cling to the Gospel as the flesh of Christ, and to the Apostles as the presbyters of the Church. Yes, and we love the prophets also, because they foretold the Gospel and awaited the coming of Christ. Thus they were saved by faith through union with Him, being worthy of all love and honour; to whom also Christ bore witness, and who are enrolled in the Gospel of our common hope.'

6. ἐκκέχυμαι] Implying profuse demonstrations of love, as not unfrequently, e.g. Arist. Vesp. 1469, Lucian Salt. 81, Polyb. v. 106. 7 εἰς πάντας τοὺς βασιλεῖς ἐξεκέχυντο, i.e. 'were lavish in their loyalty and devotion'; see also Clem. Alex.

Protr. 2 (p. 27). So the Latin 'effundi,' e.g. Cic. Att. iv. 9 'in nos vero suavissime hercule est effusus.'

7. ὑπεραγαλλόμενος] So ὑπερδοξάζειν Polyc. I, ὑπερεπαινεῖν Ephes. 6. ἀσφαλίζομαι] 'I warn you,' 'put you on your guard.' The word means properly 'to shut up fast,' 'to make secure for oneself,' e.g. LXX Neh. iii. 15, Wisd. xiii. 15; comp. Clem. Hom. ii. 45 ὁ τὸ περιέχον σῶμα ἐν ἀπείρω πελάγει πνεύματι βουλῆς ἀσφαλισάμενος. See Bekker Anecd. p. 456 τὸ ἀσφαλίζεσθαι βάρβαρον. It is however a common word from Polybius downward.

φοβοῦμαι μᾶλλον] Comp. Trall. 4 νῦν γάρ με δεῖ πλέον φοβεῖσθαι.

9. ἀναπάρτιστος] See the parallel passage Ephes. 3 εἰ γὰρ καὶ δέδεμαι ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι, οὔπω ἀπήρτισμαι ἐν Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ. The word ἀναπάρτιστος occurs Diog. Laert. vii. 63. It is vain in the face of the authorities, the requirements of the context, and the parallel passage, to attempt with Voss to defend ἀνάρπαστος here.

10. ἀπαρτίσει] The word was condemned as a solœcism by the purists; but the condemnation must be taken with some qualification. It is used several times by Aristotle. See Lobeck Phryn. p. 447 sq.

κλήρ φ] Of martyrdom; see the note Trall. 12.

ἢλεήθην] After S. Paul's manner of speaking, 2 Cor. iv. I καθώς ἢλεήθημεν, οὖκ ἐγκακοῦμεν, I Tim. i. 13, 16 ἀλλὰ ἢλεήθην...ἀλλὰ διὰ τοῦτο ἢλεήθην: comp. Rom. xi. 30, 31. So too I Pet. ii. 10. See also Rom. inscr. (note). For ἐλεεῖσθαι ἐν comp. Smyrn. inscr.

ἐπιτύχω] The construction is ἵνα ἐπιτύχω τοῦ κλήρου ἐν ῷ ἢλεήθην, 'that I may secure, make good, the lot, in which (i.e. in the way of obtaining which) God's mercy placed me': comp. Trall. 12 τοῦ κλήρου οὖπερ ἔγκειμαι [MS οὖ περίκειμαι] ἐπιτυχεῖν, Rom. I εἰς τὸ τὸν κλῆρόν μου ἀνεμποδίστως ἀπολαβεῖν. So too Mart. Polyc. 6 τὸν ἴδιον κλῆρον ἀπαρτίση.

I. $\pi\rho\sigma\sigma\phi\nu\gamma\dot{\omega}\nu$] This can hardly be connected with $\dot{\eta}\lambda\epsilon\dot{\eta}\theta\eta\nu$ (as Zahn proposes I. v. A. p. 575), seeing that $\dot{\epsilon}\pi\iota\tau\dot{\nu}\chi\omega$ intervenes. Nor is there any objection to connecting it with $\ddot{\nu}\nu\alpha...\dot{\epsilon}\pi\iota\tau\dot{\nu}\chi\omega$. The participle here signifies not 'by taking refuge,' but 'inasmuch as I took refuge.' In other words it is not necessarily part of the contingency implied in $\ddot{\nu}\nu\alpha$.

ώς σαρκὶ κ.τ.λ.] i. e. because it gives the earthly life, records the actual works of Christ, as the Logos incarnate; comp. § 9 ἐξαίρετον δέ τι ἔχει τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, τὴν παρουσίαν τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, τὸ πάθος αὐτοῦ, κ.τ.λ. The metaphor is eucharistic. Somewhat similarly Origen in Lev. Hom. vii. § 5 (II. p. 225) interprets the words of John vi. 53 sq, ἐὰν μὴ φάγητε τὴν σάρκα κ.τ.λ., 'carnibus et sanguine verbi sui...potat et reficit omne hominum genus'; and so too Euseb. Eccl. Theol. iii.

12 ὅστε αὐτὰ εἶναι τὰ ῥήματα καὶ τοὺς λόγους αὐτοῦ τὴν σάρκα καὶ τὸ αἶμα κ.τ.λ., Anon, Brev. in Psalm. cxlvii (Hieron. Op. VII. p. 530 Appx) 'Ego corpus Jesu evangelium puto, sanctas scripturas puto, doctrinam ejus; et quando dicit Qui non comederit carnem meam etc.' These passages are quoted by Ussher. See also the notes on Trall. 8, Rom. 7, for similar eucharistic metaphors. There is probably an indirect allusion to Docetism here.

τοις ἀποστόλοις κ.τ.λ.] The Apostles stand in the same relation to the Church at large, in which its own presbytery does to each individual church. So conversely Trall. 2 ὑποτάσσεσθαι καὶ τῷ πρεσβυτερίῳ, ώς τοις ἀποστόλοις Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ (comp. Smyrn. 8). See the notes on Magn. 6, 13, Trall. 3.

The expression obviously points to some authoritative writings of the New Testament. The 'Apostles,' like the 'Prophets,' must have been represented in some permanent form to which appeal could be made. So far the bearing of the passage seems to be clear. But it is not so obvious whether Ignatius refers to two classes of writings included in our New Testament, τὸ εὐαγγέλιον the Gospel or Gospels, and οἱ ἀπόστολοι the Apostolic Epistles (perhaps including the Acts), or to one only, οἱ ἀπόστολοι as expositors of the εὐαγγέλιον, in which latter case it would comprise the Gospels as well as the Epistles. The former view is taken by Ussher, Pearson, and Leclerc, and more recently by Westcott Introduction to the Gospels p. 416, and Hilgenfeld Einleitung in das N. T. p. 72; while Zahn (I. v. A. p. 431 sq) and others interpret εὐαγγέλιον

in the latter way, not of the book, but of the teaching. The parallel passages are § 9 below οἱ γὰρ ἀγαπητοὶ προφήται κατήγγειλαν είς αὐτόν, τὸ δὲ εὐαγγέλιον ἀπάρτισμά ἐστιν ἀφθαρσίας, Smyrn. 5 ους ουκ έπεισαν αί προφητείαι οὐδε ὁ νόμος Μωσέως, ἀλλ' οὐδε μέχρι νῦν τὸ εὐαγγέλιον κ.τ.λ., ib. 7 προσέχειν δέ τοις προφήταις, έξαιρέτως δε τῷ εὐαγγελίω, εν ῷ τὸ πάθος ήμιν δεδήλωται κ.τ.λ. These passages point to the latter view, which regards the Apostles as the expositors of the Gospel. They cannot however be considered decisive in themselves, since 'the Gospel' might here be broken up into 'the Gospel' and 'the Apostles,' just as 'the Prophets' are broken up in Smyrn. 5 into 'the Prophets' and 'the Law of Moses.' But the use of εὐαγγέλιον in the context here (είς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον κατηγγελκέναι and συνηριθμημένοι έν τῷ εὐαγγελίω) is a more powerful argument, and seems to show that the idea of written documents is not intended in the word εὐαγγέλιον itself, but only involved in the subsequent mention of the 'Apostles.' In this case the description of the Old and New Testaments as 'the Prophets' and 'the Apostles' respectively may be compared with Justin's statement Apol. i. 67 (p. 98 D) τὰ ἀπομνημονεύματα τῶν ἀποστόλων ή τὰ συγγράμματα τῶν προφητῶν αναγινώσκεται, or the language in the so-called Second Epistle of Clement § 14 τὰ βιβλία καὶ οἱ ἀπόστολοι, or the classification of the Muratorian Canon (Tregelles, p. 58) 'neque inter prophetas completum numero neque inter apostolos.' Towards and after the close of the second century the separation of the 'Gospels' from the 'Apostles' becomes common, e.g.

Iren. i. 3. 6 των εὐαγγελικών καὶ των ἀποστολικών, Clem. Alex. Strom. vii. 3 (p. 836) τό τε εὐαγγέλιον ο τε ἀπόστολος, Tertull. de Praescr. 36 'evangelicis et apostolicis literis,' and elsewhere; see Reuss Gesch. der heil. Schr. N. T. § 300. There is indeed nothing to prevent the same author from using both modes of speaking in different places; comp. e.g. Clem. Alex. Strom. iii. 10 (p. 543) νόμος τε όμοῦ καὶ προφήται σὺν καὶ τῷ εὐαγγελίω ἐν ὀνόματι Χριστοῦ είς μίαν συνάγονται γνώσιν, with ib. v. 5 (p. 664) τοῦ εὐαγγελίου καὶ τῶν άποστόλων όμοίως τοις προφήταις άπασι, vi. II (p. 784) συμφωνίαν την έκκλησιαστικήν νόμου καὶ προφητῶν όμοῦ καὶ αποστόλων σύν καὶ τῷ εὐαγγελίω. But we should certainly not expect it in the same passage, and therefore there is no ground for interpreting the language here in a way which would perhaps (we cannot say, certainly) be an anachronism in the age of Ignatius. Lessing attempted to handle Ignatian criticism here and burnt his fingers (Sämmtl. Schrift. XI. 2, pp. 187, 197, 237, ed. Maltzahn; passages referred to by Zahn I. v. A. pp. 431 sq, 575). He stated that there was no trace of a collection of N. T. writings in the fathers of the first two centuries, and being confronted with this passage declared it to be corrupt. His emendation is an exhibition of reckless audacity, all the more instructive as coming from a great man; προσφυγων τω ἐπισκόπω ως σαρκὶ Ἰησοῦ Χριστού και τοις πρεσβυτέροις έκκλησίας ώς αποστόλοις και τους διακόνους δὲ ἀγαπῶ, ὡς προφήτας Χριστὸν καταγγείλαντας καὶ τοῦ αὐτοῦ πνεύματος μετασχόντας οδ καὶ οἱ ἀπόστολοι. 2. καὶ τοὺς προφήτας δὲ κ.τ.λ.] φήτας δὲ ἀγαπῶμεν, διὰ τὸ καὶ αὐτοὺς εἰς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον κατηγγελκέναι καὶ εἰς αὐτὸν ἐλπίζειν καὶ αὐτὸν ἀναμένειν ἐν ῷ καὶ πιστεύσαντες ἐσώθησαν ἐν ἑνότητι Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὄντες ἀξιαγάπητοι καὶ ἀξιοθαύμαστοι

5 καὶ συνηριθμημένοι] GL; om. g. A translates the passage quos testificatus est dominus noster iesus

For what reason are the prophets thus suddenly introduced? The motive is clearly apologetic; but what is the accusation or the antagonism against which the words are directed? Is it aimed at Judaizers who overrated the Old Testament in comparison with the Gospel? or at Anti-judaic Gnostics or Marcionites who depreciated or even rejected it? In the former case the force of the words will be, 'We do not disparage the prophets any more than yourselves; only we maintain the superiority of the Gospel; the prophets themselves look forward and bear witness to the Gospel.' And this sense is required by the context, έαν δέ τις ιουδαϊσμον έρμηνεύη κ.τ.λ., i. e. 'but if any one, while upholding the Prophets (the Old Testament), so interprets them as to teach Judaism, etc.' It is moreover supported by the very close parallel in §§ 9, 10, where Ignatius represents his Judaizing opponents as alleging against him the archives (i.e. the records of the Old Testament), while he himself concedes the greatness of the Mosaic priesthood (καλοὶ καὶ οἱ ἱερεῖς), but maintains the superiority of the great High-priest of the new covenant (κρείσσον δε ο άρχιερεύς), declaring that all the saints under the old dispensation entered through Him into the presence of God, and that the prophets heralded the Gospel. See especially the note on δ 9 καλοί καὶ κ.τ.λ.

1. ἀγαπῶμεν] Not an imperative, 'let us love,' as the Latin Version 'diligamus,' but an indicative, 'we love.' It may be a question however, whether we should not read ἀγαπῶ μὲν, to which the antithetical clause would be ἐὰν δέ τις ἰουδαϊσμὸν κ.τ.λ.; comp. Trall. 4 ἀγαπῶ μὲν γὰρ τὸ παθείν κ.τ.λ.

äξιος in Ignatius see the note on Ephes. 4 ἀξιονόμαστον.

5. "ayıoı] Connected by previous editors with the preceding words, but it seems to go better with those following.

συνηριθμημένοι] i.e. 'included among those who participate in the privileges of the Gospel.' It is wrongly explained by Smith 'prophetae cum apostolis in evangelio connumerati, utpote de quibus utrisque insigne testimonium illic reliquit Christus.' There is no reference to the written record in εὐαγγελίφ here.

6. της κοινης έλπίδος] 'our common hope,' i.e. Christ, as appears from § 11 below ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, τῆ κοινη έλπίδι ήμων; and so elsewhere in Ignatius; see the notes on Ephes. I, Magn. II. Zahn (I. v. A. pp. 430, 435) suggests reading της καινης έλπίδος, comparing Magn. 9 είς καινότητα έλπίδος; but I cannot think this an improvement. Not to mention that ή κοινή έλπίς occurs more than once elsewhere in Ignatius, the epithet here is especially appropriate, as enforcing the main idea of the passage (comp. ἐν ἐνότητι Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ and συνηριθμημένοι) that all alike, whether they lived before or after the coming of Christ, are united in a common Saviour.

VI. 'But if anyone so interprets them as to find Judaism in them, listen not to him. It is better to hear the circumcised teaching Christianity than the uncircumcised teaching Judaism. But in either case, if they speak not of Jesus Christ, they are no better than tombstones inscribed with men's names. Flee therefore from the snares and devices of the Evil One, lest your love wax feeble: and meet together all of you in concord. I thank God that my conscience acquits me of oppressing any one, while I was among you. And I pray that my words then spoken may not rise up in judgment against you.'

έρμηνεύη] 'propound'; as Celsus in Orig. c. Cels. iii. 58 (l. p. 485) οὐδὲ δυνήσονται τοῖς παισὶν έρμηνεύειν ἀγαθόν (quoted by Pearson), where as here the accusative describes not the text interpreted but the result attained by interpretation. The reference here is doubtless to the interpretation put upon the language of the prophets who have been mentioned in the last sentence, so as to support Judaizing practices, just as below (§ 8) Ignatius represents his opponents as appealing to the ἀρχεία against him.

8. ἄμεινον γάρ κ.τ.λ.] Who is meant by the ἀκρόβυστος in this sentence? Is he to be identified with the τις in the preceding clause, so that ἀκούειν παρὰ ἀκροβύστου in the latter place corresponds to ἀκού-

τομήν έχοντος χριστιανισμόν ακούειν ή παρά ακροβύστου ἰουδαϊσμόν. ἐὰν δὲ ἀμφότεροι περὶ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μή λαλῶσιν, οὖτοι ἐμοὶ στῆλαί εἰσιν καὶ τάφοι νεκρών, έφ' οἷε γέγραπται μόνον ὀνόματα ἀνθρώπων. φεύγετε οὖν τὰς κακοτεχνίας καὶ ἐνέδρας τοῦ ἄρχοντος 5 τοῦ αἰωνος τούτου, μήποτε θλιβέντες τῆ γνώμη αὐτοῦ ετε αὐτοῦ in the former? In this case the teachers would be represented, not as Jewish Christians, but as Gentile Christians with strong Judaic tendencies. This seems the most natural interpretation; nor can I with Zahn (I. v. A. 368 sq) see any serious objection to it. These opponents of Ignatius indeed are represented as intimately acquainted with the Old Testament and taking their stand upon it (§ 8 έὰν μή ἐν τοῖς ἀρχείοις κ.τ.λ., comp. Smyrn. 5 οθε οὐκ ἔπεισαν αἱ προφητείαι οὐδὲ ὁ νόμος Μωσέως); but the effective proselytizing of Jews and Judaic Christians among persons of Gentile origin is a patent fact, and there is no reason why proselytes so made should not have taken up the position of proselytizers themselves in Philadelphia. On the other hand it is possible, though I think not probable, that the ἀκρόβυστος is the recipient, not the promulgator, of the false interpretation. Under any circumstances the lovδαϊσμός, i.e. Jewish manner of living, which was enforced, would include the observance of sabbaths (comp. Magn. 9), rigorous restrictions respecting meats and drinks, etc., and in short such practices as are condemned in Col. ii. 16, 21, but not circumcision, as the word ἀκροβύστου shows. Though circumcision was insisted upon by the earliest Judaizers (see Gal. v. 2 sq, vi. 12 sq), this requirement was soon dropped as impracticable. In the Clementine Homilies for instance, notwithstanding their strong Judaic tendencies, nothing is said about it. Thus the heresy combated by Ignatius was only an λουδαϊσμός ἀπὸ μέρους, as Epiphanius describes the Judaism of Cerinthus (Haer. xxviii. 1).

ἀκροβύστου] Though the word ακροβυστία occurs many times in S. Paul (see also Acts xi. 3), aκρόβυστος is not once found in the N. T. Nor does it occur in the LXX, though found in other of the Hexaplaric Versions, Exod. vi. 12, Josh. v. 7.

So Jerome (Op. VI. p. 105), referred to by Ussher, explains στηλαι in the LXX, Hos. x. See also the protest of Samuel, 2 Sam. xii. 3 τίνα κατεδυνάστευσα ύμων η τίνα έξεπίασα ύμων; Hefele supposes that Ignatius refers to the yoke of Jewish ordinances: but he was extremely unlikely to be charged with imposing such a burden. The parallel of S. Paul's language would rather suggest that he is speaking of using his position and authority tyrannically, whether (as in S. Paul's case) to burden them with his maintenance, or (as the following words suggest) to overawe and crush any free expression of opinion. This apology obviously implies that he had heard of such accusations brought against him at Philadelphia. The report was probably conveyed to him by Philo and Agathopus (§ 11). See Zahn I. v. A. p. 266 sq.

VII. 'Though certain persons attempted to deceive me in the flesh, yet the Spirit is not deceived. It knows its own movements, and it penetrates into the most secret recesses. When I was among you, I told you plainly, speaking with the voice of God, to give heed to your bishop and presbyters and deacons. Some men suspect that I said this, knowing the dissensions which impended. But indeed I did not learn it of flesh and blood; the Spirit cried aloud, saying, "Do nothing without the bishop; defile not your bodies which are the temples of God; cherish unity; avoid dissensions; be imitators of Jesus Christ, as He was of His Father."

I. ἢθέλησαν κ.τ.λ.] 'desired to lead me astray,' i.e. 'to impose upon me by their deceit'; comp. Magn. 3 οὐχ ὅτι τὸν ἐπίσκοπον τοῦτον τὸν βλεπόμενον πλανᾳ̂ τις κ.τ.λ. Markland's interpretation of πλανῆσαι 'deceptorem esse' (i.e. 'would make me out a deceiver') is refuted by the following οὐ πλανᾶται, and indeed by the whole context. It is vain to speculate on the circumstance to which Ignatius alludes. The expression $\kappa a \tau \grave{\alpha}$ $\sigma \acute{\alpha} \rho \kappa a$ points to some deceit practised upon him (and perhaps successfully) in the common affairs of life; comp. esp. Ephes. 8 $\grave{\alpha}$ δὲ καὶ κατὰ σάρκα πράσσετε, Rom. 9 $\tau \hat{\eta}$ όδ $\hat{\varphi}$ $\tau \hat{\eta}$ κατὰ σάρκα. In this province they might deceive him, but in the sphere of the Spirit no deception was possible. The obscurity of the allusion is a strong testimony to the genuineness of the letter.

2. $\tau \delta \pi \nu \epsilon \hat{\nu} \mu a$] i.e. 'the Spirit which is working in me.'

3. οίδεν γάρ κ.τ.λ.] John iii. 8 ούκ οίδας πόθεν έρχεται καὶ ποῦ ὑπάγει, said of the wind, as the symbol of the Spirit. The coincidence is quite too strong to be accidental. Nor can there be any reasonable doubt that the passage in the Gospel is prior to the passage in Ignatius. The application in the Gospel is natural. The application in Ignatius is strained and secondary; nor is his language at all explicable, except as an adaptation of a familiar passage. 'Though no one else can trace the movements of the Spirit,' Ignatius would say, 'yet the Spirit knows full well its own movements.'

It seems clear that the original of all these was οἱ δ' ὑποπτεύσαντές με ὡς προειδότα τὸν μερ. τιν. λέγ. ταῦτα, μάρτυς δέ μοι κ.τ.λ. G has preserved this with the corruption of πτέσαντες for ὑποπτεύσαντες; G has translated it literally (for the sunt of G is obviously a later addition); G (followed by G) has set the syntax straight; and G (as it now stands) has paraphrased the sentence, mending the grammar at the same time. See the lower note.

25 τὰ κρυπτὰ τῆς καρδίας αὐτοῦ φανερὰ γίνεται, Ephes. v. 12, 13 μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ ἐλέγχετε τὰ γὰρ κρυφῆ γινόμενα κ.τ.λ.

4. ἐκραύγασα] For the expression see Joh. xi. 43 φωνη μεγάλη ἐκραύγασεν: comp. Tatian Orat. 17 κεκραγότος ὅσπερ ἀπὸ τοῦ μετεώρου Κατακούσατέ μου, and see the note on Ephes. 19 μυστήρια κραυγης. Bunsen (Ign. p. 73) translates ἐκραύγασα 'Ich schrieb einen Brief,' and suggests that the writer alludes to passages in the letter to Polycarp (I suppose to § 4, 6). By such free renderings anything may be made of anything. Moreover the letter to Polycarp does not profess to be written from Philadelphia, but from Troas.

μεταξύ ἄν] 'when I was among you.' It is evident from the whole context that Ignatius had himself visited Philadelphia. He must therefore have taken the northern road through Sardis to Smyrna, instead of the southern which would have led him to Ephesus on his way thither (see above, p. 241). Zahn (I. v. A. p. 268) adopts the reading μεταξύ ὧν ἐλάλουν, 'in the midst of my discourse,' which is found in the common text of the Long Recension, and is rendered (though incorrectly) in the Latin Version of the same, 'inter eos quibus loquebar.' The Greek MSS however of the Long Recension do not altogether support this reading; while in the Greek MS of the uninterpolated text, and in all the Versions of it (Syrian, Armenian, Latin), it is consistently read μεταξὺ ἄν, ἐλάλουν. The change of tense ἐκραύγασα, ἐλάλουν, is no serious objection to this latter reading, which is otherwise much more natural.

5. $\Theta\epsilon o\hat{v}$ $\phi\omega v\hat{\eta}$] The words are omitted in the Greek MS by homocoteleuton, as in a parallel instance Trall. 7. The paraphrase of the interpolator, $o\hat{v}\kappa$ $\hat{\epsilon}\mu\hat{\nu}s$ $\kappa.\tau.\lambda$. (see the critical note), gives the right sense. For a similar claim where the writer declares himself to be speaking with the voice of God, see Clem. Rom. 59 (with the note).

Zahn supposes that the reading of S_1A (see the last note) was $\ddot{\omega}\sigma\pi\epsilon\rho$ $\epsilon l\delta\acute{o}\tau\alpha$, and adopts this reading. But the omission of the preposition in rendering $\pi\rho\omega\rho\nu\sigma\mu\dot{\epsilon}\nu\eta$ Ephes. inser. (ΣA), and $\pi\rho\omega\rho\omega\nu$ Trall, 8 (A), renders the inference somewhat doubtful. either that some word such as $\vec{\eta}$ τιῶντο has fallen out, or that the sentence is an anacoluthon. This latter seems the more probable hypothesis. If the masculine $\lambda \epsilon \gamma \omega \nu$ be correct here, it may be compared with exervos in Joh. xvi. 13, 14; but no dependence can be placed on the reading in such a case. There is the same v. l. also in Rom. 7. The passage has been misunderstood to mean that 'an apocryphal writing is quoted as Holy Scripture' (Supernatural Religion I. p. 273, ed. 2: see Westcott Canon p. 60, ed. 4). Ignatius is plainly speaking throughout this passage of a spiritual revelation to himself.

Const. ii. 28 the presbyters are styled σύμβουλοι τοῦ ἐπισκόπου καὶ τῆς ἐκκλησίας στέφανος ἔστι γὰρ συνέδριον καὶ βουλὴ τῆς ἐκκλησίας. See the notes on Magn. 6, 13, Trall. 3. A civil συνέδριον τῶν πρεσβυτέρων at Philadelphia is mentioned C. I. G. 3417 (comp. 3422).

13. λύσει κ.τ.λ.] Is. lviii. 6 λύε πάντα σύνδεσμον άδικίας, from which passage the interpolator has substituted σύνδεσμον άδικίας for δεσμόν here. The passage of Isaiah is quoted, Barnab. 3, Justin Apol. i. 37 (p. 77), Dial. 15 (p. 233), Iren. iv. 17. 3, Clem. Alex. Strom. ii. 18 (p. 470), Apost. Const. ii. 53, viii, 5, and seems to have been a very favourite citation in the early Church. In the original the 'bonds of wickedness' refer to the oppression of the weak, and apparently in a literal sense to the chains of slaves and of debtors. In the LXX however it may be a question whether σύνδεσμον is not inύμᾶς, μηδὲν κατ' ἐρίθειαν πράσσετε ἀλλὰ κατὰ χριστομαθίαν. ἐπεὶ ἤκουσά τινων λεγόντων ότι 'Εὰν μὴ ἐν tended to mean 'a conspiracy' (comp. ver. 9 σύνδεσμον καὶ χειροτονίαν), as it is used in Jer. xi. 9 and elsewhere in the LXX. In Apost. Const. ii. 53 έξακολούθει τῷ τοῦ Κυρίου νόμω Λύε πάντα σύνδεσμον άδικίας έπὶ σοὶ γὰρ έξουσίαν ό σωτήρ έθετο άφιέναι άμαρτίας κ.τ.λ., ib. viii. 5 λύειν δὲ πάντα σύνδεσμον κατά την έξουσίαν ην έδωκας τοις ἀποστόλοις, it is understood of the remission of sins (comp. Matt. xvi. 19, xviii. 18). There may or may not be an allusion to this passage of Isaiah here. In any case it seems to refer to the power of evil generally, as in the words of the collect 'though we be tied and bound with the chain of our sins, yet let the pitifulness of Thy great mercy loose us.' Hilgenfeld however refers it to the oppressive yoke of Judaism; Uhlhorn to the overbearingness of the heretical teachers. See also the note on Ephes. 19 όθεν ελύετο πασα μαγεία καὶ πᾶς δεσμός κ.τ.λ.

1. κατ' ἐρίθειαν] 'in a sectarian spirit.' From Phil. ii. 3 μηδὲν κατὰ ἐρίθειαν μηδὲ κατὰ κενοδοξίαν: see the note on § 1, where the other member of S. Paul's sentence appears. For the meaning of ἐρίθεια, 'partisanship,' 'factiousness,' see the note Galatians v. 20.

G. 3137, 3264, 3266, 3281, 3282, 3286, 3295, 3318, 3335, 3349, 3356, 3382, 3386, 3394, 3400. It signifies originally 'the government house,' 'the magistrates' office.' Hence it comes to mean 'the record-office'; and hence, like the English word 'archives,' it is used indifferently of the place where the documents are kept and the collection of documents themselves: nor is it always easy to separate the one meaning from the other. The word is naturalised in Chaldee (see Levy Lex. Chald. s. v. ארכיון) and in Syriac (see Payne Smith Thes. Syr. s. v. Ksik). meaning here is as follows. opponents of Ignatius refuse to defer to any modern writings, whether Gospels or Epistles, as a standard of truth; they will submit only to such documents as have been preserved in the archives of the Jews, or in other words, only to the Old

A also seems to have read τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, for it translates si in scripturis antiquis non laudatur (glorificatur) evangelium, non credimus ei.

Testament Scriptures. Thus the άρχεία and the εὐαγγέλιον are opposed as the Old Testament and the New, so that the antithesis is similar to that in [Clem. Rom.] ii. 14 τὰ βιβλία καὶ οἱ ἀπόστολοι. A wholly different interpretation however has not uncommonly been given to the passage, e.g. by Voss (apparently), Smith, and several later writers; τὰ άρχεία being explained as referring to the original autographs or authentic MSS of the Evangelical writings, with which is contrasted τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, the Gospel as written and preached in Ignatius' time. In other words his antagonists are represented as complaining that the Gospels had been tampered with; comp. Polyc. Phil. 7 δs αν μεθοδεύη τὰ λόγια τοῦ Κυρίου πρὸς τὰς ίδίας ἐπιθυμίας (quoted by Zahn I. v. A. p. 379), where however the words perhaps refer rather to misinterpretation than to corruption of our Lord's sayings. But this restriction of εὐαγγέλιον is unnatural; and altogether the interpretation is unsuited to the age and character of these Judaizing antagonists. Nor again is it easily reconcilable with γέγραπται.

There can be no doubt, I think, that $d\rho\chi\epsilon loss$ ought to be read here; as by Voss, Cotelier, Smith, Rothe (Anfänge p. 339), and others. For (I) The argument requires that the same form should stand in all the three places; and, if this be so, there can be no question which word should be preferred on external authority. For $d\rho\chi\epsilon la$ alone is read in the second and third places, while even in the first the weight of authority is in favour of ἀρχείοις rather than άρχαίοις. (2) While τὰ ἄθικτα ἀρχεῖα, 'the inviolable archives,' is an intelligible phrase, no very satisfactory meaning can be attached to τὰ ἄθικτα άρχαία. (3) It is more probable that the more usual word appaious should be substituted for the less usual apxeious than conversely, as indeed we find to have been done elsewhere. For the common substitution of apyaîa for apyeîa see Wyttenbach on Plut. Mor. p. 218 C. On the other hand Credner (Beiträge I. p. 15) reads ἀρχαίοις, ἀρχαΐα, ἀρχαΐα, consistently, and so Hefele (in his later editions), Dressel, Hilgenfeld (A. V. p. 236), and others.

Some of those who retain ἀρχαίοις take it as a masculine, 'the ancient writers' (comp. Matt. v. 21, 27, 33); and Markland even proposes at the second occurrence of the word to read ἀρχαῖοί ἐστιν Ἰησοῦς Χριστός, comparing the line quoted in Pliny Ep. iv. 27 'Unus Plinius est mihi priores'; but he does not say what he would do with the third passage τὰ ἄρικτα ἀρχεῖα. The view of Bull (Works VI. p. 208, ed. Burton), that ἀρχαῖοι signifies 'the old rabbis or doctors,' has nothing to recommend it

3. ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ κ.τ.λ.] The construction is, if I mistake not, 'Unless I find it (the point at issue) in the archives, I do not believe it (because it appears) in the Gospel.' The parallelism demands this. [This construction I find is supported by Hilgenfeld Zeitschr. f. Wissensch. Theol. XVII. p. 116; but he reads ἀρχαίοις for ἀρχείοις.] On the other hand the passage seems to be almost universally taken, 'Unless I find it (i.e. the Gospel) in the archives (or in the ancients), I do not believe in the Gospel,' with the very rare construction which occurs Mark 15 πιστεύετε ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ. third interpretation is adopted by Zahn (I. v. A. p. 378 sq, and ad loc.) after Holsten (in Dressel, p. 180), 'Unless I find it in the archives, that is, in the Gospel, I do not believe it'; but the Greek order and parallelism are strongly against this mode of breaking up the sentence; not to say that the apposition of the apreia with the Gospel is in itself an anachronism. Zahn takes the view that these objectors appeal to the original documents of the New Testament, as evidence for the true Gospel.

1. Γέγραπται] i.e. 'in the Old Testament Scriptures,' as Ephes. 5, Magn. 12, according to the common use of γέγραπται in the N. T.; comp. Clem. Rom. 4, 14, 17, 29, 36, etc. Though it is not impossible that Ignatius might have applied γέγραπται to some Evangelical or Apostolical writings (as e.g. Barnab. 4; comp. Polyc. Phil. 12), yet quite independently of the requirements of the context the word would refer much more naturally to the Old Testament. Ignatius meets these objectors on their own ground; they ask for proof from 'the charters' $(\tau o \hat{i} s \ d \rho \chi \epsilon lois)$, and he points to the passages in the Old Testament.

What the points at issue were, the following words ὁ σταυρὸς κ.τ.λ. will suggest. The old question $\epsilon i \pi a \theta \eta$ τὸς ὁ Χριστός (Acts xxvi. 23; comp. Justin. Dial. 36, 76, pp. 254, 302) had still to be discussed. The Cross was still a stumbling-block to these Docetic Judaizers, as it had been in the Apostolic age to the Jews, though from a different point of view. They denied the reality of Christ's birth and death and resurrection; see the note on Trall. 9. It was therefore necessary to show from the Hebrew Scriptures, not only (as in the Apostolic age) ὅτι τὸν Χριστὸν ἔδει παθεῖν καὶ ἀναστήναι ἐκ νεκρών (Acts xvii, 3; comp. Luke xxiv. 26, 46, Acts iii. 18), but also that He 'must needs' have been born in the flesh.

Cels. i. 24, 44, iv. 21, v. 1, vi. 1, viii. 16, 65; and τὰ προκείμενα Joseph. Ant. xvi. 2. 5. Many other interpretations have been adopted; e.g. by Pearson 'It stands already written' (comparing Athen. xiv. p. 646 πρόκειται τὸ μαρτύριον), and so Bull (in the passage cited below) as an alternative, as also several later writers; by Bull (Works VI. p. 208) 'It is rejected by us'; by Credner (Beiträge I. p. 16) 'It is obvious,' 'So ist die Sache ausgemacht,' and so other writers; by Hug (Introd. to the N. T. I. p. 105) 'This is to be preferred' (comparing Sext. Emp. Pyrrh. i. 8); together with others which it is unnecessary to give. All these fail, either as forcing a meaning on πρόκειται which is alien to it, or as yielding a sense which is unsuited to the context. The emendation of Voss, who inserts a negative, ὅτι οὐ πρόκειται, and the conjecture of Pearson (see Smith p. 84), who substitutes οὖτι for ὅτι, may likewise be dismissed, notwithstanding the great names of their authors. They do not gain any support from the language of the interpolator, ού γάρ πρόκειται (ν. 1. προκρίνεται) τὰ ἀρχεῖα τοῦ πνεύματος, but just the contrary; for this language is put by him into the mouth, not of the objectors, but of Ignatius himself. It is clear therefore that the interpolator read in his text πρόκειται, which he interpreted, 'The archives (i.e. the Old Testament Scriptures) are to be preferred,' and he makes Ignatius answer the objectors accordingly.

èμοὶ δὲ κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'Though I have condescended to argue, though I have accepted their appeal to the Old Testament Scriptures, yet to myself such an appeal is superfluous: Jesus Christ is the archives; He contains in Himself the documentary proofs of His person and mission': comp. But the Gospel has the pre-eminence in that it sets forth the advent, the passion, the resurrection of Jesus Christ. The prophets indeed fore-Καλοὶ καὶ κ.τ.λ.] The contrast here is between the Levitical priesthood, and the great High-priest of the Gospel, i.e. between the old and new dispensations. This is recognised by most commentators, and indeed is so directly demanded by the context, that it is strange any other interpretation should have been maintained. The interpolator however has altered the passage, so as to make a reference to the three orders of the Christian ministry, Kaλοὶ μὲν οἱ ἱερεῖς καὶ οἱ τοῦ λόγου διάκονοι, κρείσσων δε ό άρχιερεύς κ.τ.λ, interpolating several words so as to disconnect αὐτὸς ὧν θύρα from ἀρχιερεύς, which he evidently intends to be understood of the Christian bishop. This has misled Cotelier, who interprets lepels of the Christian presbyters, and so too others (e.g. Greenwood Cathedra Petri I. p. 73). Rothe (Anfänge I. p. 732) applies it to the Christians of Philadelphia generally, as the lepels of the new dispensation (comp. Rev. i. 6, v. 10,

But what form of antagonism has the writer in view, when he says $\kappa a \lambda o i \epsilon \rho \epsilon \hat{i} \hat{s}$? Is the statement aggressive, as against those who disparaged the Old Testament dispensation? or concessive, as towards those who rated it too highly? Were these antagonists Antijudaic or Judaic? The latter view alone seems consistent with the sequence of the writer's thoughts. There is no indication that the antagonists contemplated here are different from those mentioned in the previous context, who were plainly Judaizers; and moreover the stress of the sentence itself is not on the eminence of the Aaronic priesthood, but on the superior eminence of the High-priest and the Gospel.

2. ό πεπιστευμένος κ.τ.λ.] The reference is to the special privilege of the high-priest, who alone was allowed to enter into the holy of holies, as in Heb. ix. 7—12, x. 19 sq. This coincidence, combined with those noticed in the preceding note, shows, I think, that Ignatius must have had the Epistle to the Hebrews in his mind.

os κ.τ.λ.] 'for He alone etc.' This clause explains the symbolism of being entrusted with the holy of holies.' The furniture of the adytum, the ark of the covenant, the pot of manna, the rod of Aaron, the tables of the law, etc, which were committed to the keeping of the highpriest alone, represent the secret counsels of God; comp. Heb. ix. 3 sq.

3. αὐτὸς ὧν θύρα] 'He not only enters into the presence-chamber of the Father, but is Himself the door'; doubtless an allusion to John x. 9 έγω είμι ή θύρα δι' έμοῦ έάν τις εἰσέλθη, σωθήσεται. For similar references to Christ, as the door or gate, see the note on Clem. Rom. 48. See especially the allegory in Hermas Sim. ix. 12. It is worth observing also that this image occurs in the message to the Philadelphian Church, Rev. iii. 8 ίδου δέδωκα ένώπιον σου θύραν άνεωγμένην κ.τ.λ.

4. 'Aβραὰμ κ.τ.λ.' For the manner in which Ignatius regards the privileges of the Gospel as extended to the patriarchs, etc, see the notes on § 5 above, and esp. on Magn. 9. In the allegory of Hermas those stones which represent the patriarchs and prophets, not less than those which represent the apostles, are carried through the gate for the building of the tower, i.e. the Church; Sim. ix. 4, 15.

6. πάντα ταῦτα κ.τ.λ.] 'All these elements, whether they belong to the old dispensation or to the new, are brought to the unity of God,' i.e. all are united together in the same God through the same Christ; § 5 above, πιστεύσαντες έσώθησαν έν ένότητι Ίησοῦ Χριστοῦ, where the idea is the same. For the expression ένότης $\Theta \epsilon o \hat{v}$ see the note on § 8.

7. την παρουσίαν] The reference is obviously to the first advent, the incarnation, though the word, when not specially defined, generally refers to the second advent. The word does not occur in this sense in the N. T., except possibly in 2 Pet. i. 16. See for instances elsewhere, Test. Duod. Patr. Levi 8, Juda 22, Clem. Hom. ii. 52, Clem. Recogn. i. 59 'praesentia et adventus Christi,' Iren. iv. 7. 1, iv. 10. 1 sq, Clem. Alex. Early writers are careful to distinguish the two παρουσίαι of Christ; e.g. Justin Apol. i. 52 (p. 87), Dial. 14 (p. 232), 32 (p. 249); comp. ib. 49 (p. 268), 120 (p. 350); Iren. iv. 33. I sq; Can. - I. $\tau \dot{o}$ πάθος κ.τ.λ.] For the absence of conjunctions comp. Polyc. 6 τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ, πρεσβυτέροις, διακόvois. The καὶ before την ἀνάστασιν in the Greek MS of Ignatius is almost certainly an interpolation. It produces an almost impossible Greek sentence, and demands another kai before $\tau \delta \pi d\theta os$: see the notes on Trall. 7, 12. Whether we should read αὐτοῦ or αὐτὴν, is a less easy question; probably the former, both because it is better supported, and because αὐτὴν τὴν ἀνάστασιν would emphasize the Resurrection as compared with the Passion, in a way which the language of Ignatius elsewhere does not justify, the chief stress being commonly laid on the Passion.
- 2. κατήγγειλαν εἰs] For this construction see the note on § 5.

3. ἀπάρτισμα ἀφθαρσίας 'the completed work of immortality,' as the law was the first stage; where ἀπάρτισμα corresponds to τετελείωται in the parallel passage, Smyrn. 7 quoted above. In I Kings vii. 9 (Symm.) ἀπαρτίσματα are the coping stones, the tops of the walls, commonly called θριγκοί. The word differs from ἀπαρτισμός (Luke xiv. 28), as the result from the operation. By ἀφθαρσία is meant the indestructible, eternal life, which is the object of the Gospel; comp. Polyc. 2 τὸ δὲ θέμα ἀφθαρσία καὶ ζωὴ αἰώνιος, [Clem. Rom.] ii. 7 τον της άφθαρσίας άγωνα. The word however involves the idea of moral incorruption, which is inseparable from eternal life; see the notes on Ephes. 17, Magn. 6.

5. Ἐπειδή κ.τ.λ.] When Ignatius wrote his four letters from Smyrna, he was still anxious about the Church of Antioch, and desired the prayers of his correspondents for its welfare; see the note on Ephes. 21. By the time that he arrived at Troas however, or soon after, he had heard that the persecution was ended, and in the three letters written from thence he charges his readers to send delegates to congratulate this church on the restoration of peace; comp. Smyrn. 11, Polyc. 7. The words κατά τὴν κ.τ.λ. are connected, not with ἀπηγγέλη, but with εἰρηνεύειν.

6. τὰ σπλάγχνα] i.e. 'your Christian compassion and love'; comp. Philippians i. 8 ἐπιποθῶ πάντας ὑμᾶς ἐν σπλάγχνοις Χριστοῦ 'Ιησοῦ (with the note).

7. τῆς Συρίας] As in Smyrn. II, Polyc. 7. So it is specified also Clem. Hom. xi. 36, xii. I: see also e.g. C. I. G. 3425. The addition was not unneeded, though this was the principal place bearing the name; for Appian (Syr. 57) relates that Seleucus founded (ἔκτισεν) sixteen cities which he called ἀντιόχεια after his father, and Steph. Byz.

s. v. enumerates fourteen bearing the name. Ignatius however inserts such specifications where there was not this reason; see e.g. Ephes. inscr. έν Ἐφέσω της 'Ασίας, Smyrn. inscr. έν Σμύρνη της 'Aσίας, with the notes. This Antioch, the great Antioch, was not unfrequently called $\hat{\eta}$ $\hat{\epsilon}\pi \hat{\iota}$ Δάφνη (e.g. Strabo xv. 1. p. 719, xvi. 2. p. 749, Joseph. Ant. xvii. 2. 1) or ή ἐπὶ Δάφνης (Plut. Vit. Lucull. 21; comp. Plin. N. H. v. 18 'Epidaphnes cognominata') or ή πρὸς Δάφνην (Hierocl. Synecd. 711) or ή πρὸς $\Delta \acute{a}$ φνη (Mionnet v. p. 36 sq) or $\acute{\eta}$ περὶ Δάφνην (Steph. Byz. s. vv. "Ακρα, $M\epsilon\rho\delta\eta$); but the associations connected with the grove of Daphne would not recommend this designation to Ignatius; see I. p. 41 sq.

8. πρέπου ἐστὶν κ.τ.λ.] See the similar directions to the Smyrnæans in Smyrn. 11, Polyc. 7.

10. ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ κ.τ.λ.] 'when they are assembled together' in church; comp. § 6, and Ephes. 5, 13. The Latin translator has merely adopted the common Vulgate rendering of ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτό in idipsum, but commentators (e.g. Smith, Jacobson) have misapprehended it.

The first mode of connexion is recommended by the subsequent clause $\kappa a \hat{\iota} \hat{\upsilon} \mu \epsilon \hat{\imath} s \delta \sigma \hat{\xi} a \sigma \theta \hat{\eta} \sigma \epsilon \sigma \theta \epsilon$. The third is favoured by the proximity, and probably this consideration should prevail. The second has nothing to recommend it.

καταξιωθήσεται] See the note on Ephes. 20.

2. καὶ ὑμεῖς κ.τ.λ.] Perhaps to be connected closely with δοξάσαι τὸ ὄνομα, the intervening words μακάριος ...διακονίας being parenthetical; comp. e.g. § 11 εἰς λόγον τιμῆς τιμήσει αὐτοὺς ὁ Κύριος κ.τ.λ.

The Lord Jesus Christ in whom they trust will do honour to them. Farewell in Christ Jesus, our common hope.'

6. Περὶ δὲ κ.τ.λ.] The persons here mentioned had followed in the track of Ignatius. They would therefore pass through Philadelphia, as he had done (see § 1, 6, 7, with the notes). From Philadelphia they went to Smyrna, where also they were hospitably entertained (Smyrn. 10). It appears from the language of Ignatius to the Smyrnæans, that he had already left Smyrna, before they arrived. They therefore followed him to Troas. They were doubtless the bearers of the good news that the persecution at Antioch had ceased. They would probably also accompany him further; • and, if so, they would be those companions of Ignatius about whom Polycarp enquires, Phil. § 13 'et de

In the opinion of those critics who maintain the genuineness of the Antiochene Martyrology, they were also the eye-witnesses and narrators of the saint's voyage and sufferings (§ 7 τούτων αὐτόπται γενόμενοι). So for instance Ussher (App. Ign. p. 54), Ruinart (Act. Sinc. Mart. p. 55, Ratisbon. 1859), Smith (p. 42, who says, 'vix a quoquam dubitari aut potest aut debet'), and many later writers. The first person however does not commence, as on this hypothesis it ought, at Troas, but off Puteoli (§ 5 nueîs); see Zahn I. v. A. p. 42.

τοῦ διακόνου κ.τ.λ.] The Pseudo-Ignatius makes him a deacon of Tarsus, Tars. 10 ἀσπάζεται ὑμᾶς Φίλων ὁ διάκονος ὑμῶν (a letter purporting to be written from Philippi). In the genuine Ignatius, Smyrn. 13, he sends a salutation to the Smyrnæans.

ἀνδρὸς μεμαρτυρημένου] The same phrase is used of the Seven in Acts vi. 3. On the meaning of μεμαρτυρημένου see the note on Ephes.

ἐν λόγφ Θεοῦ] i.e. 'the preaching of the Gospel,' as e.g. Acts vi. 2 καταλείψαντας τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, Col. i. 25 πληρῶσαι τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, Rev. i. 9 διὰ τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ. In the parallel passage Smyrn. 10 εἰς λόγον Θεοῦ the expression has a wholly different sense. Zahn however treats the two phrases as equivalent and compares Phil. iv. 17, etc.

ύπηρετεί] By doing the work of a deacon or attendant; comp. Acts xiii. 5 είχον δὲ καὶ Ἰωάννην ὑπηρέτην.

8. 'Paίω I have ventured on this correction of the reading for two reasons. (1) I have not succeeded in finding the proper name Rheus elsewhere, whereas Raius (Raiius, Rahius) occurs several times Corp. Inscr. Lat. II. 1129, 497548, III. 6183, v. 4078, and the feminine Raia, C. I. L. II. 3499, III. 2400, 2502, V. 973; see also the indices to Vols. IX. X. (2) This form explains both the readings of the MSS. By a common itacism it would become 'Pέω, as in the MS of Ignatius; by a slight corruption, raiwi for paiwi, it would produce the Γαΐφ of the interpolator's text. As Raius is a nomen, and Agathopus a cognomen, the combination is correct. In a Greek inscription at Palmyra (C. I. G. 4482) the name 'Paaios occurs.

TROPHIMI. POLYCARPI. LIBERTORVM. As an early Christian name it appears in the Roman catacombs (de Rossi Roma Sotterranea II. p. 47 sq, III. p. 286 (?); comp. Bull. di Arch. Crist. Gennaro 1863), being sometimes confused with Agapetus. It is also used as the name of a confessor in the Ancient Syrian Martyrology, published by Wright in the Journal of Sacred Literature, Jan. 1866 (from a MS itself dated A.D. 412), under Nisan (April) 4th. For an illustration of the meaning of Agathopus, comp. August. Ep. 17 ad Max. (II. p. 22) 'Namphanio [a Punic proper name] quid aliud significat quam boni pedis hominem, i.e. cujus adventus afferat aliquid felicitatis, sicut solemus dicere, secundo pede introisse, cujus introitum prosperitas aliqua consecuta sit?', quoted by Pearson on Smyrn. 10 (but he wrongly calls it an epistle of Maximus to Augustine). The meaning will account for the frequency of the name, as one 'fausti ominis.' Clement of Alexandria, Strom. iii. 7 (p. 538), quotes a letter of the heretic Valentinus to one Agathopus. Voss (on Smyrn. 10) expressed a belief that he is the same person with our Agathopus, and defended his opinion in his answer to Blondel (see Pearson V. I. p. 645 sq, ed. Churton). This identification is likewise maintained by Pearson (on Smyrn. 10) and by Grabe (Spic. Patr. II. p. 53). Chronologically it is quite defensible, since Agathopus is apparently a young man now, and Valentinus flourished within some 20 or 30 years of Ignatius' death. Moreover it would help to explain those anticipations of Valentinian phraseology which we find in Ignatius (see e.g. Ephes. inscr., Magn. 8, Trall. 1, Rom. inscr., 6, 7); for it would show that Ignatius moved in the same circles. The identification therefore seems far from improbable. But, the name being so common, too much stress must not be laid on it.

In the interpolator's text this person is divided into two, 'Gaius (for Rhaius) and Agathopus,' both here and in Smyrn. 10. There can be little doubt however that this is a mistake; for (1) The addition $\frac{\partial v}{\partial \rho}$

δὲ ἀτιμάσαντες αὐτοὺς λυτρωθείησαν ἐν τῆ χάριτι Ἰη-5 σοῦ Χριστοῦ. ᾿Ασπάζεται ὑμᾶς ἡ ἀγάπη τῶν ἀδελφῶν τῶν ἐν Τρωάδι· ὅθεν καὶ γράφω ὑμῖν διὰ Βούρρου πεμ-

Greek reading underlying this authority would be $\beta o \psi \rho \gamma o v$. This explanation might pass here and in Smyrn. 12, where also g has $\beta o \psi \rho \gamma o v$; but it fails to account for the reading of A in Ephes. 2, where there is no various reading $\beta o \psi \rho \gamma o v$ in the Greek, and where even g has the form in $\rho \rho$ (though with some variations in the vowels). The true explanation of the Armenian reading in all the three passages is that which Petermann himself gives on Ephes. 2; that it arises from a confusion of the Syriac letters \mathbf{x} and $\mathbf{\dot{\gamma}}$, d and r. The substitution of $\beta o \psi \rho \gamma o v$ for $\beta o \psi \rho \rho o v$, here and in Smyrn. 12, has a parallel in the substitution of $\gamma a \psi v$ for $\gamma a \psi v$ just above.

έκλεκτώ κ.τ.λ. shows that a single person is mentioned; (2) In the spurious Ignatian Epistles (Ant. 13, Philipp. 15; comp. Tars. 10) only two persons are represented as being with Ignatius on this journey, Φίλων καὶ 'Αγαθόπους οἱ διάκονοι. As these false letters emanated from the same author who interpolated the genuine letters, he is inconsistent with himself, unless indeed the kal, here and in Smyrn. 10, crept into his text at a later date. It would appear from Smyrn. 10 (see the note), that Agathopus, like Philo, was a deacon, for the two are there called διάκονοι Χριστοῦ (the word probably being used in its official sense). The Pseudo-Ignatius (ll. cc.) is explicit on this point.

TO THE SMYRNÆANS.

TO THE SMYRNÆANS.

I would not be possible, even if it were advisable, to discuss the notices of Smyrna and the Smyrnæan Church with the same fulness which has been aimed at in the introductions to previous epistles. The history of a city which struck its roots into the most remote antiquity, which claimed Theseus or Tantalus or an Amazon as its founder and Homer as its most illustrious child, which has had a continuous authentic history of twenty-five centuries, and which is at this day the most flourishing and populous centre of commerce in the Levant, must be too well known to require, and too copious to admit, the scale of treatment which seemed suited to Magnesia and Tralles and Philadelphia. Such details moreover, as are necessary to understand the position of Christianity in Smyrna at this time, have found their proper place in the notice of Polycarp.

This letter, like the preceding one to the Philadelphians, was written from Troas, and probably about the same time. The personnel therefore is the same. Burrhus is again his amanuensis (§ 12). Philo and Rhaius Agathopus are again mentioned as having received a kindly welcome from his correspondents (§ 10). Directions are again given for the dispatch of a representative to congratulate the Church of Antioch (§ 11). But at Smyrna he had made a longer halt, and apparently had established more affectionate relations, than at Philadelphia. Hence he sends special salutations to certain classes of persons, and to certain individuals by name (§ 13).

The main purport of the letter is the condemnation of the same Judaic Docetism which he assails elsewhere (see pp. 16, 103, 147 sq, 242 sq). But whereas in the Philadelphian letter it is attacked chiefly from its Judaic side, here on the contrary he denounces mainly its Docetism (§§ 1—6). Yet at the same time its Judaism appears incidentally from an allusion to the tuition which these heretics had received from the Law and the Prophets (§ 5). Their separatism and their contentiousness are dwelt upon more fully here than in his other letters, and the duty of unity is strenuously enforced in consequence.

'IGNATIUS to the CHURCH OF SMYRNA, which abounds in faith and love and lacks no spiritual grace; abundant greeting.'

'I give glory to Christ who has bestowed so much wisdom on you, that ye fully believe in the blood of Christ and are convinced of His incarnation, His baptism, His passion. The cross was the standard round which Jew and Gentile alike were summoned to rally (§ 1). These things were realities, not phantoms, as some persons, phantom-like themselves, imagine (§ 2). The Lord appeared to Peter and to the disciples after the resurrection. They handled Him. He ate and drank with them (§ 3). These things I say to warn you. If the life and death of Christ were unreal, then my sufferings also are unreal (§4). These heretics have failed to learn from either the Law or the Gospel. It is a mockery to praise me, and yet to deny my Lord. I would gladly forget the existence of these men (§ 5). Even angels will be condemned, if they believe not in the blood of Christ. Beware of these heretics. They abstain from deeds of love (§ 6). They hold aloof from the eucharist of the Church. Yet love only is life. Shun them therefore, and avoid dissension (§ 7). Obey your bishop. The bishop is the centre of the individual congregation, as Christ is the centre of the universal Church. The bishop is the fountain-head of all authority (§ 8). Be wise in time. May God requite you for your kindness to me (§ 9). I thank you also for your welcome of Philo and Agathopus. God will reward you (§ 10). The Church of Antioch at length has peace. Send ye a delegate to rejoice with them. This will be a worthy work; and it is within your reach (§ 11).'

'Salutations from Troas. Burrhus, your representative, is my amanuensis. I salute your bishop, your clergy, your laity (§ 12). I salute the families of the brethren, and the holy widows. Philo sends salutations. I salute Gavia and Alce and Daphnus. Farewell (§ 13).'

τον Θεον τον κ.τ.λ.] 'the God who thus made you wise.' For reasons which are explained in the note on Ephes. inscr., $\tau \delta \nu \Theta \epsilon \delta \nu$ must be closely connected with the words following. Ignatius does not appear ever to call Jesus Christ God absolutely. Ephraim of Antioch, quoted by Photius (Bibl. 229, p. 258), refers to this passage, καὶ ὁ θεοφόρος δὲ 'Ιγνάτιος καὶ μάρτυς, Σμυρναίοις ἐπιστέλλων, δμοίως κέχρηται τῷ ἄρθρῷ (i.e. uses the article with $\Theta\epsilon\delta s$, when speaking of our Lord); but the inference to be drawn from the presence of the article is somewhat modified by the additional words τον ούτως κ.τ.λ. Though the words τον Θεὸν are wanting in two important authorities, they seem to be genuine, as they are appealed to by two fathers. The omission would be easy owing to the repetition of similar letters TONONTONOΥΤΩΣ.

θέλημα] 'the Divine will'; see the note on Ephes. 20. Again δύναμιν is used absolutely, as in Rom. i. 3 just quoted. The addition of Θεοῦ in the common texts is a transcriber's expedient, owing to ignorance of this absolute use of $\theta \in \lambda \eta \mu a$. Theodoret strangely substitutes θεότητα for θέ- $\lambda \eta \mu a$. This reading again may be due in part to the same ignorance. The Armenian translator likewise has substituted another word. See Justin Dial. 61 (p. 284) ἀπὸ τοῦ πατρός θελήσει γεγεννήσθαι compared with ib. 128 (p. 358) γεγεννησθαι ἀπὸ τοῦ πατρὸς δυνάμει καὶ βουλή αὐτοῦ, Tatian ad Graec. 5 θελήματι δὲ τῆς άπλότητος αὐτοῦ προπηδậ λόγος compared with ib. ὁ λόγος προελθών έκ της του πατρός δυνάμεως, passages quoted by Pearson.

3. γεγεννημένον] So we must certainly read with Theodoret (as printed by Schulze, but Sirmond has γεγενημένον), as e.g. Justin Dial. 66 (p. 291) ἐκ παρθένου γεγέννηται:

comp. Ephes. 18 ôs ἐγεννήθη καὶ ἐβαπτίσθη, Trall. 9 ôs ἀληθῶs ἐγεννήθη. This word should probably be read also in Hippol. Haer. vii. 38, where the MS has τοῦτον δὲ οὖκ ἐκ παρθένου γεγενῆσθαι. For the meaning of γεγεννημένον, 'born,' see the note on Ephes. 18.

4. [να πληρωθη κ.τ.λ.] According to Matt. iii. 15 ούτω γὰρ πρέπον ἐστὶν ήμιν πληρώσαι πάσαν δικαιοσύνην. Νοthing is said respecting the motive of Jesus in coming to baptism in the other Canonical Gospels. On the other hand the Gospel of the Hebrews, which Ignatius is supposed to quote below § 3, gave an account of the matter which is inconsistent with this motive; Hieron. c. Pelag. iii. 2 (II. p. 782) 'In Evangelio juxta Hebraeos ... narrat historia; Ecce mater Domini et fratres eius dicebant ei; Ioannes Baptista baptizat in remissionem peccatorum; eamus et baptizemur ab eo. Dixit autem eis: Quid peccavi ut vadam et baptizer ab eo? nisi forte hoc ipsum quod dixi ignorantia est.' In the Praedicatio Pauli also it is said that Christ 'ad accipiendum Ioannis baptisma paene invitum a matre sua Maria esse compulsum,' Retract. de Bapt. 17 (Cyprian. Op. 111. p. 90, ed. Hartel).

of this specification see the note on Magn. 11. Here the date is still further defined by the mention of Herod.

'Ηρώδου τετράρχου The part taken by Herod is mentioned by S. Luke alone in the Canonical writings; Luke xxiii. 7-12, 15, Acts iv. 27. This Herod Antipas is called 'tetrarch' also in Matt. xiv. I, Luke iii. 19, ix. 7, Acts xiii. 1, to distinguish him from his predecessor Herod the Great who is o βασιλεύς (Matt. ii. I, comp. Luke i. 5), and from his successor Herod Agrippa who is also ό βασιλεύς (Acts xii. I). The absence of the definite article however before the word obliges us to translate $\hat{\epsilon}\pi\hat{\iota}$... 'Ηρώδου τετράρχου 'before Herod as tetrarch,' or more probably 'when Herod was tetrarch' (=τετραρχοῦντος ... Ἡρώδου Luke iii. I).

6. ἀφ' οὖ καρποῦ] 'from which fruit'; comp. Tertull. adv. Jud. 13 'Et lignum, inquit, attulit fructum suum [Joel ii. 22], non illud lignum in paradiso quod mortem dedit protoplastis, sed lignum passionis Christi, unde vita pendens etc.' The Cross is regarded as a tree (ξύλον); comp. Trall. 11 ἐφαίνοντο ᾶν κλάδοι τοῦ σταυροῦ καὶ ἦν బν ὁ καρπὸς αὐτῶν ἄφθαρτος. The symbolism of the tree of life planted in paradise, as referring to the Cross of Christ, dates from a very early time; Justin Martyr Dial. 86 (p. 312 D), Clem. Alex. Strom. v. 11 (p.

689 sq) ἀλληγορών ὁ Μωϋσης ξύλον ζωης ωνόμασεν έν τῷ παραδείσω πεφυτευμένον... έν τούτω ὁ Λόγος ἤνθησέν τε καὶ ἐκαρποφόρησεν σὰρξ γενόμενος καὶ τούς γευσαμένους της χρηστότητος αὐτου έζωοποίησεν, έπεὶ μηδε άνευ του ξύλου είς γνωσιν ήμιν άφικται. This application of the tree of life would probably be made by Papias; comp. Anastas. Sinait. Hexaem. vii. (p. 961 Migne), and see Contemporary Review, October 1875, p. 844. Similarly Melito saw a reference to the Cross in the tree of Gen. xxii. 13, Fragm. 12 (p. 418 Otto) φυτὸν Σαβέκ, τουτέστιν ἀφέσεως, ἐκάλεσε τὸν σταυρόν, and Clem. Alex. (Strom. l. c. p. 690) so applies also the ξύλον ζωης (which however he quotes δένδρον άθανασίας) in Prov. iii. 18. If the reading kap- $\pi \circ \hat{v}$ be correct, Christ Himself seems to be regarded as the fruit hanging upon the tree; and ἀφ' οῦ καρποῦ is further explained by ἀπὸ τοῦ θεομακαρίστου αὐτοῦ πάθους. We may be said to spring from that fruit, inasmuch as the taste of it gives us life; see Clem. Alex. l. c. The Latin translator renders ἀφ' οὖ καρποῦ α cujus fructu, which Pearson explains 'ligni quod hic subintelligitur,' taking ξύλου to be the antecedent of ου. But it is more naturally rendered a quo fructu. Zahn takes the same construction as Pearson, but makes Χριστοῦ the antecedent of οδ. The clause aφ' ου ... πάθους must be taken

1. θ εομακαρίστον] Comp. Polyc. 7. The word occurs also Method. de Sym. et Ann. 5 (p. 107 Jahn) μακαρία σὺ ἐν γενεαῖς γυναικῶν, θεομακάριστε. The other form θεομακαρίτον is worse supported and is exposed to a double objection, as a ἄπαξ λεγόμενον, and as being somewhat out of place here (since μακαρίτης is used of the blessed dead). Zahn retains it and endeavours to justify it as a transference from the dead to the death.

ἄρη σύσσημον] 'raise an ensign aloft.' The reference is to Isaiah xlix. 22, lxii. 10 (comp. v. 26), where the LXX has αἴρειν σύσσημον to describe the raising of Jehovah's standard in Jerusalem, about which (in the prophet's image) men should rally from all parts of the earth. Ignatius sees the fulfilment of this in Christ's resurrection. Hence the words εἴτε εν Ἰονδαίοις εἴτε εν εθνεσιν, which follow; for the gathering of the Gentiles is a prominent feature in the context of the evangelical prophet. Jerome says on Is. v. 26 (Op. IV. p. 88), 'Legi in cujusdam commentariis, hoc quod dicitur Levabit signum in nationibus procul et sibilabit ad eum de finibus terrae de vocatione gentium debere intelligi, quod elevato signo crucis et depositis oneribus peccatorum velociter venerint atque crediderint.' The commentator to whom Jerome alludes is probably, as Pearson suggests, Origen. There is nothing of the kind in Eusebius. But the idea seems to have been present to the mind of Lactantius Div. Inst. iv. 26. There is perhaps a reference to this same prophetic image of a standard in John xii. 32 κάγω έὰν ύψωθω έκ της γης, πάντας έλκύσω πρός έμαυτόν. The expression αἴρειν σύσσημον occurs also Diod. Sic. xi. 22, 61, xx. 51. The word σύσσημον, which signifies properly 'a concerted signal' (Diod. Sic. xx. 51 τὸ συγκείμενον... σύσσημον, comp. Mark xiv. 44), was used even by Menander, who however is roundly scolded by Phrynichus for the solecism (ed. Lobeck, p. 418). There is mention of the 'vexillum crucis' in Fragm. 5 of the passages ascribed to Polycarp by Victor of Capua. The word τρόπαιον is frequently used by Athanasius of the cross or crucifixion of Christ (see the note on the Festal Letters p. 97, Oxf. transl.), as well as by later fathers. This image would gain currency through the Labarum of Constantine; but it appears before his time, as the passage of Methodius p. 103 (referred to by Zahn) shows, and indeed might be suggested by Col. ii. 15. The conjectural reading $\sigma \dot{v} \sigma - \sigma \omega \mu o \nu$, which is adopted by Bunsen, destroys the point of the expression.

3. πιστούς] The Docetæ, who denied the reality of the Cross, did not fall under this category; see the

έν ένὶ σώματι Doubtless a reminiscence of S. Paul's teaching, Ephes. 16 ἀποκαταλλάξη τοὺς ἀμφοτέρους έν ένὶ σώματι τῷ Θεῷ διὰ τοῦ σταυροῦ (where also the context, ver. 18, contains a reference to the evangelical prophet, Is. lvii. 19), iii. 6 είναι τὰ ἔθνη...σύσσωμα, iv. 4 έν σώμα καὶ ἐν πνεῦμα, etc.; comp. Hermas Sim. ix. 18 έσται ή έκκλησία τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν σῶμα. And for the exact expression see Col. i. 18 τοῦ σώματος της έκκλησίας (comp. ver. 24, Ephes. i. 23, iv. 12 sq, v. 23, 29, 30). The corresponding part of the image, $\mu \epsilon \lambda \eta$, appears in Ephes. 4, Trall. 11. Pearson writes on ένὶ σώματι, 'Hic usus erat signi militaris, ut colligerent se et in unum congregarent, si quando erant dispersi aut dissipati.'

II. 'He thus suffered for our salvation. His passion and His resurrection were realities, and not phantoms, as some think. To such persons it shall happen according to their thoughts; for they are unreal and visionary.'

6. ἀνέστησεν ἐαυτόν] This is different from the language of the N. T., where Christ is always said to be raised by the Father. Accordingly the interpolator has substituted ἀνέστη, as Jacobson points out. Below, § 7, the doctrine is stated in the scriptural way, σάρκα εἶναι τοῦ σωτῆρος... ἡν τῆ χρηστότητι ὁ πατὴρ ἤγειρεν.

7. ἄπιστοι] He calls the Docetæ unbelievers, because they denied the reality of Christ's humanity; comp. also below § 5 τὰ δὲ ὀνόματα αὐτῶν ὄντα ἄπιστα κ.τ.λ. See the note on Trall. 10, where they are likewise so called.

8. αὐτοὶ τὸ δοκεῖν κ.τ.λ.] See the note on Trall. 10, where similar language is used.

9. καὶ συμβήσεται] 'so shall it happen.' For instances of καὶ in the apodosis answering to ώς (καθώς) in the protasis comp. e.g. Gal. i. 9, Phil. i. 20, I Joh. ii. 18, and see Winer § liii. p. 548 sq, A. Buttmann p. 311.

ἀσωμάτοις κ.τ.λ.] 'being unsubstantial and phantom-like,' in their opinions: comp. Hieron. Comm. in Isai. xviii. (Op. IV. p. 774) 'nec daemonia subsistant, quia jam a Deo qui vere est exciderunt, nec sectae haereticorum, quae nullam retinent veritatem, sed in umbrarum similitudinem transeunt et intereunt,' where there is a similar comparison. For δαιμονικοίς see the note on δαιμόνιον § 3. In ἀσωμάτοις there is possibly an allusion to the σώμα της ἐκκλησίας (at the end of § 1) in which they have no part. The two adjectives are chosen with a view to the δαιμόνιον ἀσώματον in the narrative which follows. The word δαιμονικός occurs in Athenag. Suppl. 25, Clem. Alex. Strom. vi. 12 (p. 789), as well as in Plutarch. Pearson distinguishes between δαιμονικός (=δαιμονιώδης) and δαιμονιακός (=δαιμονιαζόμενος). The distinction is fundamentally just, but the one sense frequently runs into the other.

III. 'I myself am convinced that He was still incarnate even after the resurrection. He told Peter and his companions to handle Him and assure themselves that He was not a phantom. They did so. They were convinced, and in this conviction they despised death. Nay, He even ate and drank with them in the flesh, though in the spirit He was one with the Father.'

I. καὶ μετὰ κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'not only during His natural life, of which they deny the reality, but even after His resurrection.' See the irony of Tertull. de Carn. Chr. 5 'Fuit itaque phantasma etiam post resurrectionem, cum manus et pedes suos discipulis inspiciendos offert, Aspicite, dicens, etc.'

έν σαρκὶ κ.τ.λ.] 'I know and believe Him to be in the flesh.' For οἶδα καὶ πιστεύω comp. Rom. xiv. 14 οἶδα καὶ πέπεισμαι. Jerome (Vir. Ill. 16), clearly deriving the quotation at second hand from Eusebius and referring the passage by inadvertence to the Epistle to Polycarp, translates 'in carne eum vidi et credo quia sit,' as if it were eldov, and evidently supposes that Ignatius had seen our Lord in the flesh. Similarly the Latin Version here 'in carne ipsum vidi et credo existentem.' This interpretation would be encouraged by the story, built upon a misinterpretation of Θεοφόρος (see on Ephes. inscr.), that he was the child whom our Lord blessed. Chrysostom distinctly states the opposite, Hom. in S. Ign. 4 (II. p. 599) τον οὐδὲ έωρακότα αὐτὸν οὐδὲ ἀπολελαυκότα αὐτοῦ της συνουσίας. Pearson conjectured that the false interpretation arose from John xx. 8 καὶ εἶδεν καὶ ἐπίστευσεν.

2. καὶ ὅτε κ.τ.λ.] The reference is plainly to the same incident which is related in Luke xxiv. 36 sq; see esp. vv. 38, 39 έδόκουν πνευμα θεωρείν, καὶ εἶπεν αὐτοῖς...Ψηλαφήσατέ με καὶ ἴδετε, ὅτι πνεῦμα σάρκα καὶ ὀστέα οὐκ έχει, καθώς έμε θεωρείτε έχοντα. The words however, in which it is told, are different. Eusebius (H. E. iii. 36) is at a loss to say from what source this incident was taken (our οίδ' όπόθεν ρητοίς συγκέχρηται). Τεrome however states that it was taken 'de evangelio quod nuper a me translatum est,' i.e. the Gospel to which he has referred before in the same treatise, 'evangelium quod appellatur secundum Hebraeos, et quod a me nuper in Graecum Latinumque sermonem translatum est, quo et Origenes saepe utitur' (Vir. Ill. 2), and which at this time he was disposed to regard as the original Hebrew of S. Matthew; 'Ipsum Hebraicum [Matthaei] habetur usque hodie in Caesariensi bibliotheca quam Pamphilus martyr studiosissime confecit; mihi quoque a Nazaraeis, qui in Beroea urbe Syriae hoc volumine utuntur, describendi facultas fuit' (Vir. Ill. 3); though afterwards he spoke less confidently on this point; in Matt. xii. 13 'quod vocatur a plerisque Matthaei authenticum' (Op. VII. p. 77); c. Pelag. iii. 2 'in Evangelio juxta Hebraeos...siveut plerique autumant, juxta Matthaeum, quod et in Caesariensi habetur bibliotheca' (Op. II. p. 782). In another passage also Comm. in Isai. xviii. praef. (Op. IV. p. 770) he writes 'quum enim apostoli eum putarent spiritum, vel, juxta evangelium quod Hebraeorum lectitant Nazaraei, incorporale daemonium, dixit etc.' But this statement, though thus repeated and explicit, is attended with difficulties; for (1) Eusebius was well acquainted with the Gospel according to the Hebrews. There was a copy preserved in his own city, Caesarea, in the library which had been collected by his friend Pamphilus, was probably attached to his own Church or palace, and certainly was habitually used by him; and he makes it his business to record all references to these apocryphal gospels in early writers, and does so in other cases. Yet he cannot verify the quotation in this instance, notwithstanding the striking words δαιμόνιον ἀσώματον which would be likely to dwell on his mind. (2) Origen, who was also well acquainted with the Gospel according to the Hebrews, ascribes the words not to this but to an entirely different apocryphal writing, de Princ. praef. 8 (I. p. 49) 'Si vero quis velit nobis proferre ex illo libello qui Petri Doctrina appellatur, ubi salvator videtur ad discipulos dicere, Non sum daemonium incorporeum, primo respondendum est ei, quoniam ille liber inter libros ecclesiasticos non habetur, et ostendendum quia neque Petri est ipsa scriptura, neque alterius cujusquam qui spiritu Dei fuerit inspiratus'. With these facts before us it is reasonable to suppose either (1) That it was a lapse of memory in Jerome. His memory sometimes plays him strange tricks. Thus he quotes, as from 'Ignatius vir apostolicus et martyr,' the most notable passage in the Epistle of Barnabas; c. Pelag. iii. 2 (II. p. 783). Or inasmuch as, having translated the book, he was not likely to have made this mistake, it seems more probable that (2) His copy contained a different recension of the Gospel according to the Hebrews from that which was known to Origen and Eusebius. This Gospel bore various titles and there is every reason to think that it went through various recensions. The copy in the Caesarean library would represent the text as Origen and Eusebius had it. Though Jerome refers to the existence of this copy, apparently for the sake of vouching for the respectability of the Gospel, there is no reason to suppose that he had seen it. His own, as he tells us, was a transcript made at Beroea: and this incident seems to have been a later accretion incorporated either from Ignatius or from the Teaching of Peter or from some other source. As regards Ignatius himself, it is impossible to say whether he got it from oral tradition or from some written source. Under any circumstances the more elaborate language (δαιμόνιον ἀσώματον) shows that it is later than the account in S. Luke, which is told in simple and natural language (πνεῦμα σάρκα καὶ ὀστέα οὐκ $\tilde{\epsilon}_{\chi \epsilon \iota}$).

I. τοὺς περὶ Πέτρον] i.e. τοὺς ἔνδεκα καὶ τοὰς σὰν αὐτοῖς, as the company gathered together on this occasion is described in the parallel narrative, Luke xxiv. 34. The expression οἱ περὶ Πέτρον might in late Greek signify Peter alone (see Kühner II. p. 231, Winer \S xlix. p. 506 sq); but it commonly implies others as well (e.g. Acts xiii. 13), and here the plurals following, αὐτοῖς, λάβετε, etc. are decisive. Zahn points out that it is the expression used in the alternative ending to S. Mark's Gospel found in L and some other authorities, τοῦς περὶ τὸν Πέτρον συντόμως ἐξήγγειλαν.

2. δαιμόνιον ἀσώματον 'an incorporeal spirit.' Origen (l. c.) supposes that the author of the Doctrina Petri used this epithet ἀσώματον, not in its philosophical sense (='immaterial'), but as meaning composed of some subtle substance and without a gross body like man. He says also that the Scriptures of the Church do not countenance the use of the word. Similarly in Clem. Alex. Exc. Theod. 14 (p. 971) we read τὰ δαιμόνια ἀσώματα είρηται, ούχ ώς σώμα μὴ ἔχοντα' ἔχει γὰρ σχῆμα' διὸ καὶ συναίσθησιν κολάσεως έχει άλλ' ώς πρός σύγκρισιν τῶν σωζομένων σωμάτων πνευματικών σκιὰ ὄντα, ἀσώματα είρηται. As the Preaching of Peter (Κήρυγμα Πέτρου), which is supposed to have been the same work, was well known both to Clement of Alexandria and to the Valentinians, we may suspect that the explanation in this excerpt has special reference to this saying of that apocryphal writing. Zahn infers from the introductory καὶ ὅτε here (instead of ὅτε $\gamma \dot{a} \rho$), that we have a direct citation; but the inference is precarious. When Celsus assumes that the Christians regard angels as δαίμονες, Origen is careful to reply that to the Christian ear δαίμων, δαιμόνιον, is not καὶ τῷ αἴματι. διὰ τοῦτο καὶ θανάτου κατεφρόνησαν, 5 ηύρέθησαν δὲ ὑπὲρ θάνατον. μετὰ δὲ τὴν ἀνάστασιν [καὶ] συνέφαγεν αὐτοῖς καὶ συνέπιεν ώς σαρκικός, καίπερ πνευματικῶς ἡνωμένος τῷ πατρί.

For the whole passage comp. Tert. adv. Marc. iv. 43, where this father argues against the Docetism of Marcion from Luke xxiv. 37 sq. Marcion retained the passage, but explained καθως ἐμὲ θεωρεῖτε ἔχουτα, 'as ye behold me having (neither flesh nor bones).' 'Quae ratio tortuositatis istius!', exclaims Tertullian. The way in which Apelles disposed of such passages in the Gospels may be seen from Hippol. Haer. vii. 38.

3. κραθέντες] 'being mixed with, joined to,' and so 'having handled,' the strongest possible expression being chosen to express the closeness of the contact; comp. Pind. Pyth. x. 65 ούτε γήρας ουλόμενον κέκραται ίερα γενεά, Olymp. x. 123 ώρα κεκραμένον, Plato Phaedr. 279 Α ήθει γεννικωτέρω κεκρασθαι, Epist. vii. 326 C οὐχ οὕτω θαυμαστή φύσει κραθήσεται. So also συγκεκρασθαι, e.g. Arist. Plut. 853 πολυφόρω συγκέκραμαι δαίμονι, and see the note on ανακεκραμένους Ephes. 5. The editors for the most part have followed Voss in substituting κρατηθέντες, which perhaps the Latin translator had in his text. But this is not so good. The same confusion of κραθήναι, κρατηθήναι, appears three times in Iren. i. 6. 4 ὅστε αὐτὴν κρατηθῆναι, κρατηθεὶς γυναικί, κρατηθῆναι, where the Latin translation has 'ut ei conjungatur,' 'mixtus mulieri,' 'mixtus est,' thus showing that the Greek should be read κραθῆναι, κραθείς, κραθῆναι. The construction κρατεῖσθαί τινι however is unobjectionable in itself; e.g. Act. Paul. et Thecl. 9 κρατεῖται ἐπιθυμία καινῆ, Clem. Alex. Strom. vi. 13 (p. 755) ψυχὰς τινὰς κρατουμένας φύσει τῷ σώματι, Εχα. Theod. 32 (p. 977) ἐκρατήθη, ὅσπερ τοῖς ὅλοις, οὕτω δὲ καὶ τῷ παρακλήτῳ.

4. τῷ αἵματι] This is clearly the reading of the Armenian Version (which wrongly interprets it of the eucharist) and seems to be required for the sense. 'Flesh and blood' is a synonyme for the corporeal part of man: Matt. xvi. 17, 1 Cor. xv. 50, Gal. i. 16. In Heb. ii. 14 the reality of Christ's humanity is described as a partaking αίματος καὶ σαρκός. The Apostles who were invited to feel the nail-prints in His hands and the spear-wounds in His side might be said almost literally to touch His blood as well as His flesh. At the same time πνεύματι might easily be substituted for aiµarı, because the conjunction 'flesh and spirit' is frequent in Ignatius. See Trall. inscr., where there is the same confusion of πνεύματι and αίματι in different texts. IV. μετὰ δὲ κ.τ.λ.] See Acts x. 41 οἵτινες συνεφάγομεν καὶ συνεπίομεν αὐτῷ μετὰ τὸ ἀναστῆναι αὐτὸν ἐκ νεκρῶν. Three several occasions are recorded in the Canonical Gospels; (1) Luke xxiv. 30, 35; (2) Luke xxiv. 42, 43; (3) John xxi. 12, 13.

IV. 'I give this advice, knowing that you yourselves act as I would have you act. But I would put you on your guard against these monsters in human shape. Do not go near them, but pray for them. Their repentance is not an easy matter, but Christ can do all things. If Christ's life was a phantom, then my bonds are a phantom also. Why then do I expose myself to fire and sword and wild beasts? Near to these, I am near to God; if only I suffer in Christ's name. I have all power in Christ, the perfect man.'

3. ἀνθρωπομόρφων] Philo de Abr. 6 (II. p. 6) κυριώτερον δὲ εἰπεῖν, ἀνθρωπομόρφου θηρίου. So too ἀνθρωποείδη θηρία, Vit. Moys. i. 8 (II. p. 87), de Decal. 16 (II. p. 194). This last expression occurs also Apost. Const. ii. 21. These passages are collected by Cotelier. See also Eus. H. E. x. 4. (p. 467) Ps-Ign. Tars. 1, and comp. Suicer s. v. ἀνθρωπόμορφος.

ό ἐγγὺς μαχαίρας κ.τ.λ.] A saying to this effect is attributed to our Lord by Didymus on Ps. lxxxviii. 8 διό φησιν ὁ σωτήρ, 'Ο ἐγγύς μου ἐγγὺς τοῦ πυρός, ὁ δὲ μακρὰν ἀπ᾽ ἐμοῦ μακρὰν ἀπὸ τῆς βασιλείας (p. 1488, ed. Migne); see Westcott Introduction to the Gospels p. 455 (ed. 4). It is mentioned also by Origen Hom. xx in Ierem. § 3 (III. p. 280) 'Legi alicubi quasi salvatore dicente, et quaero, sive quis personam figuravit salvatoris sive in memoriam adduxit, an verum sit hoc quod dictum est; ait autem ipsi salvator Qui juxta me est etc.' Gregory Nazianzen attributes a similar saying to S. Peter, Epist. 20 (11. p. 19, ed. Caillau) Κάμνουσα γὰρ ψυχὴ ἐγγύς ἐστι Θεοῦ, φησί που θαυμασιώτατα λέγων ὁ Πέτρος. This latter saying is quoted again by him anonymously, Orat. xvii. 5 (I. p. 321) ἐπειδή κάμνουσα ψυχή ἐγγύς ἐστι Θεοῦ (though S. Peter is mentioned in the context), on which later passage Elias Cretensis (Greg. Naz. Op. II. p. 895, Migne) remarks έν τη Διδασκαλία Πέτρου κείται Κάμνουσα γάρ, φησί, ψυχή, τουτέστι, κακοπαθοῦσά τε καὶ τοῖς περιστατικοῖς σφιγγομένη, έγγίζει μαλλον Θεώ. These words are highly natural as the genuine expression of Ignatius before his execution (comp. Rom. 5), for fire, sword, and wild-beasts all alike were possible; but extremely improbable in a forger writing after the occurrence had excluded all alμαχαίρας, έγγὺς Θεοῦ· μεταξὺ θηρίων, μεταξὺ Θεοῦ· μόνον ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ εἰς τὸ συμπαθεῖν αὐτῷ. πάντα ὑπομένω, αὐτοῦ με ἐνδυναμοῦντος τοῦ τελείου ἀνθρώπου.

2. $\mu\acute{o}\nu \nu$] sc. $\gamma \epsilon \nu \acute{\epsilon} \sigma \theta \omega$. For a similar ellipsis with $\mu\acute{o}\nu \nu$ comp. Rom. 5, and see the note on Ephes. II. The common punctuation (Ussher, Voss, Smith, Jacobson, Cureton) which attaches $\mu\acute{o}\nu \nu$ $\kappa.\tau.\lambda$. to $\pi\acute{a}\nu \tau a$ $\acute{\nu}\tau \sigma \mu\acute{e}\nu \omega$ destroys the sense. That of Hefele, Dressel, and Zahn, which punctuates after $X\rho\iota\sigma\tau\hat{o}\hat{v}$ and attaches ϵis $\tau\grave{o}$ $\sigma \nu \mu \pi a \theta \epsilon \hat{v}$ $a \dot{v}\tau\hat{o}$ with what follows, is somewhat awkward. I have adopted a punctuation different from either.

3. πάντα ὑπομένω] This sentence is modelled on Phil. iv. 13 πάντα ἰσχύω ἐν τῷ ἐνδυναμοῦντί με. For πάντα ὑπομένω comp. 2 Tim. ii. 10, and see also \S 9 below, Polyc. 3, Polyc. Phil. 8. The word ἐνδυναμοῦν is especially Pauline in the N. T.; it occurs also several times in Hermas, Mand. v. 2, xii. 5, 6, Sim. vi. I, vii, ix. I.

τοῦ τελείου ἀνθρώπου Zahn refers to Melito Fragm. 6 (p. 416 Otto) Θεὸς γὰρ ὢν ὁμοῦ τε καὶ ἄνθρωπος τέλειος ὁ αὐτός. The addition γενομένου, which appears in the common texts, ought to be omitted. It has doubtless been added to suggest indirectly the preexistence and Divinity of Christ; see the note on Rom. 7. The substitutions in the Syriac and Armenian are due to a similar motive. The object of Ignatius however in this passage was to assert broadly the humanity against the Docetics, and with the Divinity he was not concerned here; comp. I Tim. ii. 5.

V. 'Certain persons deny Him, or rather are denied by Him. They are advocates of death, not of truth. They turn a deaf ear to the Law and the Prophets and the Gospel. 6. συνήγοροι κ.τ.λ.] 'advocates of death,' because by denying the verity of Christ's passion and resurrection, they practically denied the immortality of man; comp. νεκροφόρος below.

7. $\tau \hat{\eta} \hat{s} \ d\lambda \eta \theta \epsilon las$] It is probable that these heretics, like many others since, arrogated to themselves a monopoly of 'the truth.' Thus the αὶ προφητεῖαι κ.τ.λ.] As Judaizers they professed the greatest respect for the Law and the Prophets, and yet they ignored the testimony borne by them to Christ's passion; see the notes on Magn. 6, Philad. 5, 8, 9. Like S. Paul before him, Ignatius encountered a stubborn opposition, as he διελέγετο ἀπὸ τῶν γραφῶν, διανοίγων καὶ παρατιθέμενος ὅτι τὸν Χριστὸν ἔδει παθεῖν καὶ ἀναστῆναι ἐκ νεκρῶν (Acts xvii. 3).

8. $\mu \dot{\epsilon} \chi \rho \iota \nu \hat{\nu} \nu]$ i.e. notwithstanding the clear revelation of the Gospel; comp. Magn. 8.

I. τὸ αὐτὸ φρονοῦσιν] Το be explained by § 4 εἰ γὰρ τὸ δοκεῖν ταῦτα ἐπράχθη ὑπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν, κὰγὼ τὸ δοκεῖν δέδεμαι. The view which they take respecting Christ's sufferings applies by parity of reasoning to his own. They reduce everything to an unreality.

2. εὶ ἐμὲ ἐπαινεῖ] Pearson supposes that there is a special reference to his title Θεοφόρος: 'Illorum laudes non acceptabat, dum eum Θεοφόρον vocarent, negarent autem Christum σαρκοφόρον, et se probarent νεκροφόρουs.' But if this had been so, the word Θεοφόροs would almost certainly have been expressed, for the sake of the alliteration, as well as for clearness. See also the notes on Trall. 4.

4. ὧν νεκροφόρος] 'he himself carrying a corpse.' The word signifies 'a bearer in a funeral,' 'vespillo,' 'bajulus'; e.g. Polyb. xxxv. 6. 2 πότερον ὑπὸ τῶν παρ' ἡμῦν ἐν ᾿Αχαίᾳ νεκροφόρων ἐκκομισθῶσι, Appian Bell. Civ. iv. 27 πλεονάζουσιν οἱ νεκροφόροι. For other applications of the metaphor see Philo Flacc. 19 (II. p. 540) στέλλομαι γὰρ ὁ κακοδαίμων ἐγὼ τρό-πον τινά νεκροφορών έμαυτον ώσπερ eis ηρίου, de Agric. 5 (I. p. 304) ἄχθος τοσούτον ούκ ἀποτίθεται νεκροφορούσα, Leg. Abr. 5, I. p. 439, de Somn. ii. 36, I. p. 690), Greg. Naz. Op. 11. 246 νεκροφόρος (of Adam on his expulsion from Eden). Cotelier quotes Cypr. de Laps. 30 (p. 259, Hartel) 'spiritaliter mortua supervivere hic tibi et ipsa ambulans funus tuum portare coepisti,' Hieron. Ep. 68 (I. p. 319) 'Quanti hodie diu vivendo portant funera sua et, quasi sepulcra dealbata, plena sunt ossibus mortuorum.' This last quotation combines the metaphors which appear in this and the parallel passage of Ignatius referring to these same Docetic Judaizers, Philad. 6 οὖτοι ἐμοὶ στῆλαί είσιν καὶ τάφοι νεκρών. But why are they called νεκροφόροι? Pearson quotes such passages as I Tim. v. 6 ζώσα τέθνηκεν, Apoc. iii. Ι ζης καὶ νεκρός εί. It may possibly have this reference to their moral state also;

VI. Μηδείς πλανάσθω. καὶ τὰ ἐπουράνια καὶ ἡ δόξα τῶν ἀγγέλων καὶ οἱ ἄρχοντες ὁρατοί τε καὶ ο ἀόρατοι, ἐὰν μὴ πιστεύσωσιν εἰς τὸ αἷμα Χριστοῦ [τοῦ

If any insertion is to be made, τοῦ θεοῦ has the advantage of explaining the renderings of both Anon-Syr₁ and Tim-Syr. They might however be brought to conformity by substituting και της τος τος τος τος τος τος See the lower note.

but I believe that it points more directly to their doctrinal position. If Christ's resurrection were not real, then their own immortality was destroyed also; they were simply carrying corpses to the grave.

όρατοί τε καὶ ἀόρατοι] The same expression occurs again in a similar connexion, Trall. 5 τὰς συστάσεις τὰς ἀρχοντικάς, ὁρατά τε καὶ ἀόρατα (see the note there).

10. τοῦ Θεοῦ] 'who is God.' Ι have inserted these words in brackets with very great hesitation, as a possible reading. Such a mode of speaking however is almost, if not quite, unique in Ignatius; see Ephes. inscr. τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν. If this was the reading of Timotheus and the anonymous Syrian writer, as it seems to have been (see the upper note), it may be due to a transcriber's reminiscence of Ephes. I έν αΐματι Θεοῦ. See the notes on § 10 below, and on Trall. 7, and compare the variation of the Syriac Version above in § 4 τοῦ τελείου ἀνθρώπου.

1. ὁ χωρών χωρείτω] 'Let him that receiveth receive,' taken from Matt. xix. 12 ὁ δυνάμενος χωρείν χω- $\rho \epsilon i \tau \omega$. It is a mysterious truth, and beyond the capacity of the common hearer. Similarly in Trall. 5, when he is tempted to speak of the heavenly hierarchy, he checks himself and says, φοβουμαι μή νηπίοις οὖσιν ύμιν βλάβην παραθώ και συγγνωμονειτέ μοι, μήποτε οὐ δυνηθέντες χωρησαι στραγγαλωθητε, which passage also illustrates the metaphor in χωρείν. The interpolator himself was not able $\chi\omega\rho\epsilon\hat{\imath}\nu$, for he obliterates all mention of the angels here, evidently looking upon them as a stumbling-block, and substitutes καν βασιλεύς ή καν ίερευς καν άρχων καν ίδιώτης κ.τ.λ. Perhaps the reading πιστεύσωμεν may be due to the same cause. S. Jerome (quoted by Smith) says, Comm. in Ephes. iv. 10 (VII. p. 614) 'Neque enim scire possumus quomodo et angelis et his qui in inferno erant sanguis Christi profuerit; et tamen quin profuerit, nescire non possumus.'

έτεροδοξοῦντας] See the note on Magn. 8. The xápis, as to which they have gone astray, is the gift of Christ's incarnation and passion. The γνώμη of God, which they defy, is the obligation to love imposed upon them in consequence thereof. Their doctrinal error leads to their moral failure. On the phrase γνώμη $\Theta \epsilon o \hat{v}$ see Rom. 8 with the note.

5. $\pi \in \rho i$ ayamns i. e. 'deeds of charity.' There is apparently no reference to the technical sense which ayaπη has below in § 8. It is the general term introducing the mention of the special directions in which love may be manifested.

6. π ερὶ χήρας κ.τ.λ.] For the whole passage comp. Barnab. 20 χήρα καὶ ὀρφανώ οὐ προσέχοντες... αποστρεφόμενοι τον ένδεόμενον και καταπονούντες τὸν θλιβόμενον.

η λελυμένου No adequate sense can be given to these words. It is proposed for instance to interpret δεδεμένου 'a cripple' and λελυμένου 'a paralytic' ('de podagricis et paralyticis aliisque etc.' Smith). For δεδεμένος in this sense comp. Luke xiii. 16 ταύτην... ην έδησεν ο Σατανας... ούκ έδει λυθηναι άπὸ τοῦ δεσμοῦ τούτου; Clem. Hom. xii. 18 γυνή δλη ύπὸ πάθους τινὸς συνδεθείσα: and for λελυμένος, Epist. Vienn. in Euseb. Η. Ε. ν. Ι ύπὸ τοῦ γήρως καὶ ύπὸ τῆς νόσου λελυμένου (of Pothinus), Greg. Naz. Op. II. p. 276 έκαντοντάρχοιο λελυμένον ήδρασε παίδα in allusion to Luke vii. 2 sq (comp. λύσις ib. II. p. 278, λυσιμελής ib. pp. 860, 946). But though each word singly might refer to some kind of disease, the odd antithesis of 'bound and loosed' in this sense is quite inconceivable; not to say that parallel passages make the sense of δεδεμένου 'a prisoner' quite certain. Markland again would render it 'fatigato, deficiente'; but even if this rendering could stand in itself, it makes no antithesis to δεδεμένου. Zahn preserves this antithesis (I.v. A. p. 333) by giving to the passage the sense 'they care not whether a man is in bonds or free'; but this assigns to $\hat{\eta}$ quite a different sense from that which it has in the next clause περί πεινώντος ή διψώντος. It seems necessary therefore to eject the words $\hat{\eta}$ $\lambda \epsilon \lambda \nu \mu \epsilon \nu \rho \nu$, as the addition of some officious scribe who had more regard for rhetoric than for sense. They are omitted in the Armenian and Coptic Versions.

 εὐχαριστίας] On the application of this word to the Holy Communion, and even to the elements themselves, see the note on Philad. 4. It would appear from § 8 (comp. Philad. 4), that these heretics did not altogether abstain from this sacrament, but that they established a eucharist of their own apart from the Church. This Ignatius does not allow to be a real eucharistic feast (§ 8 ἐκείνη βεβαία εὐχαριστία κ.τ.λ.), and therefore he says here εὐχαριστίας ἀπέχονται. The $\pi \rho o \sigma \epsilon v \chi \hat{\eta} s$ is the public prayer of the Church, more especially that which accompanies the eucharist. Theodoret Op. IV. 1. p. 231 quotes the passage loosely, εὐχαριστίας καὶ προσφοράς οὐκ ἀποδέχονται κ.τ.λ.

argument is much the same as Tertullian's against the Docetism of Marcion, adv. Marc. iv. 40 'Acceptum panem et distributum discipulis corpus suum illum fecit, Hoc est corpus meum dicendo, id est figura mei corporis. figura autem non fuisset, nisi veritatis esset corpus. ceterum vacua res, quod est phantasma, figuram capere non posset.' The eucharist implies the reality of Christ's flesh. To those who deny this reality, it has no meaning at all; to them Christ's words of institution are false; it is in no sense the flesh of Christ. Somewhat similarly Irenæus (iv. 18. 5) argues against those who deny the resurrection and immortality of the body from the eucharist; and he challenges them either to change their opinions or to give up the celebration (ἡ τὴν γνώμην ἀλλαξάτωσαν ή τὸ προσφέρειν τὰ εἰρημένα παραιτείσθωσαν). See also v. 2. 2.

VII. 'It is death to gainsay the gift of God. They must learn to love, if they would rise again. Have nothing to do with these men, but give heed to the Prophets, and especially the Gospel, where the Passion and Resurrection are set forth.'

6. $\tau \hat{\eta}$ δωρε \hat{q} τοῦ Θεοῦ] The 'gift of God' is the redemption of man through the incarnation and death of Christ. It has substantially the same sense in Ignatius, as in S. Paul, Rom. v. 15 sq, 2 Cor. ix. 15; comp.

Iren. v. 2. 3. Those who denied the reality of the passion gainsaid the gift. There is no direct reference here to the eucharist, as Aldrich supposes. The elements were called $\delta\hat{\omega}\rho a$, not as the gifts of God, but as the offerings of the congregation.

7. συζητοῦντες κ.τ.λ.] 'die by their disputing.' The contentious spirit is death; for it is the negation of

συνέφερεν δέ κ.τ.λ.] This was the point in which they were at fault, περὶ ἀγάπης οὐ μέλει αὐτοῖς § 6. If they had devoted themselves to charitable works instead of theological disputations, it would have been better for them (συνέφερεν αὐτοῖς). Love would have revived them, for love is resurrection, is life: comp. Ι John iii. 14 ήμεις οἴδαμεν ὅτι μεταβεβήκαμεν έκ τοῦ θανάτου είς τὴν ζωήν, ὅτι ἀγαπῶμεν τοὺς ἀδελφούς. ό μη ἀγαπῶν μένει ἐν τῷ θανάτῳ. Many commentators (Cotelier, Pearson, Aldrich, Hefele, Zahn) would take ἀγαπᾶν=ἀγάπην ποιεῖν 'to hold an agape' (see § 8 below). This however seems lexically impossible, nor would the passage be improved by the interpretation, if it could stand. The word might possibly contain an indirect allusion to the agape, but even this would destroy the force of the expression. The sense 'to acquiesce,' i.e. 'in the revelation of the Gospel,' which Smith assigns to the word, is too weak for the occasion.

There is no direct reference to a written record here, though the whole body of the four Gospels is often called τὸ εὐαγγέλιον (e.g. Orig. c. Cels. ii. 50, 76, v. 56). Pearson's question 'An unum tantum evangelium viderat?' is quite out of place. For the distinction between 'the Gospel' and 'the Gospels,' comp. But I have not found an instance of the present or imperfect of ήγεισθαι except in an active sense, for in Herod. iii. 14 ήγεόμενον, 'being led,' the reading is highly doubtful. The perfect τὰ άγημένα occurs as a passive in an oracle in Demosth. Mac. p. 1072, and ήγηθήσεται also is passive in Hippol. Haer. i. proœm. p. 3. The commentators do not notice the difficulty.

2. ή καθολική εκκλησία 'the universal Church.' The bishop, argues Ignatius, is the centre of each individual Church, as Jesus Christ is the centre of the universal Church. The word καθολικός is found in a treatise ascribed to Aristotle de Plant. ii. 6 (p. 826), where καθολικός λόγος is a 'universal statement' (comp. ii. 8, p. 828, καθολικώς); and Zeno the Stoic wrote a work called Καθολικά 'Universals' (Diog. Laert. vii. 4). It occurs several times in Polybius, e.g. vi. 5. 3 κ. ἔμφασις 'a general exposition,' viii. 4. ΙΙ κ. ἱστορία 'universal history.' So also Philo Vit. Moys. iii. 32 (II. p. 172) καθολικώτερον νόμον, c. Flacc. 29 (II. p. 574) τη̂s καθολικωτέρας πολιτείας, Dion. Hal. de Comp. Verb. p. 68 καθολικήν περίληψιν, Epictet. ii. 20. 2 καθυλικόν $a\lambda\eta\theta\dot{\epsilon}s$ (comp. ii. 2. 25, iv. 4. 29, iv. 12. 7), Quintil. ii. 13. 14 'praecepta quae καθολικά vocant, id est (ut dicamus quomodo possumus) universalia vel perpetualia', and examples might be multiplied. The word therefore was extremely common in the age of Ignatius.

At a later date the expression $\dot{\eta}$ καθολική ἐκκλησία acquired a technical meaning, 'the Catholic Church', as opposed to the heretical sects; but here its use is different. It is the general or universal Church, as opposed to a particular body of Christians. This meaning is obviously required by the context; and yet it was reserved for Zahn (I. v. A. p. 428) to emphasize the difference, and to point out its bearing on the Ignatian controversy. The expression as used here therefore is no indication of a late date, but the opposite. It was natural at any moment from the time when the Church first began to spread by the labours of the Apostles. Thus it is not more indicative of a late date than other uses of the word in early Christian writers; e.g. ή καθ. ἀνάστασις 'the general resurrection', Justin Dial. 82 (p. 308), Theoph. ad Autol. i. 13 (p. 18); καθ. πνεύματα (of the four principal winds) Iren. iii. 11. 8; καθ. διαθήκαι Iren. iii. 11. 9; καθ. σωτηρία Clem. Alex. Paed. i. 6 (p. 116); καθ. όμολογία (opposed to μερική) Strom.iv. 9 (p. 595); καθ. κίνησις καὶ μετάθεσις (speaking of Matt. xxvii. 52) Strom. vi. 6 (p. 764); καθ. λόγος, Strom. i. 4 (p. 330), vi. 8 (p. 773); τὰ καθ. στοιχεία (of the letters of the alphabet), καθ. θεωρήματα, Strom. viii. 8 (p. 928); 'cath. bonitas' (said of God) Tertull. adv. Marc. ii. 17; 'cath.

Dei templum' (applied to our Lord), adv. Marc. iii. 21; 'cath. patris sacerdos' (said likewise of Christ) adv. Marc. iv. 9.

The earliest examples after this time, where it occurs as an epithet of ἐκκλησία, are (about A.D. 155 or a little later) in the letter of the Church of Smyrna on the Martyrdom of Polycarp, where it occurs three times; inscr. πάσαις ταῖς κατὰ πάντα τόπον της άγίας καὶ καθολικης ἐκκλησίας παροικίαις, § 8 πάσης της κατά την οίκουμένην καθολικής έκκλησίας, § 19 Ίησοῦν Χριστον...ποιμένα της κατά την οίκουμένην καθολικής έκκλησίας; but in all these passages it still signifies 'universal.' In a fourth passage indeed, § 16, Polycarp is called in the common texts ἐπίσκοπος τῆς ἐν Σμύρνη καθολικης έκκλησίας. If this reading were correct we should have here the earliest instance of the use of 'Catholic Church' in its technical sense; and it would stand in marked contrast with the passage in Ignatius. For, whereas in Ignatius the 'Catholic Church' is distinguished from the congregation over which Polycarp presided, in the passage of the Martyrdom this very congregation is itself so designated. But the recently collated Moscow MS. (see Zeitschr. f. Hist. Theol. 1875, p. 360) for καθολικής has άγίας in accordance with the Latin Version; and there can therefore be little doubt that this is the original reading. The technical sense however occurs in the Muratorian Fragment pp. 20, 47 (ed. Tregelles), 'in catholicam ecclesiam recipi non potest' (speaking of heretical writings), and very emphatically in Clem. Alex. Strom. vii. 17 (p. 898) μεταγενεστέρας της καθολικης έκκλησίας τὰς ἀνθρωπίνας συνηλύσεις πεποιήκασιν...έκ της προγενεστάτης καὶ ἀληθεστάτης ἐκκλησίας...μίαν εἶναι τὴν ἀληθη ἐκκλησίαν τὴν τῷ ὅντι ἀρχαίαν...μόνην εἶναί φαμεν τὴν ἀρχαίαν καὶ καθολικὴν ἐκκλησίαν εἰς ἐνότητα πίστεως μιᾶς.

In its earliest usages therefore, as a fluctuating epithet of ἐκκλησία, 'catholic' means 'universal,' as opposed to 'individual', 'particular.' The Church throughout the world is called 'catholic,' just as the Resurrection of all mankind is called 'catholic.' In its later sense, as a fixed attribute, it implies orthodoxy as opposed to heresy, conformity as opposed to dissent. Thus to the primary idea of extension are superadded also the ideas of doctrine and unity. But this later sense grows out of the earlier. The truth was the same everywhere, 'quod semper, quod ubique, quod ab omnibus.' The heresies were partial, scattered, localized, isolated (comp. the note on Col. i. 6). See Athanasius Festal Letters II (p. 94, Oxf. transl.) 'The Catholic Church which is in every place,' Aug. Epist. liii (II. p. 119) 'Καθολική Graece appellatur, quod per totum orbem terrarum diffunditur.' Not unnaturally however there was a tendency in theologians to put into the word more than history warranted: e.g. Cyril of Jerusalem Catech. xviii. 23 (p. 296) says that the Catholic Church was so called for three reasons; (Ι) διὰ τὸ κατὰ πάσης είναι της οἰκουμένης; (2) διὰ τὸ διδάσκειν καθολικώς και ανελλειπώς

These two latter reasons, that it is comprehensive in doctrine, and that it is universal in application, can only be regarded as secondary glosses. So again Augustine Epist. xciii. 7 (II. p. 240) calls a Donatist adversary to account because he explained 'Catholicae nomen non ex totius orbis communione sed ex observatione praeceptorum omnium divinorum atque omnium sacramentorum', but he adds 'quasi nos, etiamsi forte hinc sit appellata Catholica, quod totum veraciter teneat, cuius veritatis nonnullae particulae etiam in diversis inveniuntur haeresibus, etc.'

I. οὔτε βαπτίζειν] Tertull. de Bapt. 17 'Superest...de observatione quoque dandi et accipiendi baptismi commonefacere. Dandi quidem habet jus summus sacerdos, qui est episcopus; dehinc presbyteri et diaconi, non tamen sine episcopi auctoritate, etc.' In early times the bishop stood to his diocese in the same intimate relations in which a rector now stands to his parish. Reference to him therefore was possible on all these points. The following passages show how it soon became necessary to relax the rule and extend the power to others; Cypr. Epist. lxxiii. 7 sq (p. 783 sq, Hartel) 'intellegimus nonnisi in ecclesia praepositis ...licere baptizare...nec posse quenquam contra episcopos et sacerdotes usurpare sibi aliquid'; Can. Apost. c. 47 επίσκοπος η πρεσβύτερος τον κατὰ ἀλήθειαν ἔχοντα βάπτισμα ἐὰν ἄνωθεν βαπτίση κ.τ.λ. (comp. c. 46, 49, 50), Apost. Const. iii. 11 ουτε τοι̂s

Yet theoretically the power still remained with the bishop; see esp. Hieron. c. Lucif. 9 (II. p. 181 sq) 'Non quidem abnuo hanc esse ecclesiarum consuetudinem, ut ad eos qui longe a maioribus urbibus per presbyteros et diaconos baptizati sunt, episcopus ad invocationem sancti spiritus manum impositurus excurrat.... Inde venit ut sine chrismate et episcopi jussione neque presbyter neque diaconus jus habeant baptizandi; quod frequenter, si tamen necessitas cogit, scimus etiam licere laicis'; Ambros. de Sacram. iii. I (p. 362) 'Succinctus summus sacerdos: licet enim presbyteri fecerint, tamen exordium ministerii a summo est sacerdote.' Comp. Bingham Christ. Ant. ii. 3. 3, Augusti Denkw. aus der Christl. Archäol. VII. p. 136 sq, Probst Sakramente etc. p. 115 sq.

2. οὖτε ἀγάπην ποιεῖν] 'nor to hold a love-feast.' The interpolator expands the sentence, οὖτε βαπτίζειν οὖτε προσφέρειν ούτε θυσίαν προσκομίζειν ούτε δοχην επιτελείν. For this last clause comp. Apost. Const. ii. 28 rois eis άγάπην ήτοι δοχήν, ώς ὁ Κύριος ώνόμασε, προαιρουμένοις καλείν κ.τ.λ. (where the reference is to Luke xiv. 13 όταν ποιής δοχήν κ.τ.λ.). For this use of ἀγάπη in the earliest ages of the Church see Jude 12 έν ταις άγάπαις ύμων σπιλάδες (compared with 2 Pet. ii. 13 ἐντρυφωντες έν ταις αγάπαις αὐτων, συνευωχούμενοι ύμιν, where the v. l. ἀπάταις is an obvious error), Clem. Alex. Paed. ii. Cels. i. I (I. p. 319) βούλεται διαβάλλειν την καλουμένην ἀγάπην Χριστιανών κ.τ.λ., Act. Paul. et Thecl. 25 ην έσω έν τῷ μνημείω ἀγάπη πολλή (not found however in all texts), Act. Perp. et Felic. 17 'Quantum in ipsis erat, non coenam liberam sed agapen coenarent,' Tertull. Apol. 39 'Coena nostra de nomine rationem sui ostendit : id vocatur quod dilectio penes Graecos etc.' (where it is described), ad Mart. 2 'Quae justa sunt caro non amittit per curam ecclesiae et agapen fratrum,' de Jejun. 17 'Apud te agape in caccabis fervet etc.' (where, as a Montanist, he is reviling the feasts of the Catholics). We find references to these agapae in heathen writers (besides Celsus already quoted who seems to have mer tioned them by name); e.g. Pliny Ep. x. 97 (96) 'Soliti stato die ante lucem convenire carmenque Christo quasi Deo dicere secum invicem. seque sacramento non in scelus aliquod obstringere, sed ne furta, ne latrocinia, ne adulteria committerent ... quibus peractis morem sibi discedendi fuisse, rursusque [cocundi] ad capiendum cibum, promiscuum tamen et innoxium: quod ipsum facere desisse post edictum meum, quo secundum mandata tua hetaerias esse vetueram'; and Lucian de Mort. Peregr. 12 εἶτα δεῖπνα ποικίλα είσεκομίζετο καὶ λόγοι ίεροὶ αὐτῶν

In the Apostolic age the eucharist formed part of the agape. The original form of the Lord's Supper, as it was first instituted by Christ, was thus in a manner kept up. This appears from 1 Cor. xi. 17 sq (comp. Acts xx. 7), from which passage we infer that the celebration of the eucharist came, as it naturally would, at a late stage in the entertainment. In the Doctr. Apost. 10 this early practice is still observed. In after times however the agape was held at a separate time from the eucharist. Had this change taken place before Ignatius wrote? I think not. The words ούτε βαπτίζειν ούτε ανάπην ποιείν seem to describe the two most important functions in which the bishop could bear a part, so that the ἀγάπη must include the eucharist. Indeed there would be an incongruity in this juxtaposition, as Zahn truly says (I. v. A. p. 348), unless the other great sacrament were intended; see e.g. Tertull. de Virg. Vel. 9 'Non permittitur mulieri in ecclesia loqui, sed nec docere nec tinguere nec offerre,' de Exh. Cast. 7 'et offers et tinguis et sacerdos es tibi solus.' Nor would the omission of the eucharist be intelligible. Pearson indeed urges 'de eucharistia ante locutus est'; but this fact καὶ τῷ Θεῷ εὐάρεστον, ἵνα ἀσφαλès ἢ καὶ βέβαιον πᾶν δ πράσσετε.

would not dispense with the mention here, where it is imperatively demanded. The interpolator, living more than two centuries after the εὐχαριστία had been separated from the ἀγάπη, feels this necessity and inserts words accordingly, οὔτε προσφέρειν ούτε θυσίαν προσκομίζειν. On the other hand some have inferred from the words of Pliny quoted above and italicized, that when he wrote (about A.D. 112) the two were held at different times of the day. This however depends, first on the accuracy of Pliny's information, and secondly on the interpretation of sacramentum, which is supposed to have been used by his Christian informers in its technical sense and to have been misunderstood and confused with its ordinary meaning by Pliny. The inference therefore is somewhat precarious. Others again maintain that the eucharist was separated from the agape and attached to the early morning service in consequence of Pliny's edict prohibiting these Christian hetæriæ. For different views on the relation of the agape and eucharist see Bingham, Antiq. xv. 7. 6 sq, Augusti Denkw. VIII. p. 78 sq, 317 sq, Probst Lehre u. Gebet p. 349 sq, Th. 3. εὔλογον] 'It is the part of reasonable men'; a common expression. It frequently however means, not 'it is reasonable,' but 'it is probable,' e.g. Cic. ad Att. xiii. 7, xiv. 22. The word occurs in the same sense as here in Magn. 7. The warning is addressed to the heretical teachers.

2 Χριστοῦ Θεοῦ] G; dei christi L; θεοῦ (om. χριστοῦ) A. In g the passage is paraphrased οἶ ἐπηκολούθησάν μοι εἰς λόγον θεοῦ διάκονοι χριστοῦ ὅντες, καλῶς ἐποιήσατε ὑποδεξάμενοι ὡς διακόνους χριστοῦ, in the Greek Mss, but I has ministros dei in this last place, and perhaps διακόνους θεοῦ was the original reading of g here. If so, the paraphrase may point to χριστοῦ θεοῦ as standing in the text to Philad. 11. They had evidently arrived at Smyrna after the departure of Ignatius thence and followed him to Troas.

I. εls λόγον] 'to the score of,' 'in the matter of'; see the note on Philad. ΙΙ είς λόγον τιμῆς.

2. ως διακόνους κ.τ.λ.] It is probable that the Armenian Version has preserved the correct text. The common reading διακόνους Χριστού Θεού must be regarded as a confusion of the two expressions διακόνους Χριστοῦ and διακόνους Θεοῦ. Both occur in S. Paul; διάκονος Θεοῦ, Rom. xiii. 4, 2 Cor. vi. 4, 1 Thess. iii. 2 (v. l.); διάκονος [τοῦ] Χριστοῦ, 2 Cor. xi. 23, Col. i. 7 (comp. I Tim. iv. 6): and both are combined by Polyc. Phil. 5 Θεοῦ καὶ Χριστοῦ διάκονοι. A scribe, familiar with the language of the Apostle, would not unnaturally write down the alternative phrase in his margin or elsewhere; and hence the confusion. At all events the expression Χριστοῦ Θεοῦ is very awkward in itself and quite without a parallel even in Ignatius. The nearest approach to it is the various reading Χριστοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ (above, § 6) which, though more intelligible, is itself highly doubtful (see the note there). See also a questionable parallel in Trall. 7. For the limitations with which Ignatius speaks of Christ as God, see the note on Ephes. inscr.

Though S. Paul uses the expression διάκονοι Θεοῦ (or Χριστοῦ) in a much wider sense, it is probable that Ignatius here employs διάκονος in its technical, restricted meaning of 'deacon,' for he never uses it with any other signification; comp. esp. Trall. 2 τούς διακόνους όντας μυστηρίων Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. See also the note on Ephes. 2 respecting his application of σύνδουλος after S. Paul, but with a similar restriction. Philo is distinctly called a deacon in Philad. II; and the same was probably true of Agathopus (see the note there).

4. ἀντίψυχον κ.τ.λ.] Comp. Polyc. 2 κατὰ πάντα σου ἀντίψυχον ἐγὼ καὶ τὰ δεσμά μου ἃ ἢγάπησαs. For the meaning of ἀντίψυχον see the note on Ephes. 21.

6. οὐδὲ ἐπησχύνθητε] Suggested by 2 Tim. i. 16 τὴν ἄλυσίν μου οὐκ ἐπησχύνθη (see the note on Ephes. 2). The interpolator has seen the parallel and introduced the context of S. Paul into the context of Ignatius, δώη ὑμῖν ὁ Κύριος εὑρεῖν ἔλεος κ.τ.λ. It will be seen that there is considerable authority for ἐπαισχύνθητε here; and ύπερηφανήσατε οὐδὲ ἐπησχύνθητε· οὐδὲ ύμᾶς ἐπαισχυνθήσεται ή τελεία πίστις, Ἰησοῦς Χριστός.

ΧΙ. Ἡ προσευχή ὑμῶν ἀπῆλθεν ἐπὶ τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τὴν ἐν ἀντιοχεία τῆς Cυρίας ὅθεν δεδεμένος θεοπρεσεστάτοις δεσμοῖς πάντας ἀσπάζομαι, οὐκ ὢν ἄξιος in 2 Tim. i. 16 ἐπαισχύνθη is the best supported reading. Probably this was a common, though incorrect, form of the word, and perhaps it should be retained here.

7. $\pi l \sigma \tau \iota s$] Here in its passive sense 'trust-worthiness, fidelity,' as e.g. in Rom. iii. 3. See Galatians p. 155, and the note on v. 22. For the idea compare Heb. vi. 10 οὐ γὰρ ἄδικος ὁ Θεὸς ἐπιλαθέσθαι τοῦ ἔργου ὑμῶν κ.τ.λ. In this mention of Christ's fidelity there is probably a reference to His promise, which is quoted in the last note. The reading ἐλπίs has rather better support, but is open to suspicion as a scribe's alteration, the term being frequently used of Christ in these epistles; see the notes on Magn. 11.

- (1) 'of conscience,' i.e. 'not that my conscience pronounces me worthy,' comp. I Cor. iv. 4; or (2) 'of consent, complicity,' i e. 'it was God's sole doing.' This latter is the meaning of συνειδός in Hermog. l. c., and more commonly of τὸ συνειδός. See the note on συνείδησις Clem. Rom. 34, p. 113. The latter is perhaps the more probable sense here.

8. ἀπέλαβον κ.τ.λ.] 'recovered their proper magnitude'. The church had been previously weakened and diminished by the dispersion and defections consequent on persecution.

τὸ ἴδιον σωματεῖον] 'their proper corporate substance'. So we should probably read in Euseb. H. E. x. 5 (an imperial law) ἄτινα πάντα τῷ σωματίῳ τῶν Χριστιανῶν...παραδίδοσθαι δεήσει. The form σωμάτιον, like σαρκίον (σαρκίδιον), is a word of depreciation, affected more especially by the Stoics, 'this puny, wreiched body' (e.g. Epictet. i. 1. 10, i. 25. 21, where it appears in conjunction with other diminutives); whereas σωμα- $\tau \epsilon \hat{i} o \nu$ is a term of enhancement. The proper distinction between the two words is recognised in Chærobosc. Orthogr. s. v. (Cramer Anecd. II. p. 262) Σωματείον· ει ή παράδοσις· σωμάτιον δε καὶ προπαροξυτόνως τὸ ύποκοριστικόν. The meanings of σωματείον are as follows; (1) 'A corporation, college', as Cod. Fust. i. 2. 20 ώς έλλειπόντων δήθεν τοίς αριθμοίς σωματείων: comp. Suicer and Ducange s. v. In this sense substantially it is used here. (2) 'An actor's dress and make up', including the padding, etc. to give dignity to the figure; Pollux Onom. iv. 115 kai σκευή μεν ή των ύποκριτών στολή. ή δ' αὐτὴ καὶ σωματείον ἐκαλείτο, where the editors have wrongly substituted σωμάτιον (though in ii. 235 it is so written, σωμάτιον). The word is mentioned by Pollux side by side with προσωπείον, μορμολυκείον. So Lucian 7up. Trag. 41 τὰ πρόσωπα τῶν θεῶν αὐτὰ καὶ τοὺς ἐμβάτας καὶ τούς ποδήρεις χιτώνας...καὶ σωματεία καὶ τἆλλα οἷς έκεῖνοι σεμνύνουσι τὴν τραγωδίαν, where however it is commonly read σωμάτια. In this latter form too it appears in Photius s. v., who defines it ἀναπλάσματα οίς οί τινά τῶν ὑμετέρων μετ' ἐπιστολῆς, ἵνα συνδοξάση τὴν κατὰ Θεὸν αὐτοῖς γενομένην εὐδίαν, καὶ ὅτι λιμένος ήδη ἐτύγχανον τῆ προσευχῆ ὑμῶν. τέλειοι ὄντες τέλεια καὶ φρονεῖτε θέλουσιν γὰρ ὑμῖν εὖ πράσσειν Θεὸς ἕτοιμος εἰς τὸ παρασχεῖν.

ύποκριταί διασάττουσιν αύτούς. (3) 'Α corpus, or collection, of writings', as e.g. Iren. i. 9. 4 τῷ τῆς ἀληθείας σωματείω. But in other authors where this sense occurs, the existing texts frequently write it σωμάτιον. (4) 'A corpse', not regarded by itself but (as may be inferred from the form) with its belongings, e.g. the urn which contains the ashes. So it appears in three inscriptions, at Aphrodisias, C. I. G. 2826, 2829, 2835. Though these same inscriptions elsewhere have et for t, they do not so write where the i is certainly short, as it is in σωμάτιον. It must be confessed that no stress can be laid on manuscripts, so far as regards the distinction between ι and $\epsilon\iota$, and with some of the above meanings the form of the word may be doubtful; e.g. with the second the diminutive form σωμάτιον is explicable, when compared with 'corset', 'corselet', 'leibchen'. But inthe sense which it has here, this form seems quite out of place. The word σωματείον διά της ει διφθόγγου is expressly recognised by a writer in συνδοξάση] The word occurs Rom. viii. 17, and (in a different sense) Arist. Polit. v. 9 (p. 1310). Otherwise it is rare until a later date.

3. τέλειοι κ.τ.λ.] See Phil. iii. 15 "Οσοι οὖν τέλειοι, τοῦτο φρονῶμεν. Ignatius is here referring to what has been said above, ἵνα οὖν τέλειον ὑμῶν γένηται τὸ ἔργον: so that τέλεια φρονεῖτε means 'do not leave your plans incomplete.'

XII. 'The brethren at Troas salute you; whence also I write by Burrhus your delegate. His ministrations are an example for all to copy, and God will requite him. 8. αμα 'Εφεσίοις κ.τ.λ.] 'jointly with your brethren the Ephesians'. The Smyrnæans had joined with the Ephesians in commissioning Burrhus: see Philad. 11. Smith therefore is wrong when he explains aua Έφεσίοις τοις άδελφοις, Euplo et Frontone', who are stated in Ephes. 2 to have been among the Ephesian delegates in Ignatius' company at Smyrna. Evidently αμα Έφεσίοις is connected with the subject, not the object of ἀπεστείλατε, as the parallel passage, Philad. 11, shows. Moreover there is reason to think that Euplus and Fronto were no longer with him, having parted from him at Smyrna, so that Burrhus was the only Ephesian delegate in his company at Troas; see the note on Ephes. 2.

9. κατὰ πάντα κ.τ.λ.] For this phrase see the note on Ephes. 2.

öφελον] 'I would', as I Cor. iv. 8, 2 Cor. xi. 1, Gal. v. 12 (see the note), Apoc. iii. 15: see Winer § xli. p. 377. The word so used is properly the 1st pers. sing., 'I ought (sc. to witness it)', 'Would I might see it', but becomes a mere particle='utinam.' The form without the augment seems to be the more common with this usage.

For ἐνότης Θεοῦ ἐνότης Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ Philad. 5); for ἐνότης ὑμῶν, Philad. 2. The first genitive describes the binding principle of the unity; the second the component parts.

χάρις κ.τ.λ.] The form of benediction gathered words by time. In all S. Paul's Epistles, except the latest, in 1, 2 Peter, and in Clement, it is χάρις καὶ εἰρήνη; in the Pastoral Epistles, and in 2 John, χάρις, ἔλεος [καὶ] εἰρήνη; while here ὑπομονὴ is superadded. The additional words (ἔλεος, ὑπομονή) point to a time of growing trial and persecution. Other forms are ἔλεος καὶ εἰρήνη, Polycarp; ἔλεος [καὶ] εἰρήνη καὶ ἀγάπη, Jude, Mart. Polyc.; εἰρήνη καὶ χάρις καὶ δόξα, Epist. Vienn. et Lugd.

XIII. 'I salute my brethren and their families; as also the widows. Farewell. Philo my companion salutes you. I salute the household of Gavia; likewise Alce, Daphnus, Eutenus, indeed all one by one. Farewell once more.'

5. $\tau as \pi a \rho \theta \dot{\epsilon} vovs \kappa.\tau.\lambda.$] The first care of the Church was to provide for the wants of the widows (see the note on § 6 above). The next step was to impose upon them such duties as they were able to perform in return for their maintenance, e.g. care of orphans, nursing of the sick, visiting of prisoners, etc. Hence they were enrolled in an order, which however did not include all who received the alms of the Church. This order was already instituted in the Apostolic age (I Tim. v. 9 sq). It is probably intended here, and in Polycarp Phil. 4 γινωσκούσας ὅτι εἰσὶ θυσιαστήριον Θεοῦ. It is certainly referred to in Hermas Vis. ii. 4, and in Clem. Hom. xi. 36 χηρικά συστησάμενος (said of S. Peter). It was even known to the heathen, as appears from Lucian De Mort. Peregr. 12 ἦν ὁρᾶν παρὰ τῷ δεσμωτηρίφ περιμένοντα γράδια χήρας τινάς (i.e. 'widows as they call them'; comp. ib. § 41 έπιστολάς διαπέμψαι αὐτὸν διαθήκας τιvás, 'testaments as he called them'). The importance of this order may be inferred from the incidental collocation in Tertullian de Pudic. 13 'prosternis in medium ante viduas, ante presbyteros.' Indeed there is every reason to think that it was more important throughout the second century than at any later time.

The interpretation of the language of Ignatius has been confused by the assumption that the widows were the same order as the deaconesses. This however seems to be quite a mistake. Whatever confusion there may have been in later times, in the apostolic age and for some generations after Ignatius they were distinct. This is clear from S. Paul's transmitted through the Syriac, has no authority on this point. 3 ἔλεοs, εἰρήνη, ὑπομονή] Gg; et salus et patientia A; et misericordia et pax et sustinentia L^* . 4 ᾿Ασπάζομαι κ.τ.λ.] Some sentences in this chapter are transposed in A.

language in I Timothy, where the qualifications and functions of the two are quite separate (the deaconesses are described in iii. 11, the widows in v. 9 sq). It held equally when the Apostolic Constitutions were compiled. The distinction is observed alike in the earlier books (the deaconesses are discussed in ii. 58, iii. 15, the widows in iii. 1-8; while in ii. 26 the two are mentioned apart, and in iii. 7 the widows are ordered to be submissive to the deaconesses), and in the later (separate directions are given for the appointment of the two-for the deaconesses in viii. 18 sq, for the widows in viii. 25-and are assigned to different Apostles).

Having thus cleared the way, we ask next, what is the meaning of 'the virgins that are called widows'. From their mention as distinct from 'the households of the brethren with their wives and children,' it is clear they were persons who lived apart from the family life of the rest.

It is generally explained as implying that the order of so-called 'widows' either contained among its ranks persons who were actually unmarried virgins, or was altogether made up of these. This view is not uncommonly supported further by the identification of the 'widows' with the 'deaconesses'; e.g. by Cotelier, Hefele, and others here, by Bingham Ant. ii. 21. 2 sq, vii. 4. 9, by Probst Kirchliche Disciplin p. 143 sq, and by Döllinger Christenthum u. Kirche p. 326, etc. S. Paul however did not contemplate anything of the kind, for his directions point to widowhood in the strictest sense, I Tim. v. ΙΟ μη έλαττον έτων έξήκοντα γεγονυία, ένὸς ἀνδρὸς γυνή κ.τ.λ. Moreover even at the beginning of the third century Tertullian treats it as a monstrous and unheard-of irregularity that a virgin has been admitted into the order of widows; de Virg. Vel. 9 'Plane scio alicubi virginem in viduatu ab annis nondum viginti collocatam: cui si quid refrigerii debuerat episcopus, aliter utique salvo respectu disciplinae praestare potuisset, ne tale nunc miraculum, ne dixerim monstrum, in ecclesia denotaretur, virgo vidua.' It seems therefore impossible that at any time when these epistles could have been written, the 'viduatus' should have been so largely composed of virgins as to explain the writer's language so interpreted. Cotelier feels this difficulty and attempts to overcome it by the supposition that different churches had different practices; and Zahn (I. v. A. p. 336) argues similarly. But Tertullian could not treat as a 'monstrum' a practice which had prevailed commonly in the Churches of Asia Minor for a whole century before he wrote. Moreover with this interpretation we must suppose either that the χηρικον of Smyrna was wholly composed of virgins, or that Ignatius selected out of the order for salutation those only who had never been married. Either supposition would be inexplicable. The passages which speak of virgins μένας χήρας. ἔρρωσθέ μοι ἐν δυνάμει πατρός. ἀσπάζεται ὑμᾶς Φίλων, σὺν ἐμοὶ ὤν. ἀσπάζομαι τὸν οἶκον as admitted into the diaconate in somewhat early times, though quoted in support of this view, prove nothing, when it is seen that the viduate and the diaconate were originally separate institutions. do not hesitate therefore to offer a wholly different interpretation, which is suggested by the following passages; Clem. Alex. Strom. vii. 12 (p. 875) ὁ γὰρ ἐπιθυμήσας καὶ κατασχών έαυτοῦ καθάπερ ή χήρα, διὰ σωφροσύνης αὖθις παρθένος...αὖται δέ είσιν αί γνωστικαί ψυχαί ας απείκασεν τὸ εὐαγγέλιον [Matt. xxv. 1 sq] ταῖς ήγιασμέναις παρθένοις ταις προσδεχομέναις τὸν Κύριον παρθένοι μὲν γὰρ ώς κακῶν ἀπεσχημέναι κ.τ.λ. Strom. iii. 16, p. 558 ήδη τινές καὶ της παρθένου την χήραν είς έγκράτειαν προτείνουσι καταμεγαλοφρονήσασαν ής πεπείραται ήδονης), Tertull. ad Uxor. 4 (of certain widows) 'Adhibe sororum nostrarum exempla, quarum nomina penes Dominum, quae nullam formae vel aetatis occasionem praemissis maritis sanctitati anteponunt; malunt enim Deo nubere; Deo speciosae, Deo sunt puellae,' de Virg. Vel. 10 'Non enim et continentia virginitati antistat, sive viduorum (v. l. viduarum), sive qui ex consensu contumeliam communem jam recusaverunt?', de Exh. Cast. I 'secunda [species] virginitas a secunda nativitate, id est a lavacro, quae aut in matrimonio purificat ex consensu aut in viduitate perseverat ex arbitrio.' This then I suppose to be the meaning of Ignatius here; 'I salute those women whom, though by name and in outward condition they are widows, I prefer to call virgins, for such they are in God's sight by their purity and devotion.' See also Jahn S. Method. Platoniz. p. 42, on some uses of παρθένος which illustrate this. M. Renan (Les Apôtres p. 124 sq), without any thought of this passage in Ignatius, says, 'Cette position si difficile de la veuve sans enfants, le christianisme l'éleva, la rendit sainte. La veuve redevint presque l'égale de la vierge.' These words give fairly the Christian sentiment about widows in the age of Ignatius, and the mode of expressing it here is eminently characteristic of this father in its terse epigrammatic form. It is difficult to say exactly what interpretation Voss takes; but he quotes (in a mutilated form) Clem. Alex. Strom. vii. 12, and seems in one part of his note, as if he were approaching the explanation which I have given. The expression in Seneca Agam. 196 'An te morantur virgines viduae domi?', quoted by Pearson, has a wholly different sense. The reader should be cautioned that in the notes of both Cotelier and Voss, as quoted by Jacobson, important sentences are left out without any sign of omission.

I. ἐν δυνάμει πατρός] In confirmation of this reading comp. Magn. 3 κατὰ δύναμιν Θεοῦ πατρός. The confusion of the oblique cases of πατήρ and πνεῦμα is not uncommon, owing to the contractions πρς, πκς, etc. So Trall. 11 φυτεία πατρὸς is quoted φυτεία τοῦ πνεύματος in [Ioann. Damasc.] Par. Rupef. a. lxxvi. (Op. II. p. 773); see also the notes on Ephes.

9. In I Cor. xv. 24 F has a v.l. πνι for πατρί. In Iren. v. 5. I τῶν πνευματικῶν, the Latin has 'patrum', which must have arisen in the same way; just as in Hippol. Haer. vii. 33 the MS has πατρικόν where the sense requires πνευματικόν. Again in Justin Dial. 30 (p. 247) the common reading is μετάνοιαν τοῦ πατρός, where the sense requires πνεύματος. The critics there refer to Tatian Orat. 5, Method. Conv. p. 93, where the MSS exhibit a similar confusion. In Euseb. H. E. i. I3 παρὰ τοῦ πατρὸς there is a v.l. πνεύματος.

3. Taovias] There cannot be much doubt about the word here. The names Gavius, Gavia, are frequent in the Latin inscriptions: see also Jul. Capitol. Anton. Pius 8. Gavius appears also in a Greek inscription, C. I. G. 5979. On the other hand I have not observed any example of Tavia, and only one or two of Tavius or Thavius, Muratori MCCCXCV. 10, Corp. Inscr. Lat. III. 6248.

4. "Αλκην] She is saluted also in the companion letter, Polyc. 8, and in the same terms, τὸ ποθητόν μοι ὄνομα. The name occurs also in the account of Polycarp's martyrdom (A.D. 155 or 156) § 17 ὑπέβαλε γοῦν Νικήτην τὸν τοῦ Ἡρώδου πατέρα ἀδελφὸν δὲ "Αλκης κ.τ.λ., Herodes being the magistrate who was instrumental in putting Polycarp to death. There is no difficulty, though a period of forty or fifty years may have elapsed, in supposing the same person to be meant. The Alce there mentioned was plainly well known to the Christians; and her relationship to the magistrate implies that, if still living, she was advanced in life. If so, this divided family is an illustration of the warning in Matt. x. 35; for her brother Nicetes and her nephew Herodes are both actively hostile to the Christians. Pearson says incorrectly that on her account 'utpote Christianae, frater eius intercesserat pro Polycarpo'. But Nicetes interposes for quite another purpose, to prevent the Christians from recovering the remains of Polycarp, being instigated by the devil, as the writers of the Martyrdom state. The name Alce occurs occasionally in inscriptions, but is not common. It is remarkable that of the only two occurrences in the Greek collection the one (C. I. G. 3268) is at Smyrna, while the other (C. I. G. 7064) is on a gem of uncertain locality. In the Latin collection however it is less rare. Jacobson (Polyc. 8) supposes that in To ποθητόν μοι ὄνομα there is a play on the word ἀλκή, 'robur, fortitudinem desiderabat ad martyrium subeundum'. But this can hardly be; for Ignatius uses the same expression of Κρόκος, Rom. 10, where no such play is possible (see also the note on Ephes. 1).

I. Δάφνον] This name occurs from time to time in the inscriptions. In one, Reines. Inser. p. 693, it is found in connexion with another name which occurs in this context, D. M. GAVIAE. QVADRATILLAE...C. GAVIVS. DAPHNVS. PATER. INFELICISSIMVS. Pearson also refers to Daphnus the Ephesian physician, who is an interlocutor in Athenæus I. p. I.

It occurs also in classical writers of this age. Pearson points out that the corresponding 'incomparabilis' is a very common epithet in the Latin inscriptions; and ἀσύγκριτοs itself occurs on epitaphs in Jewish cemeteries at Rome (Garrucci Dissert. Archeol. II. pp. 179, 182). In Rom. xvi. 14 it appears as a proper name; but this is apparently rare.

Eΰτεκνον] I have not observed any other example of this name; nor does it seem very suitable as a proper name. However Εὐτέκνιος is found in literary history; see Fabric. Bibl. Graec. V. p. 601, ed. Harles. Zahn writes εὔτεκνον and treats it as an epithet, but this is awkward.

TO POLYCARP.

TO POLYCARP.

WHILE addressing a letter from Troas to the Church of Smyrna generally, Ignatius writes at the same time more especially to the bishop Polycarp. He had during his stay in Smyrna received much kindly attention from Polycarp, whom he mentions affectionately in letters written thence (Ephes. 21, Magn. 15), and had learnt to admire his character and work.

Like the Pastoral Epistles of S. Paul, with which it has many points in common, this letter is the exhortation of an older servant of Christ to a younger friend who holds a responsible office in the Church. Like them also, though special, it is not private. It was obviously intended to be communicated to the Smyrnæan Church, for at the beginning of § 6 the writer turns from the bishop to the congregation and addresses them directly on their reciprocal duties towards their chief officer.

In this letter fuller instructions than in the more general epistle are given respecting the delegate who is to represent the Smyrnæans at Antioch (§ 7). Moreover Polycarp is charged with the duty of writing to other churches nearer to Syria and directing them to send representatives in like manner (§ 8). As in the letter to the Smyrnæans, so here special salutations are sent to individual persons (ii). On the other hand there is no mention, beyond a passing allusion expressed in general terms (§ 3), of the heresy which occupies so large a space in the companion epistle. The directions have reference to the internal circumstances and private life of the Church, not to its relations with alien persons and creeds. Owing to this fact it has escaped with comparatively few changes from the violence of the interpolator, who accepts any mention of heresy as a signal for free-handling and insertion.

'IGNATIUS to POLYCARP greeting.

'It was a great privilege to see thee. I exhort thee to greater zeal than ever. More especially have a care for unity. Be firm and tender and watchful. Bear the ailments of all (§ 1). Adapt thy medicines to the complaints of thy patients. Join the wisdom of the serpent with the guilelessness of the dove. Thou art compact of flesh and spirit, that thou mayest use each in its proper function. Thou art the pilot of the vessel of the Church, the athlete in the race of God (§ 2). Be not scared by false teachers. Be firm as an anvil; submit to bruises, as a victorious athlete. Read the signs of the times, but await the advent of the Eternal (§ 3).'

'Provide for the widows. Let nothing be done without thee. Let your meetings be more frequent. Do not overlook slaves, but do not exalt them unduly (§ 4). Warn thy flock against evil arts. Explain the duties of husbands and wives to each other. Vows of chastity and vows of marriage should be taken with thy cognisance; and all things done to God's honour (§ 5).'

'Ye laity, obey your bishop and your clergy. Work and suffer, sleep and rise, together. Be not remiss in your spiritual warfare; but buckle on your armour and win your reward. Be patient one with another (§ 6).'

'As the Church of Antioch now enjoys peace, I am the more ready to die. Gather together a council, Polycarp, and elect a representative who shall go to Syria. A Christian is not his own master. It remains for you to complete your good deed (§ 7).'

'Hurried in my departure hence, I have had no time to write to the distant Churches. Do thou, Polycarp, urge them to send delegates to Syria. Salutations to the widow and children of Epitropus, to Attalus, to your elected representative, to Alce. Farewell (§ 8).'

'IGNATIUS to POLYCARP who is overseer of the Church in Smyrna, but himself is overseen by God and the Lord Jesus Christ; greeting'.

2. Σμυρναίων The Syriac Version (and after it the Armenian) writes the word with a Z, as it is written also in the Syriac translations of the Martyrology (Moesinger pp. 5, 10) and of Eusebius H.E. iii. 36 (Cureton C. I. p. 203, four times). This may be a scribe's caprice, but it not improbably represents the original form in Ignatius. At all events elsewhere (e.g. in the fragments in Cureton C. I. pp. 198, 210, 212, 214, and in Rev. i. 11, ii. 8) it is spelt with S in the Syriac. The forms Ζμύρνα, Ζμυρναίος, are common in Greek inscriptions; e.g. C. I. G. 3032, 3203, 3211, 3270, 3276, 3286, 3289, 3311, 3371, all these at Smyrna itself, besides several elsewhere (e.g. Wood's Discoveries at Ephesus Inscr. vi. 20, p. 70). On the coins too this name is written indifferently with a ∑ or a Z: see Eckhel Doctr. Num. II. p. 545 sq. In the earliest coins the Z seems to be preferred, in the latest the Σ , while about the age of Ignatius both seem to be used impartially; see Mionnet III. p. 302 sq, Suppl. VI. p. 190 sq. In Rev. i. 11, ii. 8, it is Zμύρνα in N, and Zmyrna in the Cod. Amiat. Nor is this form very uncommon in Latin MSS elsewhere (e.g. Tac. Ann. iv. 56). The title of Cinna's poem was evidently so written, 'Zmyrna'; see Catull. 95 (p. 67 ed. Mueller, with the fragments of the poem itself, ib. p. 88). Lucian

Ι. ᾿Αποδεχόμενός σου τὴν ἐν Θεῷ γνώμην ήδρασμένην ὡς ἐπὶ πέτραν ἀκίνητον, ὑπερδοξάζω καταξιωθεὶς τοῦ προσώπου σου τοῦ ἀμώμου, οἱ ὀναίμην ἐν

(7ud. Voc. 9) makes Σ complain that among other aggressions Z has 'robbed him of all Smyrna'. The form Zμύρνα is supported by the analogy of ζμάραγδοι, 'zmaragdi,' which is frequent, ζμερδαλέα in the Herculanean papyri of Philodemus, etc: see Munro on Lucret. iv. 1126. Similarly the duplicate forms $\Sigma \mu \hat{\eta} \theta_{0s}$, $Z\mu\hat{\eta}\theta$ os, of a proper name occur in the inscriptions. Compare also the two forms Σωτίων, Ζωτίων, in Magn. 2 with the note. The substitution of 'bishop of Smyrna' in the Syriac of Cureton for 'bishop of the Church of the Smyrnæans' is an indication of a later date.

έπεσκοπημένω] See below § 8 έν ένότητι Θεού καὶ ἐπισκοπῆ, Magn. 3 τῷ πατρὶ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τῷ πάντων ἐπισκόπω; comp. also I Pet. ii. 25. For this use of the verb, referring to God's supervision, comp. Orig. de Orat. 31 (I. p. 268) ὑπηρεσία τοῦ θείου βουλήματος έπισκοπούντος την έκκλησίαν...οί τοιοῦτοι...οὐκ ἐπισκοπηθήσονται. There is perhaps the same play, as here, intended by Polycrates in Euseb. H. E. v. 24 Μελίτωνα...ος κείται έν Σάρδεσι περιμένων την ἀπὸ των οὐρανων ἐπισκοπήν κ.τ.λ., and in Eusebius himself H. E. iii. 7 Ἰάκωβος αὐτὸς ὁ τῆδε πρώτος ἐπίσκοπος...τῆς θείας ἐπισκοπῆς εἰσέτι τότε μακροθυμούσης. For the sentiment here comp. Gal. iv. 9 γνόντες Θεόν, μᾶλλον δε γνωσθέντες ύπο Θεού; and for similar turns of expression in Ignatius see the note on Smyrn. 5.

- I. 'I welcome thy firm faith in God, and I give glory that I have seen thee face to face. Be more diligent in thine own life, and exhort all men to be saved. Vindicate thine office; be zealous for unity; bear the burdens of all; give thyself to prayer and ask for more grace; be vigilant; address thyself to each man severally; bear the sicknesses of all. The greater the pain, the greater the gain.'
- I. 'Αποδεχόμενος] ' Welcoming, αρproving,' as in Ephes. I 'Αποδεξάμενος ύμῶν ἐν Θεῷ τὸ πολυαγάπητον ὄνομα, Trall. I ἀποδεξάμενος οὖν τὴν κατὰ Θεὸν εὔνοιαν δι' αὐτοῦ ἐδύξασα κ.τ.λ.
- $\dot{\epsilon}\nu$ Θε $\hat{\varphi}$] These words might be connected with $\dot{\eta}\delta\rho a\sigma\mu\dot{\epsilon}\nu\eta\nu$, as in the Syriac and Armenian versions. For $\dot{\epsilon}\delta\rho\dot{\alpha}\dot{\xi}\epsilon\sigma\theta a\iota$ $\dot{\epsilon}\nu$ see Philad. inscr. (with the note). Comp. also $\dot{\epsilon}\delta\rho a\iota o\hat{\nu}\sigma\theta a\iota$ $\dot{\epsilon}\nu$ Θε $\hat{\varphi}$ Epiphan. Haer. lxi. 8 (p. 512). Perhaps however they are better taken with $\gamma\nu\dot{\omega}\mu\eta\nu$; comp. Rom. 7 $\tau\dot{\eta}\nu$ $\epsilon\dot{l}s$ Θε $\dot{\delta}\nu$ μ oυ $\gamma\nu\dot{\omega}\mu\eta\nu$, and Trall. I (quoted above).

2. $\epsilon \pi i \pi \epsilon \tau \rho a \nu$] As in the parable, Matt. vii. 24, 25, Luke vi. 48.

ύπερδοξάζω] Used absolutely, like ἐδόξασα in Trall. I quoted above (see the note there). The Syriac and Armenian versions, followed by Petermann, supply 'Deum,' from not appreciating this usage. For ὑπερδοξάζω see Orig. Comm. in Ioann. xiii (Op. IV. p. 235), and comp. ὑπερευφραίνομαι Barnab. I, ὑπερευχαριστῶ Barnab. 5.

καταξιωθεὶς κ.τ.λ.] 'having been permitted to see thy face.' 'Numquam igitur ante viderat Polycarpum,' says Pearson. This seems a just inference from the language; and if so, it refutes the statement in Mart. Ign. Ant. 3 that Polycarp had been a fellow-disciple (συνακροατής) of Ignatius under S. John. For the frequency of καταξιοῦν in Ignatius see the note on Ephes. 20.

3. $\tau o \hat{v}$ $\hat{a}\mu \hat{\omega}\mu o v$] The absence of these words in the Syriac and Armenian versions renders them doubtful here; but $\tilde{a}\mu \omega \mu o s$, $\hat{a}\mu \hat{\omega}\mu \omega s$, are favourite words of Ignatius, especially in the addresses of his letters: see the note on Ephes. inscr.

οῦ ὀναίμην] 'and may I have joy of it.' See the note on Ephes. 2.

4. προσθείναι κ.τ.λ.] 'to add to thy race,' i.e. 'to run thy race with increased vigour.' The words are copied by the pseudo-Ignatius Hero I προσθείναι τῷ δρόμῳ σου καὶ ἐκδικείν σου τὸ ἀξίωμα. The word δρόμος reprodúces S. Paul's favourite metaphor of the stadium; e.g. πληροῦν τὸν δρόμον Acts xiii. 25, τελείοῦν τὸν δρόμον Acts xx. 24, τελείν τὸν δρόμον 2 Tim. iv. 7. For the metaphor in Ignatius see the note on Rom. 2.

6. ἐκδίκει κ.τ.λ.] 'vindicate, assert, thine office,' i.e. 'make it felt and respected by a diligent discharge of its duties.' Pearson quotes Origen Comm. in Matt. xii. (III. p. 531) οί τὸν τόπον τῆς ἐπισκοπῆς ἐκδικοῦντες χρῶνται τῷ ῥητῷ ὡς Πέτρος, Cornelius in Euseb. H. E. vi. 43 (speaking of Novatian) ἐπισκοπὴν...μὴ ἐπιβάλλουσαν αὐτῷ ἐκδικεῖ. In the first passage the phrase is used exactly as here; in the second somewhat differently. The word ἐκδικεῖν occurs frequently in the LXX, but most commonly in another sense, 'to exact vengeance for or from,' 'to avenge,' 'to punish.'

See Pearson here and on Smyrn. 6, where several passages are collected. So in English we speak of 'placemen,' 'place-seekers.' The scruples of Cureton (C. I. p. 265) respecting τον τόπον are groundless; for τόπος was certainly so used in the time of Ignatius, as the quotations given above show. The rendering of the Syriac and Armenian 'things becoming' is perhaps merely a loose paraphrase, meaning the 'official duties' of a bishop (see e.g. Payne Smith Thes. Syr. s. v. Kula). But in uncial characters TONTOHON might easily be read топрепон, the confusion between N, π and between ϵ , o, being very frequent where the MS is blurred; and the plural is explained by ribui.

σαρκικ $\hat{\eta}$ τε κ.τ.λ.] As we should say, 'secular as well as spiritual.' For this favourite combination in Ignatius, see the note on Ephes. 10.

τη̂ς ἐνώσεως] See the note on Magn. I.

οὐδὲν ἄμεινον] Comp. Ephes. 13, Magn. 7.

2. πάντας βάσταζε] i.e. 'support the burdens of all men'; comp. Rom. xv. I, Gal. vi. 2. So Epist. ad Diogn. 10 τὸ τοῦ πλησίον ἀναδέχεται βάρος. See Apost. Const. i. I βαστάζετε οὖν, οἱ δοῦλοι καὶ υἱοὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἀλλήλους, ὁ μὲν ἀνὴρ τὴν γυναῖκα κ.τ.λ.

ώς καί σε ὁ Κύριος κ.τ.λ.] An allusion to Isaiah liii. 4 paraphrased in Matt. viii. 17 αὐτὸς τὰς ἀσθενείας ἡμῶν ἔλαβεν καὶ τὰς νόσους ἐβάστασεν. The influence of the evangelist's paraphrase is clear, when we compare the words used just below, πάντων τὰς νόσους βάσταζε: for the LXX rendering is quite different, οὖτος τὰς ἀμαρτίας ἡμῶν φέρει καὶ περί ἡμῶν ὀδυνᾶται. The interpolator has seen the reference, and has introduced the words of Is. liii. 4, as given in S. Matthew, into the context of πάντων τὰς νόσους κ.τ.λ. just below.

πάντων ἀνέχου] This describes the passive side of his duty to others, as the previous clause had described the active. See Ephes. iv. 2 ἀνεχόμενοι ἀλλήλων ἐν ἀγάπη, which Ignatius probably has in his mind. Comp. also the saying of Epictetus, ἀνέχου καὶ ἀπέχου, Aul. Gell. xvii. 19. This verb generally takes the genitive in the N. T.

3. ἀδιαλείπτοις] See Ephes. 10 ἀδιαλείπτως προσεύχεσθε with the note, where the omission of ἀδιαλείπτοις in some texts here is discussed.

5. $\pi\nu\epsilon\hat{\nu}\mu a$] The substitution of $\mathring{o}\mu\mu a$ in a quotation of the passage was probably suggested by the fact that $\mathring{a}\kappa o(\mu\eta\tau o\nu \ \mathring{o}\mu\mu a)$ is a more familiar combination; e.g. Philo $de\ Mut.\ Nom.$ I (I. p. 579), $de\ Mon.$ 6 (II. p. 219).

τοῖς κατ' ἄνδρα] 'to each singly': see the note on Ephes. 4 for this characteristic Ignatian phrase.

κατὰ ὁμοήθειαν Θεοῦ] 'in conformity with God.' If the balance of authorities had left any doubt about the reading, it would have been settled by Magn. 6 δμοήθειαν Θεοῦ λαβόντες. The Syriac and Armenian give a loose rendering of ὁμοήθειαν, which it was difficult to translate accurately. The similarity of the letters β and μ in cursive MSS explains the variation βοήθειαν, a common word being substituted for an uncommon. See also the note on Mart. Rom. 10. For ὁμοήθεια see Clem. Alex. Strom. vii. 12 (p. 878), Philostr. Vit. Apoll. ii. 11 (p. 61), Cyril. c. Julian. x. p. 338 (ed. Spanheim). Ignatius here means 'conformity with the character of God' our Father, who neglects no one, but makes His sun to shine alike upon the good and evil (Matt. v. 45 sq). It will appear, I think, from the context, that Ignatius has this saying of Christ in his mind; comp. πάντων τὰς νόσους βάσταζε ώς τέλειος άθλητής, with ver. 48 έσεσθε οὖν ύμεις τέλειοι ώς ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν κ.τ.λ., and καλοὺς μαθητὰς ἐὰν φιλῆς κ.τ.λ. with ver. 47 sq ἐὰν γὰρ ἀγαπήσητε τοὺς ἀγαπῶντας ὑμᾶς, τίνα μισθὸν ἔχετε κ.τ.λ.

6. τὰς νόσους κ.τ.λ.] See the note on ώς καί σε κ.τ.λ. above.

7. τέλειος ἀθλητής] So Polyb. ii. 20. 9 άθληταὶ τέλειοι γεγονότες των κατὰ πόλεμον έργων; comp. ib. i. 59. 12 $d\theta \lambda \eta \tau \dot{a}s$ $d\pi \epsilon \tau \dot{\epsilon} \lambda \epsilon \sigma \epsilon$. In this application of the word 'athlete' Ignatius had already been anticipated by Clement of Rome, § 5. The allied words, άθλείν, ἄθλησις, occur in this connexion as early as 2 Tim. ii. 5, Heb. x. 32, and the idea is constantly present to S. Paul's mind. It afterwards became a very favourite metaphor, more especially as applied to the martyrs; e.g. Mart. Polyc. 18, Epist. Vienn. in Euseb. H. E. v. I (several times), Act. Perp. et Felic. 10, etc. Naturally also it was frequently employed by the Stoics. Here Ignatius seems to be contemplating the pancratiast (máv- $\tau\omega\nu$ $\kappa.\tau.\lambda.$), in whom all the faculties were on the alert, and all the muscles brought into play; so Panætius in Aul. Gell. xiii. 28. 3 'Vita hominum qui aetatem in medio rerum agunt ac sibi suisque esse usui volunt, negotia periculaque ex improviso adsidua et prope cotidiana fert : ad ea cavenda atque declinanda perinde esse opor-ὅπου πλείων κ.τ.λ.] 'The more pain the greater gain.' So S. John in Browning's 'Death in the Desert,' 'When pain ends gain ends too.' A contemporary of Ignatius, R. Tarphon (Tryphon), is credited with a saying which resembles this, Pirke Aboth ii. 19 'Dies brevis et opus multum et operarii pigri et merces multa et magister domus (οἰκοδεσπότης) urget.' So too Tertull. ad Mart. 3 of athletes, 'quanto plus in exercitationibus laboraverint, tanto plus de victoria sperant,' Greg. Naz. Orat. xl (I. p. 706) αὐτὸ τὸ καμείν πλέον, πλείων μισθός κ.τ.λ. The word κόπος is used especially of the athlete's training: comp. e.g. Galen l. c., and see the note on συγκοπιᾶτε § 6.

II. 'It is not enough to love good scholars. Bring the pestilent into subjection. Apply not the same remedy to all diseases. Be wise as the serpent and harmless as the dove. Thou art compact of flesh and spirit, that thou mayest humour the things that are visible and mayest acquire a knowledge of the things that are invisible. The occasion demands thee, as a pilot the gales or as a storm-tossed mariner the haven. Train thyself, as God's athlete. The prize is eternal life. I am thy devoted friend, I and my bonds.'

Ι. Καλοὺς κ.τ.λ.] Luke vi. 32 εἰ ἀγαπᾶτε τοὺς ἀγαπῶντας ὑμᾶς, ποία ὑμῖν χάρις ἐστίν; κ.τ.λ. (see the note on § Ι κατὰ ὁμοήθειαν Θεοῦ), Ι Pet. ii. 18 οὐ μόνον τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς καὶ ἐπιεικέστιν ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς σκολιοῖς τοῦτο γὰρ χάρις κ.τ.λ. See also [Clem. Rom.] ii. § 13 οὐ χάρις ὑμῖν, εὶ ἀγαπᾶτε τοὺς ἀγαπῶντας ὑμᾶς.

2. τους λοιμοτέρους 'the more pestilent,' with a reference to the metaphor in § Ι πάντων τὰς νόσους κ.τ.λ. This word, like ὅλεθρος, is used of persons even in classical writers, e.g. Demosth. c. Aristog. i. 80 (p. 794) ὁ λοιμός 'the pest.' Hence it comes to be employed as an adjective, and is even declined as such; e.g. 1 Sam. i. 16 θυγατέρα λοιμήν, Barnab, 10 ουτα λοιμά τη πονηρία αὐτων. This usage is most common in the LXX; comp. also Acts xxiv. 5. But I have not found an earlier instance of the comparative. Zahn refers to Clem. Alex. Strom. ii. 67 (p. 464), where this father mentions having heard a wise man (Pantænus?) interpret καθέδραν λοιμῶν (Ps. i. 1) as referring to the heretical sects (τὰς αἰρέσεις).

3. τραῦμα] The word, as a medical term, is not confined to bleeding wounds, but includes all external bruises and sores.

τŷ αὐτŷ ἐμπλάστρω] 'the same plaster or salve': comp. Clem. Alex. Fragm. p. 1020 (Potter) έν μιᾶ έμπλάστρω καὶ σεαυτόν και τον πλησίον ιασάμενος, Hermes Trism. περί βοτ. χυλ. p. 331 (ed. Roether) ἐμπλάστρω μὴ τῷ αὐτῷ χρώ. The word is properly an adjective, θεραπεία or φαρμακεία being perhaps understood, and hence its gender. In late Greek however it became a neuter, τὸ ἔμπλαστρον. On the other hand, the recognised Latin form was the neuter emplastrum, and Gellius (xvi. 7) complains of certain 'novicii semidocti,' who treated it as a feminine. This branch of medicine seems to have been especially elaborated by the ancients. Their treatises are largely occupied in describing the different kinds of 'emplastra'; e.g. Celsus Med. v. 19, Galen de Comp. Med. per Gen. i. 4 sq (XIII. p. 357 sq). In the index to Galen the list of emplastra occupies several pages. The familiarity of the Latins with the word appears from the passage of Laberius, 'Quid est jusjurandum? emplastrum aeris alieni,' quoted by Gellius l. c., and by the remarks of Gellius himself on it. With the expression here comp. Apost. Const. ii. 41 ώς συμπαθης ιατρός τους ήμαρτηκότας πάντας θεράπευε ... μὴ μόνον τέμνων ... ἀλλὰ

Hom. χ. 18 οὐ γὰρ χρη την έμπλαστρον προσφέρειν ἐπὶ τὸ ύγιεινὸν μέρος κ.τ.λ. Zahn quotes Orig. Hom. in Jes. Naue vii. § 6 (II. p. 414) 'si oleo perunximus, si emplastris mitigavimus, si malagmate mollivimus, nec tamen cedit tumoris duritia, solum superest remedium desecandi.' See also Epict. ii. 21. 20 sq τὰ γὰρ κολλύρια οὐκ ἄχρηστα τοῖς ὅτε δεῖ καὶ ὡς δεῖ ἐγχριομένοις, with what follows.

This passage of Ignatius is quoted anonymously by Peter of Alexandria as retranslated into the Greek from the Syriac by Lagarde Rell. Jur. Eccl. Gr. p. xlvi ἐκ περισσοῦ [μάλιστα?] ἀκούομεν ὅτι Οὐ πᾶν τραῦμα τῆ αὐτῆ ἐμπλάστρῷ θεραπεύεται.

Antioch, who has the plural ώς αἱ περιστεραί; ὡσεὶ vulg. 3 σου είς πρόσωπον] G; in tuam faciem L; coram facie tua ΣA; σοι είς πρόσωπον g Dam-Vat 2. In Antioch I it stands $\alpha \dot{\nu} \tau \dot{\omega} \nu$ els $\pi \rho \dot{\sigma} \sigma \omega \pi \sigma \nu$, where $\alpha \dot{\nu} \tau \dot{\omega} \nu$ corresponds to $\sigma \sigma \nu$, but as the context is in the 3rd person singular we should prob. read αὐτῷ corresponding to κολακεύης] GLΣ Dam-Vat; κολακεύεις Dam-Reg; κολακεύη Antioch (transferred to the 3rd pers.); lucreris A; ἐπανορθώσης g*. ρίας μᾶλλον μὲν οὖν δεῖται ἢ βίας ἐν τοῖς παροξυσμοῖς κ.τ.λ. (comp. ib. p. 182 sq).

φρόνιμος κ.τ.λ.] A reference to the saying in Matt. x. 16 γίνεσθε οὖν φρόνιμοι ώς οἱ ὄφεις καὶ ἀκέραιοι ώς αἱ περιστεραί. Ignatius has substituted the singular, and inserted ἐν πᾶσιν and εἰσαεὶ in the respective clauses.

2. διὰ τοῦτο κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'You are composed of two elements; of flesh, that you may be able to deal with the world of matter, and shape it to God's ends; of spirit, that you may be competent to receive a revelation of the unseen world.' For διὰ τοῦτο ΐνα comp. Magn. 9.

3. σου] This seems to be the right reading; and if so, it should probably be taken with εἰς πρόσωπου. This position of the pronoun, even when there is no special emphasis, is common in Hellenistic Greek (e.g. Matt. vi. 17, ix. 6, xvi. 18, etc.), and occurs, as here, even with an interposing preposition, e.g. Luke vii. 44 εἰσῆλθόν σου εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν, John ix. 15 ἐπέθηκέν μου ἐπὶ τοὺς ὖφθαλμούς (the κολακεύης 'mayest humour'; a characteristic word of Ignatius, Rom. 4 κολακεύσατε τὰ θηρία, ib. 5 à καὶ κολακεύσω, and (as I have restored the Greek) ib. 6 μηδε ΰλη κολακεύσητε. The word is used here in a good sense, as in Clem. Hom. xii. 25 ύπ' έλέου κολακευθείσα επέπειστο εὐεργέτις γενέσθαι κ.τ.λ., χίιι. 16 ή σώφρων τὸν άνδρα ενδιαθέτως φιλεί...κολακεύει, αρέσκει (comp. Apost. Const. i. 2 τη ίδία γυναικί μόνον βουλόμενος άρεσκειν καὶ ταύτην κολακεύειν έντίμως, which can hardly be independent of this passage), xiii. 17 ἄκουσαν αὐτὴν πρὸς τὸν σωφρονίζοντα ἀεὶ εἰσέρχεσθαι λόγον ἀνάγκασον, κολάκευσον. The advice here is not very different from S. Paul's maxim of 'becoming all things to all men.' The things of this world are to be 'coaxed' into conformity with the will of God.

4. αἴτει] So we should probably

αίτει ίνα σοι φανερωθη· ίνα μηδενός λείπη, καὶ παντός χαρίσματος περισσεύης. ὁ καιρὸς ἀπαιτεῖ σε, ώς κυβερνηται ἀνέμους καὶ ώς χειμαζόμενος λιμένα, εἰς τὸ Θεοῦ

The sentence is paraphrased in g*, ώσπερ γάρ κυβερνήτη άνεμος συμβάλλεται και ώς νητ χειμαζομένη λιμένες εὔθετοι εἰς σωτηρίαν, οὕτω καὶ σοὶ τὸ ἐπιτυχεῖν θεοῦ, which points to the same reading as GL. The paraphrase of Antioch is very different, ὁ καιρὸς γὰρ ἀπαιτεῖ αὐτόν, ὡς κυβερνήτην πρὸς τοὺς ἀνέμους καὶ τὰς τρικυμίας καὶ ζάλας τῶν πνευμάτων της πορνείας στηναι γενναίως καὶ όδηγεῖν τοὺς χειμαζομένους ἐπὶ τὸν λιμένα τοῦ θελήματος τοῦ θεοῦ. See the lower note.

read, as the evidence suggests. The form of the sentence is suddenly changed. Otherwise we should expect $\tau \grave{a}$ δὲ ἀόρατα αἰτοῦντί σοι φανερωθη̂, or words to that effect. For this sudden transition to an imperative in the antithetical clause comp. Magn. II πεπληροφόρησθε, Trall. 2 ὑποτάσσεσθε, Smyrn. 4 προσεύχεσθε. In all these examples scribes have shown a leaning towards a more obvious mode of expression. See the vv. ll. in the several passages.

φανερωθη The other reading φανερωθείη would perhaps seem more apt here, as expressing greater diffidence; but in the N.T. at all events final particles like $\tilde{v}va$ are never found with the optative; comp. Winer \S xli. p. 360.

μηδενὸς λείπη κ.τ.λ.] James i. 4 sq ἐν μηδενὶ λειπόμενοι' εἰ δέ τις ὑμῶν λείπεται σοφίας, αἰτείτω κ.τ.λ., 1 Cor. i. 7 ὑμᾶς μὴ ὑστερεῖσθαι ἐν μηδενὶ χαρίσματι.

5. ὁ καιρὸς κ.τ.λ.] Hippol. de Antichr. 5 (p. 4 Lagarde) ἐπειδὴ καιρὸς λοιπὸν ἀπαιτεῖ κ.τ.λ., where La-

ώς κυβερνήται κ.τ.λ.] There was perhaps some early corruption in the text here. The Syriac ut gubernator navem hardly makes sense, for we should naturally expect ut gubernatorem navis. On the other hand, the Greek text ώς κυβερνηται ανέμους, making the crisis the captain and Polycarp the breeze, is certainly not what we should expect. I can only conjecture that the original reading was ώς κυβερνήτην ναῦς καὶ ώς ἀνέμοις χειμαζόμενος λιμένα. The variations at all events suggest the existence of both words, ναῦς and ἄνεμος, in the original text in some form or other. When so read, the metaphor is intelligible. 'The ship of the Church is tossed to and fro on the ocean of the world. It is a critical moment, a tempestuous season. You must be both its ἐπιτυχεῖν. νῆφε, ὡς Θεοῦ ἀθλητής τὸ θέμα ἀφθαρσία καὶ ζωὴ αἰώνιος, περὶ ἦς καὶ σὺ πέπεισαι. κατὰ πάντα σου ἀντίψυχον ἐγὼ καὶ τὰ δεσμά μου ἃ ἤγάπησας.

helmsman and its haven; must guide its course and afford it a shelter. So will it arrive at God, its destined goal.'

This is the earliest example of a simile which afterwards was used largely by Christian writers. The comparison of the Church to a ship is drawn out at great length in Clem. Hom. Ep. Clem. 13 sq δυνήσεσθε είς τον της αναπαύσεως ένεχθηναι λιμένα, ένθα μεγάλου βασιλέως έστιν είρηνική πόλις. ἔοικε γὰρ ὅλον τὸ πρᾶγμα τῆς έκκλησίας νητ μεγάλη διὰ σφοδροῦ χειμώνος ἄνδρας φερούση κ.τ.λ., where the writer dwells chiefly on the personnel of the vessel, the owner being God, the captain Christ, the mate the bishop, the sailors the presbyters, etc. It is elaborated also by Hippolytus de Antichr. 59 (p. 30 Lagarde) θάλασσα δέ έστιν ὁ κόσμος, έν ώ ή έκκλησία ώς ναθς έν πελάγει χειμάζεται μεν άλλ' οὐκ ἀπόλλυται, ἔχει γὰρ μεθ' έαυτης τον έμπειρον κυβερνήτην Χριστον κ.τ.λ., where this father dwells especially on the furniture of the ship, the mast being the Cross, the two rudders the two covenants, the undergirding ropes the love of Christ, with much more to the same effect. The ship is one of the ornaments which Clement of Alexandria allows a Christian to wear, doubtless as representing the Church; Paed. iii. ΙΙ (p. 289) ναῦς οὐριοδρομοῦσα (for so it should be read). On the use of this particular symbol as an ornament, see Smith and Cheetham's Dictionary of Christian Antiquities, s. v. Gems, I. p. 715. In the Apost. Const. ii. 57 we have probably the earliest instance of the application of this metaphor to the material building, ὅταν συναθροίζης τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐκκλησίαν, ὡς ᾶν κυβερνήτης νηὸ μεγάλης...καὶ πρῶτον μὲν ὁ οἶκος... ἔοικε νη‡, after which the writer describes the functions of the different officials in reference to the building, having regard to this simile.

This simile was used of the State by classical writers long before it was applied by Christians to the Church. It is found as early as Alcæus Fragm. 28 (Bergk), a passage which has been imitated in the familiar ode of Horace Carm. i. 14. In Plato Resp. vi. p. 488 it appears at some length (comp. Polit. p. 302), as also in Polyb. vi. 44, in both which passages it is applied to mutiny and disorder in the crew. For other examples see Orelli's Excursus on Horace l. c.

Μοτ. 59 Ϝ ἄσπερ ἀθλητὴν ἀλείπτης ἐῶν μεθύειν καὶ ἀκολασταίνειν, Horace Ars Poet. 412 sq. This is probably the idea also in the parallel passage, 2 Tim. iv. 5 σὰ δὲ νῆφε ἐν πᾶσιν, κακοπάθησον, as the direct reference to the ἀγὼν and δρόμος in ver. 7 seems to show.

τὸ θ έμα] 'the prize'; see e.g. C. I. G. 2758, 2759, 2954, 3082, 3493 (at Aphrodisias, Ephesus, Troas, and Thyatira), and esp. Orac. Contests were of two kinds, either oreφανίται or ἀργυρίται (Athen. xiii. p. 584 C); for which latter word θεματικοί or θεματίται was a synonyme (Pollux iii. 153). Two Smyrnæan inscriptions make mention of $\theta \epsilon \mu a$ τικοὶ ἀγῶνες, C. I. G. 3208, 3209.

ηγάπησας] 'didst welcome, caress, fondle'; see Smyrn. 9 ἀπόντα με καὶ παρόντα ήγαπήσατε. The word seems originally to have referred to the outward demonstrations of affection. In Hom. Od. xxiii. 214 it is used of welcoming a new comer: in Eurip. Hel. 937 πρόσω σφ' ἀπόντα δακρύοις αν ηγάπων, Suppl. 764 φαίης αν εί παρῆσθ' ὅτ' ἠγάπα νεκρούς, of the last offices paid to the dead. This original sense appears still more strongly in ἀγαπάζω. The application of the term to the inward feeling of love is a later development; and the earlier meaning still appears occasionally. On the other hand I do not know of any instance where it has the very precise sense of φιλείν 'to kiss,' as Bunsen and Zahn (I. v. A. p. 415) would take it here; though it is quite possible that the αγάπησις in this instance might take this particular form, as e.g. in Tert. ad Ux. ii. 4 'ad osculanda vincula martyris' (quoted by Zahn).

III. 'Be not dismayed by false teachers. Stand firm as an anvil. A true athlete will suffer blows that he may win the victory. We must endure all things for God's sake. Grow in diligence. The word δέρειν 'to flay' was originally a vulgar expression in this sense; but in the later language the vulgarity had worn off, and it came to signify merely 'to beat, bruise.' For the application to athletes see e.g. I Cor. ix. 26, Timocles Fragm. Com. III. p. 610 ἑαντοὺς ἀντὶ κωρύκων δέρειν δύνασθε [διακρίνειν]: comp. Luke xii. 56. The suspicion of Mill on Rom. xii. 11, that Ignatius had the reading τῷ καιρῷ δουλεύοντες there, has not much weight, since the passages in the Gospels were more likely to have suggested the expression to him.

For the idea see Seneca de Provid. 2 'Athletas videmus... caedi se vexarique patiuntur... marcet sine adversario virtus: tunc apparet quanta sit quantumque polleat, cum quid possit patientia ostendit,' de Ira ii. 14 'Athletae quoque...ictus doloresque patiuntur, ut vires caedentis exhauriant etc., Epist. 13 'Non potest athleta magnos spiritus ad certamen adferre, qui numquam suggillatus est: ille qui sanguinem suum vidit, cujus dentes crepuere sub pugno, ille qui supplantatus adversarium toto tulit corpore nec projecit animum projectus, qui quotiens cecidit contumacior resurrexit, cum magna spe descendit ad pugnam,' Epist. 78 'Athletae quantum plagarum ore, quantum toto corpore excipiunt... nos quoque evincamus omnia...virtus et firmitas et pax in ceterum parta, si semel in aliquo certamine debellata fortuna est.' Cotelier quotes the Metaphrast Vit. Chrysost. 43 (Op. 1. p. 1161, Migne), where Epiphanius writes to Chrysostom ἀθλητὰ 'Ιωάννη, παίου καὶ νίκα.

τὸν ὑπὲρ καιρόν 'τυλο is above opportunity,' i.e. 'to whom all seasons are alike.' Smith's translation 'omni tempore priorem' would be more appropriate to $\ddot{a}_{\chi\rho\sigma\nu\sigma\nu}$. It fails to recognise the distinction between χρόνος and καιρός: see Trench N. T. Synonyms & lvii. p. 197 sq. The editors before Jacobson read it as one word ὑπέρκαιρον. If such a word had existed, it would mean, as Jacobson points out, 'immoderate': but in the only passage adduced, Xenophon as quoted in Athen. xiv. p. 613 σίτων δὲ ὑπερκαίρων, the text of this author himself (Ages. v. has ὑπὲρ καιρόν.

Occasionally it has the opposite meaning 'instantaneous,' and so 'brief,' 'short-lived,' e.g. Plut. Mor. p. 908 δυστυχείς καὶ ἀχρόνους (comp. Clem. Alex. Strom. viii. 9, p. 931). The corresponding adverb αχρόνως too has both meanings; (1) 'eternally,' e.g. Hippol. Haer. viii. 12, Julian. Orat. iv. p. 156 Spanheim; (2) 'instantaneously,' e.g. Philo de Sacr.

Hom. xii. 10 ύπὸ φροντιστάς ποιήσας με καὶ εἰς Ῥώμην καταλείψας δωδεκαετή (Clement is here speaking of his father). It corresponds to the Latin 'curator'; e.g. φρόντισμα = 'curatio,' Conc. Chalc. Can. 2 (Labb. Conc. IV. p. 1682, ed. Colet.). Like curator, it may refer to the guardianship of orphans or widows, etc., as here, or to the direction of public works, or to the management of finance, e.g. Boeckh C. I. G. 3612 φροντιστήν Δρούσου Καίσαρος, where the officer intended was probably 'curator' (or 'procurator') 'fisci' to this prince.

βάται έδραῖοι. The substantive εὐστάθεια occurs Clem. Rom. 61, 65 (59). It is naturally a favourite Stoic word; e.g. in M. Aurel. v. 18 έπιδεικνύμενος μεγαλοφροσύνην εύστα- $\theta \epsilon \hat{i}$, vi. 10 $\sigma \epsilon \beta \omega$ καὶ $\epsilon \vec{v} \sigma \tau a \theta \hat{\omega}$, and in Epictetus frequently, e.g. iii. 9. 17 τίνος οὖν ἔχω χρείαν ;...τοῦ εὐσταθεῖν, τοῦ κατὰ φύσιν ἔχειν τὴν διάνοιαν, τοῦ μὴ ταράσσεσθαι. Yet it is said to have been especially affected, if not invented, by Epicurus and the Epicureans: Cleomedes Theor. Cycl. ii. 90, Schol. Venet. on Hom. Il. v. 2, quoted by Lobeck Phryn. p. 283, where several examples of this word, which with its congeners was abhorrent to purists, are collected from later classical writers. It was common ground for the ἀταραξία of the Epicurean, the $d\pi d\theta \epsilon a$ of the Stoic, and the elphyn of the Christian.

πυκνότερον κ.τ.λ.] See for this injunction the note on Ephes. 13, where the meaning of πυκνότερον is discussed. See also Magn. 4 with the note.

συναγωγαί 'gatherings, meetings.' The word is applied to Church gatherings among Jewish Christians, who would naturally adopt the name of the 'synagogue,' in James ii. 2; see Trench N. T. Syn. § 1, p. 1 sq.

See also Test. xii Patr. Benj. 11 έν συναγωγαίς έθνων (the prophecy relating to S. Paul). In Ignatius however it is not employed as a technical term, but resembles the use of ἐπισυναγωγή in Heb. x. 25 μή έγκαταλείποντες την έπισυναγωγήν έαυτών κ.τ.λ.; comp. Hermas Mand. χι όταν έλθη ὁ ἄνθρωπος ὁ έχων τὸ πνεθμα τὸ θείον είς συναγωγήν ἀνδρών δικαίων (and several times in the context), Theoph. ad Autol. ii. 14 δέδωκεν ὁ Θεὸς τῷ κόσμῳ κυμαινομένῳ ...τας συναγωγάς, λεγομένας δε έκκλησίας άγίας, έν αἷς καθάπερ λιμέσιν κ.τ.λ.

9. πλέον δουλευέτωσαν] A reminiscence of I Tim. vi 2 μη καταφρονείτωσαν ὅτι ἀδελφοί εἰσιν, ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον δουλευέτωσαν: see also I Cor. vii. 21 εὶ καὶ δύνασαι ἐλεύθερος γενέσθαι, μᾶλλον χρησαι, according to one, though not the most probable, interpretation (see Epistles to Colossians etc. p. 324 sq). τονος έλευθερίας ἀπὸ Θεοῦ τύχωσιν· μὴ ἐράτωσαν ἀπὸ τοῦ κοινοῦ ἐλευθεροῦσθαι, ἵνα μὴ δοῦλοι εὐρεθῶσιν ἐπιθυμίας.

I. ἀπὸ τοῦ κοινοῦ] 'from the common fund, the public money? See Apost. Const. iv. 9, where it is said of the disposal of the alms of the Church, άθροιζόμενα χρήματα διατάσσετε είς άγορασμούς άγίων, ρυόμενοι δούλους κ.τ.λ. As the money available for this purpose was limited, it was necessary to select cases of special hardship; and a general anxiety of slaves to obtain their emancipation in this way was to be deprecated. For this sense of $\tau \delta$ κοινον see e.g. Herod. vii. 144, Thucyd. vi. 6, Polyb. x. 17. 2, Orig. Comm. in Matt. xv (111. p. 674); and even without the article, so that ἀπὸ κοινοῦ is 'from the common stock,' Xen. Anab. iv. 7. 27, v. 1. 12, Arist. Pol. ii. 9. Others would take τὸ κοινὸν here to be 'the community,' and Lucian Peregr. 13 τῶν Χριστιανῶν στελλόντων ἀπὸ τοῦ κοινοῦ is quoted in support of this (see Zahn I. v. A. p. 333). But with έλευθεροῦσθαι we should certainly expect ὑπὸ τοῦ κοινοῦ, not ἀπὸ τοῦ κοινοῦ, in this sense. Other interpretations, which have been proposed, do not deserve discussion.

V. 'Shun the evil arts of false teachers, and warn thy flock against them. Admonish wives to be faithful to their husbands, and husbands to cherish their wives. Let not those who remain in single chastity parade their virtue. Let those who marry seek the approval of the bishop for their union. Let all things be done for the honour of God.'

4. Τας κακοτεχνίας The meaning here is not obvious in itself, but is shown by the parallel passage, Philad. 6 φεύγετε οὖν τὰς κακοτεχνίας, where it is a warning against the schismatical designs of the false teachers. See Clem. Alex. Strom. 1.8 (p. 340) οδς φίλη ή στωμύλος αυτη κακοτεχνία, είτε "Ελληνες είεν είτε καὶ βάρβαροι σοφισταί (with reference to the heresy condemned in I Tim. vi. 3 sq), Theodt. H. F. i. Ι τῆς τούτου [τοῦ διαβόλου] κακοτεχνίας ύπουργός άνεφάνη (speaking of Simon Magus). So too κακοτέχνως, Hippol. Haer. vi. 9, also of Simon Magus. It was used especially of 'magical arts,' and of these most commonly as connected with heretical teaching; e.g. Euseb. Vit. Const. iii. 66, quoted by Jacobson. There is something to be said for giving it this very definite sense here, as is done e.g. by Hilgenfeld A. V. p. 206. Witchcraft, sorcery, and the like (γοητεία, φαρμακεία), were highly attractive in these regions; and against them Christian teachers waged internecine war from the first (see Acts xix, 19, and the note on Gal. v. 20); comp. Ephes. 19 ἐλύετο πᾶσα μαγεία. Thus κακοτεχνίαι would correspond with the Latin 'maleficia,' e.g. Tac. Ann. ii. 69 'carmina et devotiones...aliaque maleficia'; see also Heumann Handlex. des Röm, Rechts s. v. But it may be doubted whether these arts were practised by the heretics in question, and the parallel passage (Philad. 6) must fix the interpretation. Cureton (C. I. p. 172) thinks that it means 'nothing more than an improper means of gaining a livelihood' (comp. Strabo vii, p. 301 for the general sense of the word), including however magical arts among these; and so Zahn (I. v. A. p. 321). The emendation of Bunsen, τὰς κακοτέχνους 'coquettish women,' has met with no favour. In a list of practical exhortations we need not look for any close connexion with the preceding or following topics.

μᾶλλον δὲ κ.τ.λ.] This qualifies the previous prohibition, 'Shun them indeed, but do not forget to warn your hearers against them'; where τούτων refers to the foregoing κακοτεχνίας, and not (as it is taken by Pearson and some others) to what follows. For μᾶλλον δέ comp. I Cor. xiv. 1, 5. The fidelity with which Polycarp observed this injunction in after-life appears from the account of him left by his scholar Irenæus, iii. 3. 4 πολλούς ἀπὸ τῶν προειρημένων αίρετικών έπέστρεψεν έπὶ τὴν έκκλησίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, μίαν καὶ μόνην ταύτην ἀλήθειαν κηρύξας ύπὸ [ἀπὸ?] τῶν ἀποστόλων παρειληφέναι. The reading μή ποιοῦ, as the critical note shows, has no authority and therefore need not be seriously considered, though it has found favour with some modern critics.

5. ὁμιλίαν ποιοῦ] 'hold discourse,' as Justin Dial. 85 (p. 312) τὸν ἀπὸ τῶν γραφῶν τῶν προφητικῶν ὁμιλίας ποιούμενον, ib. 28 (p. 245) ἀπό τε τῶν γραφῶν καὶ τῶν πραγμάτων τάς τε ἀποδείξεις καὶ τὰς ὁμιλίας ποιοῦμαι. For this use of ὁμιλία, 'a conversation,' 'discourse,' and so even a 'sermon,' 'homily,' comp. also Justin Dial. 68 (p. 294), Clem. Hom. Ep. Clem. 2, 14, 18, 19, ib. i. 20, Theoph. ad Autol. ii. 1, Clem. Alex. Strom. iv. 13 (p. 603). In Prov. vii. 21 πολλῆ ὁμιλία it is a translation of πρὸ 'instruction.'

6. τοις συμβίοις The word σύμ-Bus is common for a husband or a wife in this age and even earlier; comp. Diod. Sic. iv. 46, Philo de Congr. Erud. Gr. 12 (I. p. 527), Test. xii Patr. Jud. 23, Clem. Hom. xiii. 5, xiv. 6, 11, xx. 18, Hermas Vis. ii. 2. In the inscriptions during the Roman period it is especially frequent. In those of Smyrna alone, to which place this letter was written, I find it several times, C. I. G. 3265, 3270, 3318, 3320, 3347, 3349, 3361, 3364, 3380; and in those at Troas, from which it was written, though very few in number, it occurs twice, 3586, 3588 b. I mention these facts, because Donaldson (Abostolic Fathers p. 388) has alleged its use as an argument against the genuineness of the Greek text of καὶ πνεύματι. όμοίως καὶ τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς μου παράγγελλε ἐν ὀνόματι Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἀγαπᾶν τὰς συμβίους, ὡς ὁ Κήριος τὰν ἐκκλης ἱαν. εἴ τις δύναται ἐν άγ-

Hermas, and an evidence of a later To the Christians it would perhaps be an especially welcome term, because it would cover those unions of slaves which are called contubernia, and which the Christian Church regarded as not less sacred and inviolable than wedlock among the free-born, though the Roman law did not recognise such a thing as marriage among slaves; comp. esp. Apost. Const. viii. 31 (speaking of slaves) εὶ μὲν οὖν ἔχει γυναῖκα ἡ ἡ γυνή ἄνδρα, διδασκέσθωσαν άρκεῖσθαι έαυτοις. On this subject see Allard Les Esclaves Chrétiens p. 152 sq. p. 274 sq, and Colossians p. 321. The passage from the Apost. Const. just quoted seems to show that Ignatius had especially in view such cases, where the union being ignored by the law naturally led to great irregularities.

ἀρκεῖσθαι] 'to be content.' Besides Apost. Const. viii. 31 (see last note) comp. Alexander in Joseph. B. J. ii. 7. 4 σὺ δὲ οὖκ ἀρκεσθεῖσα τούτω [sc. τῷ γάμω], Epiphan. Ancor. 104 (p. 107) μὴ ἀρκουμένης τοῖς ἔξωθεν ἀνδράσων, quoted by Pearson. The Anglo-Latin translator has stumbled, and translates it 'sufficere,' as if ἀρκεῖν.

εί τις δύναται κ.τ.λ.] Comp. Clem.

Rom. 38 ὁ άγνὸς ἐν τῆ σαρκὶ ἦτω καὶ μη ἀλαζονεύεσθω, with the note (comp. ib. § 48), Minuc. Felix 31 'Casto sermone, corpore castiore, plerique inviolati corporis virginitate perpetua fruuntur potius quam gloriantur.' In this place άγνεία is clearly 'virgin purity,' like άγνὸς in Clem. Rom. l. c.; though the words themselves will apply equally well to the chastity of married life (e.g. Tit. ii. 5, 1 Pet. iii. 2, Clem. Rom. 1, Polyc. Phil. 4). The language of S. Paul (I Cor. vii. I sq) is quite sufficient to explain the state of things as it appears in Ignatius half a century later than the Apostle's time. A few years afterwards Justin Martyr, Apol. i. 15 (p. 62), says πολλοί τινες καὶ πολλαὶ έξηκοντοῦται καὶ έβδομηκοντοῦται, οἱ ἐκ παίδων έμαθητεύθησαν τῷ Χριστῷ, ἄφθοροι διαμένουσι καὶ εὔχομαι κατὰ πᾶν γένος ανθρώπων τοιούτους δείξαι: see also Athenag. Suppl. 33 to the same effect. For the ever-increasing and somewhat extravagant feeling which prevailed in the Church during the second and third centuries on this point, see Probst Kirchliche Disciplin p. 129 sq. On the other hand there is no indication here of an 'order' of virgins, such as we meet with soon after. See also on this point the note on Smyrn. 13.

4. τῆς σαρκὸς τοῦ Κυρών] 'the flesh, the body, of the Lord'; which is explained by I Cor. vi. 15 sq οὖκ οἴδατε ὅτι τὰ σώματα ὑμῶν μέλη Χριστοῦ ἐστίν;...δοξάσατε δὴ τὸν Θεὸν ἐν τῷ σώματι ὑμῶν: see [Clem. Rom.] ii. 14. It is true of all Christians that their flesh is the Lord's, not their own nor another's; but it is especially true of those contemplated here: comp. Tertull. de Virg. Vel. 16 'Nupsisti Christo, illi tradidisti carnem tuam,' Cypr. Epist. lxii (p. 699 Hartel) 'Membra Christo dicata et ad aeternum continentiae honorem pudica virtute devota'; comp. Method. Conv. iii. 8, iv. 5, v. 4.

5. έὰν γνωσθη κ.τ.λ.] 'if it be known beyond the bishop'; where the nominative to $\gamma \nu \omega \sigma \theta \hat{\eta}$ is 'his purpose or vow of chastity,' as implied in the preceding words. Just as persons intending to marry are to marry 'with the approval (γνώμης) of the bishop,' so persons devoting themselves to a single life are to take the bishop into their counsels, but no one else; comp. Magn. 7 μηδε ύμεις άνευ του έπισκόπου και τών πρεσβυτέρων μηδέν πράσσετε, μηδέ πειράσητε εύλογόν τι φαίνεσθαι ίδία ύμιν. The precept of Ignatius thus contrasts with the usage of a later age, where the public profession of such vows was an essential feature in the system. If $\pi \lambda \dot{\eta} \nu$ be the right reading, the interpretation which I have given seems to be necessary. For similar elliptical usages of πλην (where the context explains the meaning) comp. Thuc. iv. 54 ἐπιτρέψαι περί σφών αὐτών πλην θανάτου, Herod. v. 71 ύπεγγύους πλην θανάτου, Plato Resp. v. p. 469 σκυλεύειν...τούς τελευτήσαντας πλην ὅπλων, [Arist.] de Plant. ii. 4 (p. 825) οἱ δὲ τόποι οἱ ψυχροί, εὶ καὶ οὖτοι τὸ ὅμοιον ποιοῦσί ποτε, πλην έκ τοῦ έναντίου, Polyb. xii. 22. Ι μακρου αν είη λέγειν πάντα, πλην τελέως ολίγων (comp. xi. 25. 6). There is no sufficient reason however for displacing the reading πλέον here; comp. Magn. 10 ἄλλφ ὀνόματι καλείται πλέον τούτου. And if πλέον be adopted, the passage should still probably be interpreted in the same The Greeks were very loose and elliptical in their comparative clauses; see the examples in Kühner II. p. 850 sq. The Oriental versions must either have had πλήν, or must have interpreted πλέον in this way. On the other hand several modern critics take it otherwise, 'if he be better known than the bishop,' 'if he become more famous than the bishop'; but I cannot think this at all a natural expression in the present context. See the passages in the next note.

6. $\xi \phi \theta a \rho r a l$ 'he is corrupted,' i.e. 'his chastity is violated by the very publicity given to it,' the word $\phi \theta \epsilon l \rho \epsilon l \nu$ being chosen for its special meaning; comp. e.g. Rev. xix. 2. γαμούσαις] In so reading I have followed the Mss of the interpolator's text, whereas the Ms of the genuine Ignatius has the more correct γαμουμέναις. The familiar distinction (e.g. Pollux iii. 45 γῆμαι μὲν ἐπὶ τοῦ ἀνδρὸς λέγεται, γῆμασθαι δὲ ἐπὶ τῆς γυναικός, οὐ γαμηθῆναι) apparently holds universally in classical writers, except where some reversal of the natural relation is implied, as when the henpecked husband in Anti-phanes says ἐγημάμην (see Porson on Eurip. Med. 264); comp. also Clem. Alex. Paed. iii. 3 (p. 264). Accordingly Irenæus writes v. 9. 4 νύμφη γαμήσαι οὐ δύναται, γαμηθήναι δὲ δύναται [the passive however is forbidden by Pollux l. c.], ὅταν ἔλθη καὶ παραλήψηται αὐτὴν ὁ νυμφίος, where the Latin translator has 'sponsa assumere sponsum non potest, assumi autem a sponso potest.' This distinction however is not observed in the N. T., but the active is used of the woman by S. Paul, I Cor. vii. 28, 34, 1 Tim. v. 11, 14; and in Mark x. 12 γαμήση ἄλλον is unquestionably right, though most texts have $\gamma a\mu\eta\theta\hat{\eta}$ $\mathring{a}\lambda\lambda\omega$. This last instance betrays a tendency in later transcribers to return to classical forms; and, as in these small matters the MSS of the interpolator are generally more trustworthy than that of Ignatius himself, I have adopted γαμούσαις.

2. κατὰ Κύριον] As Clem. Alex. Strom. iii. 12 (p. 549) ἀλλοῖος δὲ ὁ κατὰ τὸν Κύριον γάμος. Ignatius is apparently thinking of S. Paul's words I Cor. vii. 39 μόνον ἐν Κυρίφ.

Be long-suffering one with another. Give me joy in all things.'

5. Τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ κ.τ.λ.] Ignatius here turns from Polycarp individually and addresses the whole Church of Smyrna. In the subsequent part of the letter, whenever he has any message directed specially to Polycarp, he mentions him by name; e.g. § 7 πρέπει, Πολύκαρπε κ.τ.λ., and § 8 τοῦ πέμποντος αὐτὸν Πολυκάρπου. Like the Pastoral Epistles of S. Paul, this letter was obviously intended to be made known to the Church also. Polycarp (Phil. 13) apparently puts it in the same category with the Epistle to the Smyrnæans, speaking of the two as τὰς ἐπιστολὰς Ἰγνατίου τας πεμφθείσας ήμιν ύπ' αὐτοῦ. For the admonition see Philad. 7.

7. $\mu\epsilon \tau'$ $\alpha \vartheta \tau \hat{\omega} \nu \kappa \tau \lambda$.] A biblical expression; comp. Matt. xxiv. 51, Luke xii. 46, Rev. xxi. 8. There can be little doubt, I think, looking at the authorities, that the correct reading here is $\pi a \rho \hat{\alpha} \Theta \epsilon \hat{\phi}$ in the presence of God,' for it explains all the others.

8. συγκοπιᾶτε] This word prepares the way for συναθλεῖτε, συντρέγετε, since κοπιᾶν is used especially of the toilsome training for an athletic contest; comp. Phil. ii. 16 ouk είς κενον έδραμον οὐδε είς κενον έκοπίασα, Col. i. 29 είς δ καὶ κοπιῶ ἀγωνιζόμενος, Ι Tim. iv. 10 είς τοῦτο κοπιώμεν καὶ ἀγωνιζόμεθα, [Clem. Rom.] ii. 7 οἱ πολλὰ κοπιάσαντες καὶ καλῶς άγωνισάμενοι. So Anthol. III. p. 166 μὴ τρέχε, μὴ κοπία. The metaphor of the athletic training, etc., probably continues to the end. Thus συγκοι- $\mu \hat{a} \sigma \theta \epsilon$, $\sigma \nu \nu \epsilon \gamma \epsilon i \rho \epsilon \sigma \theta \epsilon$, will refer to the uniform hours of going to bed and getting up prescribed by the trainer to the athletes under his charge. Any reference to 'death' and 'resurrection,' such as some commentators have found in these words, seems altogether out of place.

Pearson supposes a reference to the three orders of the ministry, the οἰκονόμοι being bishops, the πάρεδροι presbyters, and the ὑπηρέται deacons; but how then is the plural οἰκονόμοι to be explained?

πάρεδροι] 'assessors' of God; a stronger expression even than S. Paul's Θεοῦ συνεργοί (I Cor. iii. 9, I Thess. iii. 2 v. l.), but it is immediately qualified by ὑπηρέται. For ὑπηρέτης in connexion with οἰκονόμος ἀρέσκετε κ.τ.λ.] 'please the Captain under whom you serve,' probably a reminiscence of 2 Tim. ii. 3, 4, οὐδεὶς στρατευόμενος ἐμπλέκεται ταῖς τοῦ βίου πραγματείαις, ἵνα τῷ στρατοτὰ ὀψώνια] 'soldier's pay,' as e.g.

I Cor. ix. 7 τίς στρατεύεται ἰδίοις ὀψωνίοις ποτέ; Luke iii. 14; and probably the reference is the same in the other two passages where the word occurs in the N. T., Rom. vi. 23, 2 Cor. xi. 8. So always in the LXX, I Esdr. iv. 56, I Macc. iii. 28, xiv. 32. It is the Greek equivalent to the Latin 'stipendia'; for the word obsonia in Latin seems never to have acquired this meaning. The derivation of the word explains its use. The soldier's reward for his service was twofold; (1) a ration in kind, which was an allowance of corn (σιτομέτρημα) for making bread, and (2) a small payment in money (οψώνιον), by which he might purchase a relish $(\mathring{o}\psi o\nu)$ to be eaten with his bread: as in Polyb. vi. 39. 12 sq οψώνιον δ' οί μέν πεζοί λαμβάνουσι...σιτομετροῦνται οί μεν πεζοί κ.τ.λ., С. Ι. G. 3137 τά τε μετρήματα καὶ τὰ ὀψώνια (an inscription found at Smyrna itself); comp. Dion. Halic. A. R. ix. 36. 5 76 τ' όψωνιον τῆ στρατιᾶ καὶ τὸ ἀντὶ τοῦ σίτου συγχωρηθέν...άργυρίον (where the rations could not be supplied in kind). In Greek οψωνία is the act of purchasing όψα, while όψώνιον is the money for purchasing them and is used almost exclusively of soldier's pay. In Latin however the derived word obsonium has a different sense. From ¿ψωνείν the Romans adopted obsonari, 'to purchase delicacies, to cater,' and from this they used the substantive obsonium to signify food so purchased, 'delicacies,' without reference to the meaning of the corresponding Greek οψώνιον.

2. δεσέρτωρ] For the same metaphor see Clem. Rom. 21 μη λιποτακτείν ήμας ἀπὸ τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ, ἐὐ. § 28 τῶν αὐτομολούντων ἀπ' αὐτοῦ, Clem. Hom. xi. 16 ὁ μη ποιῶν τὸν νόμον ἐκ τοῦ μὴ πιστεύειν τῷ Θεῷ λιποτακτεῖ

(comp. Ep. Clem. 12, 17).

The adoption of Latin words in a Greek writer is natural in technical and more especially in military terms (e.g. here, and δεπόσιτα, ἄκκεπτα, below); and from Ignatius who was in charge of a στρατιωτικὸν τάγμα and bound to a soldier night and day (Rom. 5), nothing else was to be ex-

Op. VII. pp. 34, 726), Evang. Nic. 2 sq κούρσωρ, σίγνα, φακεώλιον, etc; besides the instances familiar to us in the N. T., e.g. centurio, euraquilo, flagellum, legio, lintium, membrana, paenula, praetorium, quadrans, semicinctium, sudarium, etc. The only other instance in Ignatius is έξεμπλάριον; see the note on Ephes. 2. The gloss apyès which appears on δεσέρτωρ in the Greek MS is taken from Ps-Ign. Tars. 9.

3. ωs οπλα 'as your shields,' as the context requires. The Latin translator rightly renders it scutum. Comp. Xen. Anab. i. 2. 17 ἐκέλευσε προβαλέσθαι τὰ ὅπλα (where however it might include spears as well), Polyb. 10 ύπερ τον δρύφακτον ύπερτιθέμενοι τὰς ἴτυς τῶν ὅπλων. This sense seems to be more frequent in Hellenistic Greek; LXX I Kings x. 17 τριακόσια ὅπλα χρυσᾶ κ.τ.λ., Ps. xc. (xci). 5 οπλφ κυκλώσει σε ή αλήθεια αὐτοῦ (and several times elsewhere in the LXX), Aquila Hos. xi. 8 ὅπλω κυκλώσω σε (where the LXX has ὑπερασπιῶ σου), Test. xii Patr. Levi 5 έδωκέ μοι ὅπλον καὶ ρομφαίαν, Barnab. 12 τίθησιν οὖν Μωυσῆς ἐν ἐφ' ἐν ὅπλον.

See also Macar. Magn. Apocr. ii. 7 (p. 6) πίστιν έχοντες τὸ ξίφος καὶ ὅπλον τον σταυρόν. This meaning of ὅπλου is preserved both in the derivative όπλίτης 'bearing the heavy-shield', as opposed to the πελταστής 'bearing the light-target,' and in the secondary meaning of the word itself 'a medallion,' like the Latin 'clypeus,' e.g. C. I. G. 124 εἰκόνα γραπτὴν ἐν ὅπλω (see Boeckh's note, II. p. 664). This sense explains μενέτω; 'Hold out your baptismal vows, your baptismal privileges, as a shield before you. Do not throw away your best defence, and incur the reproach of a ρίψασπις in this sacred warfare.'

4. πανοπλία] Here 'the complete body-armour,' breast-plate, greaves, etc: for nothing else remains. Patience protects the whole spiritual man, wherever the blow is aimed. Comp. Act. SS. Tarach. Prob. etc. 7 (Ruinart p. 465, Ratisb. 1859) οὐδὲ γὰρ δύνασαι τὴν πανοπλίαν μου βλέπειν τυφλὸς ἄν.

This passage was doubtless suggested by Ephes. vi. 13—17, which it closely resembles, though the parts of the armour are differently assigned in the metaphor. The resemblance to I Thess. v. 8 is less. Comp. also Is. lix. 17.

τὰ δεπόσιτα] When a donative was accorded to the soldiery, one half only was paid at the time, the remaining half being placed in a savingsbank attached to the cohort. This money was said 'deponi apud signa' (Sueton. Dom. 7, Veget. ii. 20); and the fund was managed by a special officer entitled 'curator fisci' (e.g. Orell. Inscr. 3462). We read also of a 'librarius depositorum' (Dig. 1. 6. 7), perhaps the clerk who kept this deposit account. The deposits however, as entered in the name of any soldier, would include other items besides, e.g. other portions of donatives voluntarily so deposited, prizemoney, etc. The 'peculium' thus accumulated was paid over to the soldier at his discharge, or an equivalent in land given to him. See Becker and Marquardt Röm. Alterth. III. 2, p. 429. 'Accepta' would thus be the sums placed to his credit and ultimately paid over to him. The Castrense Peculium is the subject of a work by H. Fitting (Halle, 1871). It was the special privilege of this kind of property ('quae sunt parta labore militiae'), that it was secured to the man himself, and was accordingly exempted from the patria potestas, on the principle enunciated in [Juv.] xvi. 58 sq, 'Ipsius certe ducis hoc referre videtur, Ut qui fortis erit, sit felicissimus idem, etc.', where the fact is stated. The exceptional character of this kind of property gives its force and appropriateness to the image here. Cotelier moreover aptly quotes Veget. ii. 20 'Miles...qui sumptus suos scit apud signa depositos, de deserendo nihili cogitat, magis diligit signa, pro illis in acie fortius dimicat, etc.' Those who deserted or were dismissed for misconduct would forfeit all this accumulated property. For the metaphor comp. August. Op. V. Appx. p. 150 'Milites igitur Christi sumus, et stipendium ab ipso donativumque percepimus etc.', in a sermon by an unknown writer. The metaphor of the signum (σύσσημον) appears in the companion epistle, Smyrn. I.

1. ἄξια] 'due', i.e. 'corresponding to the deposita,' as in [Juv.] xvi. 56 'Hunc labor aequus provehit et pulcro reddit sua dona labori,' speaking of this same thing.

3. μεθ' ὑμῶν] sc. μακροθυμεῖ, as above ἵνα καὶ ὁ Θεὸς ὑμῖν sc. προσέχη (see the note). I should not have thought it necessary to explain the construction, if Jacobson had not quoted Phil. iv. 5 ὁ Κύριος ἔγγυς, apparently led astray by the Armenian mis-rendering 'quasi Deus sit in mediis vobis.'

6. ἀμεριμνία Θεοῦ] For this genitive Θεοῦ, describing the character of the preceding substantive, comp. Magn. 6 ὁμουοία Θεοῦ with the note.

7. Θεοῦ ἐπιτύχω] See the note on Magn. 1.

έν τη αλτήσει ύμων] 'through your supplication.' For the expression see Ephes. 20 ἐάν με καταξιώση 'Ι. Χ. έν τη προσευχη ύμων, Philad. 8 θέλω έν τη προσευχή ύμων δικαιωθήναι, Smyrn. ΙΙ ΐνα ἐν τῆ προσευχῆ ὑμῶν Θεοῦ ἐπιτύχω. The word αἴτησις occurs only once elsewhere in Ignatius (Trall. 13), but he uses it rather than προσευχή here because he had already exhausted the latter word in the context. For the idea of 'discipleship,' as the final result of martyrdom, see the note on Ephes. I dià τοῦ ἐπιτυχείν δυνηθῶ μαθητής είναι. In the connexion διὰ τοῦ παθεῖν... μαθητήν, Ignatius probably has in his mind the proverb παθήματα μαθήματα; comp. e.g. Æsch. Agam. 177 τον πάθει μάθος θέντα κυρίως έχειν (comp.

ib. 257), Herod. i. 207 τὰ δέ μοι παθήματα ἐόντα ἀχάριτα μαθήματα γεγόνεε, Philo de Leg. Spec. 6 (II. p. 340) τὰ ἐκ τοῦ παθεῖν μάθη, with other passages quoted by Wetstein and Bleek on Heb. v. 8 ἔμαθεν ἀφ' ὧν ἔπαθεν.

This reading is to be preferred, both on account of the parallel passage in the companion epistle, Smyrn. 11, and by reason of the combination of authorities for it. If it had stood in the interpolator's text alone, it might have been classed with such wilful changes of $\theta \in \lambda \eta \mu a$ for $\theta \in \mu a$ above § 2, άγνοτάτης for άγνίζομαι Ephes. 8, διαλυθήναι for δῦναι Rom. 2, where similarity of sound has suggested the substituted word. But the coincidence of the Armenian Version shows that it was already in the text of Ignatius. On the other hand it has not the authority of any MS of the Latin Version, as commonly represented. At the same time the other reading, ἐν τῆ ἀναστάσει, would make very good sense; comp. Ephes. 11 έν οἷς γένοιτό μοι αναστήναι έν τη προσ- $\epsilon v \chi \hat{\eta}$ $\dot{\nu} \mu \hat{\omega} \nu$. The opposition would then be between $\pi a \theta \epsilon \hat{\imath} \nu$ and $\hat{a} \nu \hat{a} \sigma \tau a \sigma \imath s$, as in Rom, 4 έαν πάθω...άναστήσομαι έν αὐτῶ έλεύθερος. And for ὑμῶν μαθητήν (which in this case must be taken together) comp. Ephes. 3 with the note.

3. χειροτονήσαί τινα] Similar instructions are given in the companion letter, Smyrn. 11. Polycarp himself refers to this intended delegate, Phil. 13 Έγράψατέ μοι καὶ ὑμεῖς καὶ Ἰγνάτιος ἵνα, ἐάν τις ἀπέρχηται εἰς Συρίαν, τὰ παρ' ὑμῶν ἀποκομίση γράμματα ὅπερ ποιήσω...εἴτε ἐγὼ εἴτε ὁν πέμψω πρεσβεύσοντα καὶ περὶ ὑμῶν.

4. θεοδρόμος] 'God's courier.' The word is used here in reference to the special mission, which he was promptly (ἄοκνον) to execute. In Smyrn. II he is styled θεοπρεσβύτης. On the other hand in Philad. 2 θεοδρόμοι is used of the Christian course generally. Lucian seems to be referring to these directions of Ignatius, de Mort. Peregr. 4I, where he says of Peregrinus, previously a Christian, but now a Cynic, φασὶ δὲ πάσαις σχεδὸν ταῖς ἐνδόξοις πόλεσιν ἐπιστολὰς διαπέμψαι αὐτὸν διαθήκας τινὰς καὶ παραινέσεις καὶ νόμους· καὶ τινας ἐπὶ τούτω πρεσβευτὰς τὰς τῶν ἐταίρων ἐχειροτόνησε νεκραγγέλους καὶ νερτεροδρόμους προσαγορεύσας.

- 5. πορευθείς εἰς Συρίαν] The object of this mission is more distinctly stated in Philad. 10, Smyrn. 11, as the congratulation and encouragement of the Church at Antioch. The delegate was to bear a letter from the Smyrnæans.
- 7. Θεῷ σχολάζει] 'devotes his time to God'; Clem. Alex. Strom. ii. 10 (p. 236) ἡ ἄγαμος μόνφ σχολάζει τῷ Θεῷ. The sentiment here has reference to the Smyrnæans generally, but to the individual messenger more especially.

10. τὸ σύντονον] 'intensity, directness', properly 'tension'; comp. Philo Leg. ad Cai. § 20 (p. 565 M) τὸ τάχος καὶ σύντονον τῆς σπουδῆς. This therefore is probably the reading here, rather than τὸ σύντομον; but the words are constantly confused. Sometimes they occur together; e.g. Plut. Mor. p. 759 D σύντονον ὁμοῦ καὶ σύντομον εὐρηκέναι πορείαν εἰς ἀρετήν, Clem. Alex. Paed. i. 3 (p. 103) τὰς συντόμους δδοὺς καὶ συντόνους εἰς ἀιδιότητα, Julian. Orat. vii. ταις έμπροσθεν έκκλησίαις 'the churches lying in front,' i.e. nearer to Syria than Smyrna itself. The writer naturally imagines himself looking towards Antioch, whither the delegates are to be sent. Ignatius had been unable himself to write to any of these, except Philadelphia, since they lay at too great a distance from Troas. For $\xi \mu \pi \rho o \sigma \theta \epsilon \nu$ comp. Xen. Anab. v. 6. 9 πολεμίων πολλών έμπροσθεν ὄντων. Uhlhorn (p. 31) refers to Herod. vii. 126 πάσης της ἔμπροσθεν Εὐρώπης, but he himself prefers explaining it by the Semitic use of מקדם 'in front,' i.e. eastward. This is quite unnecessary. Other explanations which have been suggested hardly deserve consideration.

The sentence, οἱ μὲν δυνάμενοι...αἰωνίφ ἔργφ, must be regarded as parenthetical, so that ώς ἄξιος ὤν will be connected with γράψεις...ὡς Θεοῦ γνώμην κεκτημένος, and refer to Polycarp himself. Much unnecessary difficulty has been made about this singular ἄξιος ὧν by translators and commentators.

but I find one Ti. Claudius Epitropus in an inscription, Muratori MCLI. 10. Perhaps the word is wrongly taken as a proper name; and we should rather translate, 'the wife (or widow) of the procurator.' Mention is made in the inscriptions at Smyrna of an officer called ἐπίτροπος στρατηγός οι ἐπίτροπος τῆς στρατηγίας (C. I. G. 3151, 3162), and perhaps this officer may be meant. Another Smyrnæan inscription speaks of o ἐπίτροπος τοῦ Σεβαστοῦ (C. I. G. 3203). This woman is not improbably the same with Gavia mentioned in the companion epistle, Smyrn. 13 τον οίκον Γαουίας κ.τ.λ.

7. "Ατταλον] This name appears many times in inscriptions and coins belonging to Smyrna, C. I. G. 3141, 3142, 3239, 3288, 3289, 3299, 3304, 3331, Mionnet III. pp. 232, 233, Suppl. VI. p. 309 (?), 344. The coins belong to the time of M. Aurelius.

τὸν μέλλοντα κ.τ.λ.] The θεοδρόμος, about whom he has given directions in the preceding chapter. The Syriac epitomator, having struck out the whole of the preceding passage which explains who is meant, substitutes here 'him that is thought worthy to go to Antioch in my stead, as I commanded thee.' His abridgment rendered some explanation necessary; but his language would suggest to the reader that the person in question was intended to succeed Ignatius as bishop. There is no reason to think that the epitomator himself intended this, or that this was anything more than a piece of slovenly wording, such as characterizes his abridgment elsewhere.

ἐπισκοπŷ] 'superintendence.' He had begun the letter by speaking of Polycarp as ἐπεσκοπημένος ὑπὸ Θεοῦ κ.τ.λ. There is therefore much propriety in his ending with διαμείνητε κ.τ.λ. The reading ἐπισκόπου however is ancient, as the Armenian Version shows, though its presence in any Greek texts has no authority. It would make good sense; comp. ACTS OF MARTYRDOM OF S. IGNATIUS.

Ι.

THE ACTS OF MARTYRDOM of S. Ignatius appear in five forms.

- I. The Antiochene Acts. These are extant in three languages.
- (i) GREEK; Paris. 1451 (formerly Colbert. 460). From this Ms the Acts were first published by Ruinart (Act. Prim. Mart. Sinc. 1689, p. 605 sq). No other Greek Ms of these Acts is known to exist.
- (ii) LATIN; attached to the Anglo-Latin Version of the Ignatian Epistles discovered and published by Ussher in his edition (1644) from two MSS.
- (iii) SYRIAC; first published in part by Cureton (Corp. Ign. p. 222, London, 1849) and afterwards entire by Moesinger (Supplementum Corporis Ignatiani, 1872, p. 7 sq). Four Mss of this version are known to exist, of which two are imperfect at the end.

As these Antiochene Acts incorporate the Epistle to the Romans, a full account of the Mss in the three languages has been given already in the notices of the Mss of the Ignatian Epistles. The original Greek is printed below; and the Latin and Syriac will be found in the Appendix.

- 2. The ROMAN ACTS, which are extant in the original Greek and in a Coptic Version.
 - (i) GREEK. Of this I am not aware of more than three MSS.
- (a) Vatic. 866. From this MS Dressel first published these Acts in his edition of the Patres Apostolici (1857). He thus describes it: 'membraneus, foliis dimidiatis 395, saeculi x. Ex eo (fol. 185—188) 'Acta Martyris Ignatii' deprompsi inedita. Alia insunt martyria, epistolae sanctorum, similiaque adhuc parum cognita.'
- (b) Bodl. Laud. Graec. 69, fol. 245 b—255 a. This ms is described in Coxe's Catal. Cod. Graec. Bibl. Bodl. p. 552 sq³. It is a large fol. in parchment, of the 11th century, and contains a Martyrology for December. The Martyrdom of Ignatius is preceded by μαρτύριον τοῦ ἀγίου βονηφατίου καὶ πολιτεῖα ἀγλαΐδος fol. 240 b, and followed by βίος καὶ μαρτύριον τῆς άγίας μάρτυρος ἀναστασίας καὶ τῶν σὺν αὐτῆ μαρτυρησάντων ἐν ῥώμη fol. 255 b. Ussher gave some extracts from this ms in his Ignatii et Polycarpi Epistolae 1644, and in his Appendix Ignatiana 1647; but, notwithstanding the interest of the subject, it has lain unexamined since. I have collated it throughout for this edition. The iota is adscript, not subscript.
- (c) Paris. Bibl. Nat. Grace. 1491 (formerly Colbert. 450), fol. 86 a, col. 2—fol. 93 b, col. 2. (See the Catal. Bibl. Reg. 11. p. 338.) It is a folio in double columns in a bold cursive hand, without iota adscript or subscript, and appears to have been written in the 11th century. The Martyrdom of Ignatius is preceded (fol. 64 b) by βίος τοῦ ὁσίου πρς ἡμῶν βλασίου, and succeeded (fol. 94 a) by τοῦ ὁσίου πρς ἡμῶν καὶ ὁμολογητοῦ θεοδώρου κατήχησις ἐπιτάφιος εἰς τὴν ἑαυτοῦ μητέρα. The volume is mainly occupied with the Acts of saints and martyrs who are commemorated in the latter half of December. This copy of the Roman Acts has never, so far as I am aware, been noticed before. I have collated it throughout for this edition. It is quite the most important authority for the text.
- (ii) COPTIC. These Acts are extant in the two principal dialects of the Coptic language, (a) the Memphitic and (β) the Thebaic or Sahidic.

Acts are contained in two Oxford Mss. If Zahn has rightly apprehended Smith's meaning (for his words are somewhat ambiguous), Smith is certainly in error; for the Martyrdom of Ignatius in Barocc. 192 is that of the Metaphrast.

- (a) The Memphitic is found in Vatic. Copt. lxvi. This Vatican MS is described by Quatremère Recherches sur la Langue et la Littérature de l'Égypte p. 128 sq (Paris 1808), and by Assemani in Mai Script. Vet. Nov. Coll. v. Appx. p. 161 sq (see also Bibl. Orient. 1. p. 618). It is a parchment Ms in fol., of 313 leaves, written in various hands, and contains a Martyrology for the Egyptian month Epiphi. The Martyrdom of Ignatius begins the volume (fol. 1). The third document in the volume has a note appended to the effect that it was given to the church of S. Macarius in Scete, A. Mart. 641 (A.D. 925); and the fifth is stated to have been written A. Mart. 634 (A.D. 918). At the close of the volume is a note bearing the date A. Mart. 741 (A.D. 1025). A transcript of this MS, made by Tuki, belonged to the Borgian collection (Cod. xviii)1, and is described by Zoega Catal. Cod. Copt. Mus. Borg. This transcript is now probably in the Naples Library, with the other patristic and kindred MSS belonging to the Borgian collection. Professor Guidi, with his habitual kindness, made a transcript of the Vatican Ms for me; and from his transcript this Coptic Version was published for the first time in my first edition. It will be found in the Appendix in the third volume of the present edition, p. 281 sq.
- (β) The Sahidic or Thebaic is preserved in Taurin. Papyrus I, in the Egyptian Museum at Turin; described by Peyron in his Lexicon Linguae Copticae p. xxv. It is a papyrus of 63 leaves and contains (1) 'Martyrium S. Ignatii Antiochiae Episcopi'; (2) 'Martyrium S. Gioore'; (3) 'Historiam, seu potius fabulam virginis Eudoxiae imperatoris Constantini sororis, quae post Persas a fratre devictos Hierosolymam contendit etc; haec vero contigerunt anno 365 post Christi resurrectionem.

This Sahidic text has been published since the appearance of my first edition, with a translation, by F. Rossi in his Papyri Copti del Museo Egizio di Torino, in the part bearing the title Vita di Sant' Ilarione e Martirio di Sant' Ignazio, Torino 1886, being taken from the Memorie della Reale Accademia delle Scienze di Torino, Serie 2, Tom. XXXVIII. From this I have taken the various readings for my apparatus criticus in the present edition.

The earlier part of these Coptic Acts (as far as § 3 ὑπὸ ἀπίστων) in both dialects was published by Revillout in the Revue Égyptologique III. p. 34 sq (1883), the Thebaic text being placed below the Memphitic on the same page. The two texts were taken from the two MSS described above, and indeed I am not aware of any other MS of either version.

Ign. p. 362) writes loosely, 'It is marked Catalogue of the Borgian MSS'.

Though Revillout's publication had appeared before my first edition (1885), I was unaware of the fact. My own text of the Memphitic Acts had been passed through the press some time before its appearance.

It is evident at once that these two versions are not independent the one of the other. Not only do they follow the same text with the same insertions and omissions, but they render the Greek in the same way. The one therefore must have been taken from the other; and further examination shows that the priority should be assigned to the Thebaic. Though here and there we stumble on a passage which seems to point to the Memphitic as the original, yet these are capable of being explained otherwise. On the other hand the phenomena which indicate that the Thebaic is the parent of the Memphitic are too numerous and decisive to be set aside. Occasionally the Memphitic preserves a purer form of the Egyptian text where the existing Thebaic Ms is corrupt; but, as a rule, the Thebaic text is found to be older and closer to the original Greek.

From what has been said, it will have appeared that the two cannot be regarded as independent authorities; but as each manuscript is mutilated in parts by the loss of a leaf or leaves, they supplement each other, and no part is wanting to both versions. The Memphitic omits a considerable portion of the 6th chapter; the Thebaic is defective at the beginning and leaves out parts of the 10th and 11th chapters. There are likewise smaller omissions in other parts.

Cureton (C. I. p. 362), while giving an extract from Peyron, speaks of these Coptic Acts as if they were a translation of the Colbertine or (as I prefer to call them) the Antiochene Acts, though Peyron's own words ought to have saved him from this erroneous identification. Zoega (l. c.) writes somewhat carelessly, 'Auctor videtur esse Heron quidam, nam circa finem inter alias invocationes S. Ignatii legitur apiquesi anekumpi upon Memento filii tui Heronis.' The fact is that the Acts are followed by the Prayer of Hero, of which these words form part; but there is nothing to connect the Acts themselves with Hero. Zahn (I. v. A. p. 3, note 6) is perplexed by this statement of Zoega, as repeated by Tattam, and says that, if the statement be correct, this must be different from any known Martyrdom of Ignatius.

3. The BOLLANDIST ACTS, extant only in Latin. A portion of these was published by Ussher in his Appendix Ignatiana (1647) from a Cotton Ms. This was, I suppose, Otho D. viii (see the Catalogue p. 369), since charred and rendered illegible by the fire. They were afterwards given in full in the Bollandist Acta Sanctorum Febr. I, 'ex pluribus eisque vetustissimis codicibus MSS desumpta, et cum Rosweydo olim, tum nobis communicata: eorum praecipui sunt Lobiensis, Audomarensis, Ultrajectinus, aliusque Burgundicus a Chiffletio nostro transmissus'. The most convenient and best text is that of Funk (1881), who collated several manuscripts. Manuscripts of these Acts seem to be numerous. Sometimes they are attached to the Latin version of the interpolated and spurious Ignatian Epistles: e.g. Troyes 412; Brussels 5510; Brussels 703 (perhaps a transcript from the preceding); Paris. Bibl. Nat. 1639 (formerly Colb. 1039). These MSS have already been described among the authorities for the text of the Ignatian Epistles. Sometimes the Acts of Martyrdom are apart from the epistles: e.g. Bodl. Laud. Lat. 31, fol. 118 a; Laud. Miscell. 114, fol. 61 b; Sangall. 454.

- 4. The Armenian Acts, first published by J. B. Aucher in his Armenian Lives of all the Saints of the Armenian Calendar (Venice 1810—1814), and reprinted from him by Petermann in his edition of Ignatius (p. 496 sq). As these Acts contain the Epistle to the Romans, they have been already noticed in the account of the authorities for the text of the Ignatian Epistles.
- 5. The ACTS OF THE METAPHRAST. As these also contain the Epistle to the Romans, they have been noticed already in the account of the MSS of the Ignatian Epistles.

The short Latin Acts, published by Moesinger (Suppl. Corp. Ignat. p. 18 sq) from a Ms in the Vallicellian Library at Rome (see ib. p. 5), may be dismissed at once; as they are put together from Rufinus'

1 It is necessary to warn readers who use Petermann's edition for these Acts, that he has omitted a long paragraph, 'Fuerunt autem custodientes ... pejores fiunt', at the end of § 3 (p. 487) without any notice of the omission. It appears in its proper place in the Bollandist Acta Sanctorum p. 29 sq, but is omitted by Ussher (p. 5), because Ussher was only concerned with those parts which were taken from the Antiochene Acts, and this piece comes from the Roman Acts. Petermann seems to have copied Ussher and omitted it through inadvertence, as his purpose is to give these Acts complete. Zahn (I. v. A. p. 18, note) is misled by Petermann. This paragraph certainly appears in the only two MSS which I have consulted for this part, Laud. Lat. 31, and Laud. Miscell. 114. So again in § 1 Petermann (p. 484) and Zahn (l. c.) treat the words 'secundus post apostolos factus, qui post Euodium' as an interpolation in the Bollandist MSS, whereas they were probably omitted by Ussher though found in his Cotton MS, because there was nothing corresponding to them in the Antiochene Acts. The alternative hypothesis, that some later scribe interpolated them from the Roman Acts, is highly improbable.

Latin version of Eusebius and the account of Ignatius in the Martyrology of Ado (see Zahn I. v. A. p. 30).

The next point is to determine the mutual relations of the five documents described in the last section. And here our task is easy. The two first-mentioned Acts, which (for reasons which will appear presently) I have called the Antiochene and the Roman respectively, are quite independent the one of the other; while the remaining three are combinations of these two more or less modified.

1. The first of these five documents begins with an account of the successful administration of the Antiochene Church by Ignatius under the persecution of Domitian and during the early part of Trajan's reign (§ 1). We are then carried forward to the ninth year of Trajan. The emperor, elated by his victories over the Scythians and Dacians, is exasperated by the refusal of the Christians to worship the gods of heathendom. Their subjugation is necessary to crown his triumphs. He is now at Antioch, preparing for his expedition against Armenia and the Parthians. Ignatius is summoned before him. After some altercation, which turns entirely on the word $\theta\epsilon\phi\phi\rho\sigma$, Trajan condemns the saint to be carried a prisoner to Rome and there to be thrown to the wild-beasts. With much thanksgiving he invests himself in his chains (§ 2). The narrative of the journey to Rome is given at some length. It more resembles the progress of a conqueror than the transportation

1 Ussher seems to have rightly divined the relations of the Bollandist Acts (which he read in the Cottonian MS) to the two independent works which I have called Antiochene and Roman Acts respectively (see his preface); but he was unacquainted with the Armenian Acts and does not appear to have paid sufficient attention to the Metaphrast. To Zahn (I. v. A. p. 10 sq) belongs the credit of having first stated distinctly the relations of the five documents to each other. Some years before Zahn's book appeared, I had myself investigated these relations and arrived at the same results. Indeed a careful comparison of the documents themselves can only lead to one conclusion. On the other hand, Aucher confidently maintained that the Armenian Acts were translated from the original document, of which all the others were abridgements or modifications (see Petermann pp. 496 sq, 545); but it must be remembered, as an excuse for this very untenable view, that he was unacquainted with the Roman Acts which are the key to the solution. About the time when Zahn's book was published, Kraus (Theolog. Quartalschr. Lv. p. 115 sq, 1873) discussed the various Acts of Ignatius, but did not trace their relations.

of a convict. From Antioch he goes to Seleucia the port-town, where he takes ship for Smyrna. Arrived at Smyrna, he enjoys the society of Polycarp, formerly his fellow-disciple under the tuition of S. John. Here he receives delegates from the churches, and exhorts them to second his desire of martyrdom (§ 3). As a reward for their kindly attention, he writes letters of exhortation to them. At this point the Epistle to the Romans is inserted to show the spirit of his letters (§ 4). From Smyrna he is hurried forward by his guards to Troas; thence by ship to Neapolis; thence by land through Philippi and Macedonia to Epidamnus, where again he embarks. The course of the vessel is through the Adriatic and Tyrrhene seas to Portus. As they pass by Puteoli, he desires to land there, so that he may tread in the footsteps of S. Paul; but adverse winds prevent this. At Portus he disembarks (§ 5). Leaving this place, he and his companions are met by 'the brethren' who had heard the rumour of his coming. He entreats them not to interpose and rob him of his crown. Immediately on his arrival he is carried to the amphitheatre. It is the great 'thirteenth' day, and the spectacle is already drawing to a close. He had prayed that his remains might not give any trouble to the brethren. His prayer is granted. The beasts devour all but the more solid bones. These are carried back to Antioch, and preserved as reliques there (§ 6).

This happened on the xiii Kal. Jan., in the consulship of Sura and Senecio II. His companions, who relate the facts, were comforted during the night following by various appearances of the martyred saint. They write this account to the Antiochene Church, that the very day of the martyrdom may be religiously observed (§ 7).

Thus it appears that in these Acts the centre of interest is Antioch. Antioch is the scene of the interview and condemnation; at Antioch the martyr's remains are deposited and venerated. It will be seen also hereafter, that these Acts were probably written at Antioch, and that their principal circulation at first was in this city and neighbourhood. I have therefore called them the Antiochene Acts.

2. The second of these documents likewise gives the date as the 9th year of Trajan, but the consuls are differently named, Atticus Surbanus and Marcellus. Ignatius, the successor of Euodius as bishop of Antioch, is sent to Rome in custody of ten soldiers of the body-guard, of whose cruelty he complains in his letter. He is taken through Asia, and thence to Thrace and Rhegium (§ 1). From Rhegium he sails to Rome. At Rome he is heard by Trajan in the presence of the senate.

The emperor attempts at first to bribe him; he will make him highpriest of Jupiter and share his sovereignty with him, if he will recant. Ignatius refuses (§ 2). Then ensues a long altercation between the emperor and the saint, in which the senate from time to time joins. Ignatius ridicules the myths of the gods and assails their morality. Trajan intersperses his part of the dialogue with arguments more powerful than words; he threatens and inflicts a series of the most excruciating tortures, but without producing any effect. This interview extends over several long chapters ($\sigma_3-9\). The emperor ends by condemning him to starve in prison three days and nights, that he may be brought to his senses. The senate confirms the sentence (§ 9). On the third day Ignatius is led into the theatre in the presence of the emperor, the senate, the prefect, and the Roman mob. At the last moment he is offered his release, if he will deny his faith. He refuses. Two lions are let loose upon him. They crush him to death, but do not devour any part of his flesh. This was done, we are told, that his reliques might shield from harm the city, 'in which Peter was crucified and Paul was beheaded and Onesimus was perfected' (§ 10).

But Trajan is dismayed at his own act; and to increase his dismay, letters arrive from Pliny informing him how the innocent Christians press forward in crowds to suffer death for their faith. So he allows the body of the saint to be buried. The Christian brethren deposit it in a place where they can meet together safely from time to time to commemorate his martyrdom (§ 11).

After this the writer adds the testimony of Irenæus and Polycarp to the circumstances of Ignatius' life (tacitly borrowed from Euseb. H. E. iii. 36); and the whole closes with the mention of the day of the commemoration—the 1st of Panemus (July)—and the name of the martyr's successor Hero (§ 12).

As in the former case the interest of the story centred in Antioch, so here it centres in Rome. In Rome the saint is heard and condemned by the emperor; at Rome his body is preserved. I have therefore designated these the Roman Acts. By this designation however it is not meant to imply that they were actually written in Rome. They can hardly have been composed before the beginning of the fifth century at the very earliest; and long before this time Greek had ceased to be the vulgar tongue of the Church in Rome. There are some indications indeed, as I shall point out hereafter, that these Acts were written at Alexandria; but, whether intentionally or not, they are subservient to the interests of the Roman Church.

These two Acts of Martyrdom are quite independent, the one of the other. They unite indeed in assigning the martyrdom to the 9th year of Trajan; but in all the other details they are not only distinct, but contradictory to each other, agreeing only in the main facts of a journey to Rome, an interview with Trajan, and a martyrdom in the amphitheatre.

In the remaining three documents in which these two conflicting accounts are combined in different ways, the patch-work is more or less apparent.

- 3. The clumsiest form of the combined narrative appears in the Bollandist Acts. In this recension little or no attempt is made to fuse the Antiochene and Roman Acts. In the incidents at Antioch and the journey to Rome the former account is followed (Mart. Ant. $\mathbb{X} = -5), with two unimportant exceptions in \ 1—a notice giving the succession to the see of Antioch and a paragraph relating to the cruel treatment of his guards—both these being insertions from the Roman Acts (see above, p. 367, note). As soon as Ignatius arrives in the metropolis. the latter account is taken up and continued to the close (Mart. Rom. $$ 2-12). Thus the end of the first document and the beginning of the second are knocked off; and the two, thus mutilated, are joined together. The narrative at its joining runs thus: 'Denique una die et ea nocte prosperis ventis usi pervenerunt ad urbem Romam: et nuntiaverunt imperatori de adventu ejus.' This sentence is made up of τοιγαρούν εν μιὰ ήμέρα καὶ νυκτὶ τῆ αὐτῆ οὐρίοις ἀνέμοις προσχρησάμενοι from Mart. Ant. 5, followed by παραγίνονται [v. l. παρεγένοντο] έν τη 'Ρώμη' καὶ προσήνεγκαν τῷ αὐτοκράτορι τὴν ἄφιξιν αὐτοῦ from Mart. Rom. 2. The result of this agglutination is utter incongruity. Trajan appears first at Antioch and then at Rome, but how he got from the one place to the other does not appear. Ignatius has an altercation with him in both cities. The condemnation takes place twice over. The editors of the Acta Sanctorum can only explain this startling incongruity by supposing that some chapters have been displaced. Generally these Acts of Martyrdom are a corrupt rendering, first of the Antiochene, and then of the Roman account, running off occasionally into paraphrase. The day of commemoration is altered in the last paragraph to the Kalends of February in accordance with the Roman usage.
- 4. The Armenian Acts are a more successful attempt to amalgamate the two narratives. The compiler is not satisfied with agglutination, as in the former case, but aims at fusion. He strives to work in all, or nearly all, the incidents of both accounts, and yet to guard the unity of the story. From the Antiochene Acts he has taken the whole account of the interview with Trajan at Antioch, the journey to Rome, and the martyrdom, borrowing here and there an incident or an expression from the Roman Acts. To the Roman Acts he is indebted for the lengthy altercation between the emperor and the saint, with the account of the tortures inflicted on the latter in the course of this examination. This portion of the story however he has transferred from Rome to Antioch, inserting it in the midst of the conversation between Trajan and Ignatius as given in the Antiochene Acts, and thus the incongruity of the Bollandist Acts, which relate two interviews with Trajan at different places and two condemnations, has been avoided. Occasionally the compiler has inserted notices which have no counterpart in either the Antiochene or the Roman narrative, and these he perhaps invented himself. But with one or two exceptions (see below, p. 373), the insertions are slight and unimportant. The Armenian version is unfortunately so edited that it is not always easy to separate the notices inserted by the editor Aucher from the body of the Armenian text which he had before him. One chapter (§ 50), which gives an account of the authorship of this document, is described by Petermann as 'additamentum editoris'; by which expression he probably means Aucher, as Zahn (I. v. A. p. 24) takes him to mean. In this chapter it is stated that the copy before the writer was 'translated from the Greek.' If this statement is Aucher's own, we should be glad to know on what authority he made it. If we may judge from his language in his preface (see Petermann, p. 496), he had no authentic information on this point, but offers it as his own decided opinion. There is no reason however for questioning its truth1. The amalgamation of the two narratives is much more likely to have been the work of a Greek compiler than of an Armenian translator.

This Armenian Martyrdom is made up as follows:

§ 1—5 (pp. 497—505, ed. Petermann), 'Paulo ante...male pereant,' from Mart. Ant. §§ 1, 2, "Αρτι διαδεξαμένου ... κακῶς ἀπολοῦνται: but the notice § 1 'etenim Evodium excepit' is taken from Mart. Rom. 1; in § 3 a paragraph is inserted from Mart. Rom. 1 (see above, p. 367, note); and in § 5, where Mart. Ant. 2 has ὡς δὲ κατὰ πρόσωπον ἔστη Τραϊανοῦ, it substitutes 'et ut stetit coram Trajano ct senatu,' in order to account for the senate taking part in the proceedings as represented in Mart.

Rom., which is afterwards followed. In § 4 it is worthy of notice that, whereas in one place Ignatius voluntarily goes to Trajan (after Mart. Ant. 2 ἐκουσίως ἦγετο), in another he is represented as ordered into the emperor's presence (after Mart. Rom. 2 ἐκέλευσεν...εἰσαχθῆναι αὐτόν). There are also amplifications and explanations (e.g. that Trajan succeeded Nerva) due to the redactor himself, if not to Aucher.

§ 5 (p. 505) 'qui et Antiochenorum ... christianismum,' from Mart. Rom. 2 ὁ τὴν 'Αντιοχέων ... εἰς τὸν χριστιανισμόν.

§ 6—35 (pp. 505—533) 'Utinam possem ... ego vice fiam,' from Mart. Rom. 2—10 εἴθε, βασιλεῦ, οἶός τε ἤμην ... ὃν ποθῶν ἄπειμι πρὸς αὐτόν. But here again to prepare the way for the transition to the Antiochene narrative, we have an insertion in § 34, 'etenim festinabat in Armeniam et ad Parthos,' taken from Mart. Ant. 2 σπουδάζοντα... ἐπὶ ᾿Αρμενίαν καὶ Πάρθους. In this portion of the Armenian Martyrdom there is also a long passage inserted (§§ 9, 10, p. 509) 'sicut et priusquam crucifigeretur ... argillam illuminationi oculorum dabat inservire,' which is not found in either of the Greek narratives, and which contains an account of our Lord's miracles somewhat irrelevant to the matter in hand. So again § 17 has no counterpart in either the Roman or the Antiochene Acts.

§ 36—46 (pp. 533—541) 'Trajanus dicit; Cruci affixum...festinabat deinde intrare in theatrum,' from Mart. Ant. 2—6 Τραϊανὸς εἶπεν Τὸν σταυρωθέντα ... ἀπήχθη μετὰ σπουδῆς εἶς τὸ ἀμφιθέατρον. At the end of § 41 the redactor has inserted a note of his own to the effect that Ignatius calls himself Θεοφόρος in the superscription of all his epistles.

§§ 47, 48 (pp. 542, 543) 'et quum haec dixisset ... proverbiorum auctor dixit.' This portion of the narrative, the account of the actual martyrdom and the reliques, presented the greatest difficulty in the fusion, since the two Greek narratives directly contradict each other. The redactor fuses them as follows:

Thus in this section the Antiochene story is followed as regards the two main points in which it differs from the Roman—the devouring of the body with the exception of the harder bones and the translation of the reliques to Antioch. At the same time portions of the Roman story relating to both these points are introduced with modifications. (i) The wild beasts in the Roman story are said to 'crush him to death only' (ἀπέπνιξαν μόνον), this mode of death being invented to account for the body being preserved whole. The incident of the 'crushing' is retained, but the qualifying adverb 'only' ($\mu\acute{o}\nu or$) is omitted, and the beasts proceed to devour the body. (ii) The deposition of the reliques and gatherings of the Roman brethren to commemorate the martyr are also adopted from the Roman story; but the account is introduced by the words 'sed tunc,' to show that this was only their temporary resting-place, prior to their translation to Antioch, § 49 (pp. 543—545) 'et dum nos noctem...Januarias,' the account of the appearances of Ignatius to his friends on the night after the martyrdom, from Mart. Ant. 7 ἐγένετο δὲ ταῦτα ... μακαρίσαιτες τὸν ἄγιον; but the date is transferred from the beginning to the end of this section; the day is altered from xiii Kal. Jan. to ix Kal. Jan. (apparently to suit the Armenian Calendar); and the names of the consuls are omitted.

§ 51 (pp. 545, 547) 'Novit ejus martyrium ... gavisuros esse,' from Mart. Rom. 12 οἶδεν δὲ αὐτοῦ ... ἀφεληθήσεσθε, the passage of Eusebius containing the testimony of Irenæus and Polycarp respecting Ignatius.

§ 52 (p. 547) runs 'Pone verba Polycarpi addit Eusebius Illud quidem, quod de sancto Ignatio crat et martyrium ejus hucusque; excepit cpiscopatum Antiochiae Heron.' This corresponds to Mart. Rom. 12 τοῦτο Ἰγνατίου τὸ μαρτύριου ... "Ηρων, where however the name of Eusebius is not mentioned. The editor then continues 'At pone has Eusebianas sectiones rursus profert collectio [i. e. Actorum] tanquam ex ore genuini auctoris sic.' The words which follow are an amalgamation:

'Memoriam Deo dilecti et probi athletae Ignatii in Hrotitz mensis die primo [secundum Graecos Decembr. 20] manifestavimus vobis et diem ut tempore martyrii congregati participes fiamus ... in saecula saeculorum. Amen.'

This date, 1st Hrotitz (i.e. July), taken from the Roman story, is quite inconsistent with the previous date, ix Kal. Jan., modified from the Antiochene.

5. The two documents last mentioned, while combining the Antiochene and Roman stories, appropriate not only the incidents but the very language of these narratives. The Acts which bear the name of Symeon the Metaphrast use the materials much more freely1. With a higher literary aim, the author recasts both the diction and the incidents, toning down the ruggedness of the one and rejecting the more revolting features of the other. But though he alters without scruple, it is easy to trace the influence of one or other of the independent narratives throughout the main part of his composition. Like the author of the Armenian Acts, he borrows the dispute with Trajan from the Roman story and transfers it in like manner to Antioch. discussion however is much curtailed, and the tortures are omitted. At the commencement he introduces the story that Ignatius was the child whom our Lord took up in His arms and blessed (§ 1); and at the close, where he mentions the translation of the reliques from Rome to Antioch (§ 24), he seems to be recalling the language of S. Chrysostom in his panegyric on the martyr (Op. 11. p. 600 B, ed. Bened.). With these exceptions, he does not appear to employ any other sources of information but the two independent Acts of Martyrdom, which he amalgamates.

Our first impulse is to suppose that the Metaphrast had before him not the two independent narratives, but the same combined narrative which the Armenian translated from the Greek into his own language. The discussion on the name Θεοφόρος from the Antiochene story is interrupted in the same way by interposing the altercation with Trajan from the Roman story; and in the account of the scene in the theatre and the disposal of the reliques there is a similar juxtaposition of features derived from both narratives. But a closer examination dispels this first impression. The Metaphrast preserves portions from each story, which are not found in the combined narrative of the Armenian Acts. Thus for example these last-mentioned Acts have nothing corresponding to § 4 καὶ τί ἐστι θεοφόρος; and ib. τί δὲ ἡμεῖς; οι σοὶ δοκοῦμεν κ.τ.λ. of the Metaphrast, which are adopted and adapted from Mart. Ant. 2, or again to § 27 ἀκούσας δὲ πολλὰ κ.τ.λ. of the Metaphrast, which is taken from the account of Pliny's letter to Trajan in Mart. Rom. 11. Nor again is the sequence the same in the Metaphrast as in the Armenian Acts. Thus in § 4 of the Metaphrast we have in close proximity two pieces of conversation, σὺ οὖν ὁ ἐν ἑαυτῷ τὸν Χριστὸν περιφέρων; ναί, φησί, γέγραπται γάρ· Ένοικήσω κ.τ.λ., and ον εί καὶ αὐτὸς ἐπέγνως ... μονιμώτερα, which appear at an interval of 30 chapters and in the reversed

order in the Armenian version (§ 36, and § 6). It seems probable therefore that the Metaphrast fitted together the two stories for himself; but if he used a combined narrative, it must have been somewhat different from that which was in the hands of the Armenian translator.

It remains to enquire whether either of the two Acts of Martyrdom, which alone have an independent character, the Antiochene and the Roman, deserves any consideration as regards historical credibility.

And here we may at once dismiss the Roman Acts, for internal evidence condemns this work as a pure romance. The exaggerated tortures inflicted on the saint, the length and character of the discourses attributed to him, and the strange overtures made to him by the emperor, all alike are fatal to the credit of the narrative.

Moreover, the writer is not even consistent with himself. He gives the year of the emperor's reign and the names of the consuls at the time of the martyrdom (§ 1, see the note). The one date is irreconcilable with the other. He states also that letters reached Trajan from Pliny after the martyrdom. The receipt of these letters is represented as following so immediately on this event, that they influence the emperor in the disposal of the body (§ 11). This statement again cannot be harmonized with either of the dates given in the opening chapter. The year of the emperor's reign points to A.D. 106, or 105 at the earliest; the names of the consuls give A.D. 104: but the proconsulship of Pliny in Bithynia, and the consequent letters respecting the Christians, cannot date before about A.D. 112 (see below, p. 393 sq).

Nor is there any reason for supposing that this document was founded on an earlier writing or tradition. Zahn indeed has endeavoured to show this (I. v. A. p. 31 sq), but his evidence to my mind fails to establish his point.

(1) His first witness is Jerome. This father (Catal. 16), after giving an account of the letters of Ignatius which is taken altogether from Eusebius (H. E. iii. 36), adds; 'Quumque jam damnatus esset ad bestias, ardore patiendi, cum rugientes audiret leones, ait, Frumentum Christi sum; dentibus bestiarum molar, ut panis mundus inveniar. Passus est anno decimo (v. l. undecimo) Trajani: reliquiae corporis ejus Antiochiae jacent extra portam Daphniticam in coemeterio.' So at least this father's text is read in the common editions. In like manner our martyrologist ascribes these same words to Ignatius (§ 10), when he is actually in the amphitheatre and sees the wild beasts let loose¹. And as Jerome was several times at Antioch from A.D. 373 onward and held intimate relations with the Antiochene Church, it is argued by Zahn that he derived this tradition from Antioch itself, where also he learnt about the burial place of Ignatius.

But what was Jerome's position with relation to Ignatius? There is no evidence that he had ever seen the Ignatian letters. He only twice elsewhere quotes or attempts to quote Ignatius. The one quotation (Comm. in Matth. i. § 1, Op. vII. p. 12) is a stock passage from Ephes. 19, and occurs in a work of Origen Hom. vi in Luc. 1 (Op. 111. p. 938), which Jerome himself translated. The other (adv. Pelag. iii. 2, Op. 11. p. 783) is a mere blunder; for the words which he ascribes to Ignatius belong to Barnabas, and here again he probably owed the quotation to Origen, misnaming however the author. In this very notice of Ignatius in the Catalogue he borrows the whole of the preceding account of the life and letters from Eusebius; but even thus he falls into a strange blunder. Misled by an expression of Eusebius (τη Σμυρναίων ἐκκλησία, ίδίως τε τῷ ταύτης προηγουμένω Πολυκάρπω), he identifies the Epistle to the Smyrnæans with the special letter to Polycarp, and consequently quotes as from the latter a passage which Eusebius gives as from the former (Smyrn. 3). When therefore we find that his account of the saving of Ignatius in the amphitheatre has likewise a parallel in the narrative of Eusebius, which he might easily misunderstand so as to bear this sense, we are led perforce to conclude that here also he was indebted to this same source. The words of Eusebius are: 'And Irenæus also knows of his martyrdom and makes mention of his letters, saying thus: As one of our own people said, when he was condemned to wild beasts for his testimony (μαρτυρίαν) to God; I am the wheat of God, and I am ground (ἀλήθομαι) by the teeth of wild beasts, that I may be found pure bread.' The saying occurs in Rom. 5, whence Irenæus doubtless derived it; but the language of this father, though not incorrect, is sufficiently ambiguous to mislead one unacquainted with the letters, and Jerome accordingly, if the common text be correct, has transferred the saying to the time of the martyrdom, embellishing it with a rhetorical this view untenable. With more cogency Pearson urges (pp. 189 sq, 610) that it does not matter what Jerome meant, since his information is derived at second hand from Eusebius.

¹ Pearson (Vind. Ign. p. 189) suggests that Jerome did not really mean to ascribe these words to Ignatius at the time of martyrdom; but if we retain the common text, which Pearson had before him, I agree with Zahn (p. 32) in considering flourish of his own, 'quum rugientes audiret leones.' But the correct text appears to be 'et ardore patiendi rugientes audiret leones,' and this probably means that in his eagerness for martyrdom the saint already heard by anticipation the roaring of the lions. The author of these Roman Acts, who likewise had Eusebius before him, though not unacquainted with the epistles themselves, has made the same mistake which Jerome is supposed to have made.

(2) The second passage, to which Zahn refers, is taken from the panegyric of Chrysostom on Ignatius. The words of Chrysostom are: 'Therefore that all the inhabitants of Rome might learn these things in deed, God allowed the saint to be martyred (τελειωθήναι) there. And that this was the reason, I will make good (τοῦτο πιστώσομαι) from the very manner of his death. For he did not receive the sentence of condemnation (την καταδικάζουσαν ἐδέξατο ψηφον) outside the walls, in a dungeon (ἐν βαράθρω), nor in a law court, nor in any corner; but in the midst of the theatre, while the whole city was seated overhead, he underwent this form of martyrdom (τον τοῦ μαρτυρίου τρόπον), wild beasts being let loose upon him that he might erect a trophy against the devil before the eyes of all, etc. (Op. 11. p. 599).' These words are taken to mean that the actual conviction of the saint took place at Rome, as represented in the Roman Acts. This interpretation seems to me to be more than doubtful in a highly rhetorical passage as this is1. But even if it were correct, the passage would only show that Chrysostom drew his own inference from the letters, just as the author of our Acts did. The expression κατάκριτος (Rom. 4, Trall. 3, Ephes. 12) is most naturally interpreted to mean that the conviction had already taken place; but this inference that the final sentence had been pronounced is not quite certain, and the fears elsewhere expressed by Ignatius lest he should be robbed of the martyr's crown by the interference of the Romans might easily suggest the opposite conclusion, as it has done to some modern critics.

Nor can any inference, I think, be drawn from another passage of Chrysostom (p. 600 A), 'He considered the mouths of these (the wild beasts) to be much less savage $(\pi o \lambda \lambda \hat{\varphi} \dots \hat{\eta} \mu \epsilon \rho \omega \tau \epsilon \rho a)$ than the tongue of the tyrant. And reasonably too $(\kappa a \lambda \mu \hat{\alpha} \lambda \alpha \epsilon i \kappa \hat{\sigma} \tau \omega s)$; for while it invited him to gehenna, their mouths escorted him to a kingdom.' There are τρόπον ὑπέμεινε, suggests the former meaning. Moreover the preceding words, ἐκεῖ τελειωθῆναι, ἐξ αὐτοῦ τοῦ τρόπου τῆς τελευτῆς, have no reference at all to the trial, but refer solely to the actual martyrdom.

indeed passages in our Acts (§§ 2, 5) to which the allusion might conveniently be referred. But this contrast between the temporal and the eternal tortures was an obvious commonplace of martyrologies; and the threats and blandishments of a tyrant were almost a necessity in such a scene. The elements moreover of Chrysostom's rhetoric are found in the language of Ignatius himself, Rom. 5, 6, 7, where he defies the present tortures for the sake of the future kingdom and denounces the attempts of 'the prince of this world' to corrupt his mind and divert him from his purpose.

(3) Zahn's third argument is built on a coincidence with the spurious Epistle to the Antiochenes. In the Acts of Martyrdom (§ 6) Ignatius, addressing Trajan, describes the Christians as 'obedient to rulers whereinsoever the obedience is free from peril' (ὑποτασσομένους ἄρχουσιν έν οξε ακίνδυνος ή ύποταγή); while to the Antiochenes he is made to write (§ 11), 'Be ye obedient to Cæsar, whereinsoever the obedience is free from peril' (τῷ Καίσαρι ὑποτάγητε ἐν οἷς ἀκίνδυνος ἡ ὑποταγή). Such a coincidence of course cannot be accidental; and Zahn supposes that the saying in these Acts and the injunction in the letter were both derived from a common tradition. He puts aside the alternative solution, that the writer of the Acts took the saying from the spurious epistle, arguing that the martyrologist is only acquainted with the Epistle to the Romans of the seven older letters, and that therefore we cannot suppose him to have had any knowledge of one of the later and spurious epistles. Now it is true, that he does not elsewhere betray any distinct acquaintance with any other Ignatian letter besides the Epistle to the Romans; but his subject matter naturally led him to quote this and this only. The same is the case also in the Menæa and elsewhere, whensoever writers are especially concerned with the martyrdom and the facts connected with it. In such cases the argument from silence ceases to have any value. But I observe that Rhegium is twice mentioned by our martyrologist (§ 1 επὶ τὴν Θράκην καὶ 'Ρήγιον, § 2 "Αραντες οὖν ἀπο 'Ρηγίου); and the name of this same place occurs in one of the spurious epistles (Philipp. 15 συντυχών περί 'Ρήγιον), but no where else (so far as I remember) in connexion with the history of Ignatius. Moreover in these Acts and in the spurious epistles alike it is the only place named between the same limits—Thrace or Philippi to the East, and Rome to the West. But more important still is the fact, which Zahn overlooks, that our martyrologist quotes the Epistle to the Romans from the interpolator's recension. This, I think, is clear from § 2 where Ignatius says, οὐ γὰρ τὸν νῦν ἀγαπῶ αἰῶνα, ἀλλὰ τὸν ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ ἀποθανόντα καὶ ἀναστάντα Χριστόν, compared with a passage in Rom. 6, which stands in the genuine Ignatius ἐκείνον ζητώ τὸν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν ἀποθανόντα, ἐκείνον θέλω τον δι' ήμας αναστάντα, but is read by the interpolator εκείνον ζητώ τὸν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν ἀποθανόντα καὶ ἀναστάντα. Moreover in other passages our martyrologist reproduces expressions that were first inserted into the Epistle to the Romans in the interpolator's recension, though they have also crept into the text of the genuine Ignatius in later authorities; e.g. comp. § 2 ούτε βασιλείας κοσμικής εφίεμαι with Rom. 4 μηδεν έπιθυμεῖν κοσμικόν, ib. τί γὰρ ώφεληθήσομαι ἐὰν τὸν κόσμον ὅλον κερδήσω την δε ψυχήν μου ζημιωθώ with Rom. 6 τί γαρ ώφελειται ανθρωπος έαν κ.τ.λ., $ 3 ο μεν πρόσκαιρος ο δε αιώνιος with Rom. 3 τα γαρ βλεπόμενα πρόσκαιρα τὰ δὲ μὴ βλεπόμενα αἰώνια, § 10 σῖτος γάρ ἐστιν άθανασίας καὶ πόμα ζωής αἰωνίου with Rom. 7 ἄρτον ζωής...καὶ πόμα...ἀένναος ζωή. It is worthy of notice also that the rare word ἀλωπός occurs both in these Acts § 10 and in Ps-Ign. Antioch. 6 (though only as a various reading), and that 2 Cor. vi. 14 sq is quoted both by our martyrologist § 4, and in Ps-Ign. Ephes. 16.

But, if this narrative must be relegated to the region of pure romance, is it possible to determine the place or time of writing?

As regards the place, our first impulse is to attribute it to Rome, since Rome is the centre of interest in the story (see above, p. 370). But inasmuch as there is every reason to suppose that the Greek is the original language of the document, and it is certain that the Roman Church had ceased to speak Greek commonly long before this narrative can have been written, this hypothesis must be abandoned. Certain indications seem to me to point directly to Egypt, and therefore probably to Alexandria, as its birth-place. The date of the anniversary is given according to the Macedonian, and therefore Alexandrian, nomenclature of the months as the 1st of Panemus (for there can be little doubt that this was the original form of the notice, and that it has been altered to Dec. 20 in some authorities to conform to the later Greek festival of the martyrdom). There is good reason also for believing that this day, the 1st of July, corresponding to the 7th of the native Egyptian month Epiphi, was the day assigned to Ignatius in the Egyptian calendar, which in this respect differed from all the other known calendars whether Eastern or Western. Again, the emphatic attack on the animal worship which prevailed in Egypt (§ 4) seems to show a local interest in this form of paganism, just as in the earliest Sibylline Oracles, which emanated from Egypt, we find the same phenomenon (procem. 60-65, 70 sq, iii. 29 sq, v. 77, 278 sq). Lastly, we find this narrative translated into the Coptic, whereas on the other hand the Antiochene story of the martyrdom does not appear, so far as we know, to have found its way into the native Egyptian Church. The relations between Alexandria and Rome were sufficiently close to account for the circulation of these Acts in the Western Church, while the special prominence assigned to Rome in the narrative would secure for them a favourable reception there. To account for this prominence no recondite motive need be sought. A romance writer, founding his story on the single fact that Ignatius was martyred at Rome, would naturally assume that his trial also took place in the metropolis and that his reliques were deposited there. The one inference which may be safely drawn from this treatment is the complete isolation of the writer from the influences of Antiochene sentiment and Antiochene tradition 1.

The time of writing can only be determined within very rough limits. The writer is evidently acquainted with the Ecclesiastical History of Eusebius. Several facts and expressions in the opening chapter (e.g. μετά ἐπιμελεστάτης φρουρών φυλακής, ἀπό Συρίας ἐπὶ τὴν Ῥωμαίων πόλιν. της είς τον Χριστον ενεκα μαρτυρίας, διὰ της 'Ασίας) are taken from this father's account of Ignatius (H. E. iii. 36); and the notice of the correspondence between Pliny and Trajan, together with the testimonies from Irenæus and Polycarp and the name of Ignatius' successor, at the close, is derived from the same source (H. E. iii. 33, 36). Moreover, as we have seen, there are good reasons for believing that the writer was acquainted with the interpolated recension of the Ignatian Epistles, which probably belongs to the latter half of the fourth century and cannot well have been earlier. These facts furnish us with a terminus a quo. For the terminus ad quem, the Coptic papyrus at Turin may perhaps prove an important witness; but of its probable date I am not able to say anything. Failing this, we have recourse to quotations and references; and here our earliest witnesses are Latin writers. The account of Ignatius in the Martyrology of Ado († A.D. 875) is largely taken from this story. Ado however had it before him, not in its original form, but in the combined narrative of the Bollandist Acts. This is also the case with other Latin Martyrologies of the 9th century and later, such as the so-called Bede and Usuard. We must Antiochene tradition point not to the Colbertine [i.e. Antiochene in my nomenclature], but to the Vatican [i.e. Roman] Acts. The tradition may be worthless; but, such as it is, it must be looked for altogether in the former.

therefore allow time for its combination with the Antiochene Acts and for translation into Latin before this date. The corresponding Greek witnesses are later. The Menæa for Dec. 20 show a knowledge of the Roman as well as of the Antiochene Acts; but whether they were used separately, or in a combined form, may be open to question. Zahn (I. v. A. p. 28) argues from the expression σιδηροῖς ὄνυξι (p. 143, ed. Venet. 1863), that the compiler must have used the same combined narrative which is preserved in the Armenian version. The Armenian Acts (§ 31) also introduce the epithet ferreis ungulis, where the Greek has merely τοις ὄνυξι (§ 9). But this inference from the insertion of a single obvious word is not conclusive. In § 4 this same epithet is supplied by the Coptic version. In the Menology of Basil Porphyrogenitus also (circ. A.D. 980), under Jan. 29, a knowledge of these Acts appears (Patrol. Graec. CXVII. 284, Migne). The Laus Heronis is another and probably an earlier witness; but of its date we have no evidence. Ussher was disposed to assign it to the author of the spurious and interpolated Ignatian letters (Ign. et Pol. Mart. p. 131). It has seemed hitherto to be a sufficient answer to this hypothesis that the Laus Heronis, existing only in Latin, was probably written originally in this language (Zahn I. v. A. p. 38). But the discovery of a Coptic version alters the case. It is not very probable that a Coptic version would be translated from Latin, and we are led therefore to postulate a Greek original. Ussher's hypothesis however has nothing to recommend it. We might with greater plausibility urge that this document proceeded from the same author as our Acts, to which it is attached in the Coptic version. But however this may be, the writer seems to be acquainted with our story; for he speaks of Ignatius as 'confounding Trajan and the senate of Rome.' On the whole we may say that these Roman Acts cannot well have been written before the fifth century, and probably were not written later than the sixth.

The claims of the Antiochene Acts deserve greater consideration. Their substantial genuineness has been maintained by Ussher, Pearson, and Leclerc, among earlier critics, and by a considerable number of more recent writers. But the objections which have been urged against them of late, more especially by Uhlhorn (Die Ignatianischen Briefe p. 248 sq) and Zahn (I. v. A. p. 41 sq), must be felt to have the greatest weight; and the only question which can now be seriously entertained is whether—though spurious in their present form—they may not have incorporated some earlier and authentic document and thus contain a residuum of fact. This question will now be considered.

- I. The internal evidence is decidedly adverse to their claims to be regarded as an authentic document, either wholly or in great part. The difficulties under this head are as follows.
- (i) These Acts are not consistent with themselves. They give the year of Trajan in which the martyrdom occurred (§ 2), and the names of the consuls for the year (§ 7). But the two are not easily reconcilable (see the note on § 7 Σύρα καὶ Σενεκίωνος κ.τ.λ.). Still no great stress can be laid upon this discrepancy, since the names of the consuls might easily have been a later insertion.
- (ii) They contradict the genuine Epistles of Ignatius. Eusebius has rightly inferred from the letters that the martyr was carried overland through Asia Minor (H. E. iii. 36 την δι' 'Ασίας ανακομιδήν... ποιούμενος); and in this he is followed by the author of the Roman Acts. But these Antiochene Acts state that he set sail from Seleucia the port of Antioch, and went by sea straight to Smyrna (§ 3). statement conflicts directly with several notices in the epistles. Ignatius in one passage says that 'even those churches which did not lie on his route went before him from city to city' (Rom. 9). As the letter is written from Smyrna, the expression is wholly irreconcilable with the sea voyage of our martyrologist (see the note, p. 232). Again, writing to the Philadelphians, he speaks of certain things which happened when he was among them (Philad. 7), and throughout this epistle a personal visit to Philadelphia is implied (see above, pp. 241, 251, 265, 266, 267); but for such a visit the sea voyage leaves no place. Moreover in a third passage (Rom. 5) he speaks of travelling 'by land and sea'—an expression which is explicable indeed, but appears somewhat strained, if we adopt the account of our Antiochene Acts (see the note p. 211). And generally it may be said that the incidents of the journey, more especially the movements of the delegates from the different churches, are involved in the greatest difficulties by this sea voyage. Another point of conflict with the letters is the notice of Polycarp. In the epistles Ignatius apparently makes the acquaintance of Polycarp for the first time (Polyc. 1); in our Acts on the other hand they are represented as having been fellow disciples under S. John in years gone by (§ 3). Again, the notices of the persecution in the two documents are not in harmony. In the epistles the Churches of Asia Minor appear to enjoy quiet, and even to the Church of Antioch peace is restored while the saint is still on his journey (Philad. 10, Smyrn. 11, Polyc. 7). But in our Acts the persecution is coextensive with the empire. It is a resolute determination on the part of Trajan to crush the Gospel, as he had already crushed the Dacians and Scythians, as he intended shortly to crush the Parthians (§ 2).

- (iii) Not less irreconcilable are the incidents in these Acts with external history. History is silent about any visit of Trajan to Antioch, or any expedition against Parthia, at this time. His actual campaign against the Parthians, on which occasion he made a long sojourn at Antioch, took place several years later than the date assigned to the martyrdom in these Acts, whether the year of Trajan's reign (§ 2) or the names of the consuls (§ 7) be taken to determine the time. In either case the time of the martyrdom falls in the interval between the emperor's earlier campaigns in the North and his later campaigns in the East, during which interval he was residing in Rome and Italy, and busying himself chiefly with public works (see below, p. 407 sq). also the account of the persecution, to which I have already referred, is too far removed from the actual occurrences to have proceeded from a contemporary writer, however prejudiced. It is equally irreconcilable with Trajan's own rescript to Pliny, in which, so far from entertaining this dogged purpose of stamping out Christianity, the emperor betrays a temporising policy, being desirous as far as possible to minimise the judicial proceedings against the Christians, and with the account of Eusebius, who correctly describes the sufferings of the believers under Trajan as confined to particular localities and due to popular excitement (H. E. iii. 32 μερικώς καὶ κατὰ πόλεις έξ ἀναστάσεως δήμων).
- Moreover, the language used from time to time is such as a contemporary writer could hardly have employed. The opening chapters for instance, giving the political events which form the setting of the narrative, are conceived altogether in the manner of a historian writing long after the occurrences. A contemporary, addressing contemporaries, would not have introduced this elaborate statement which was superfluous alike for himself and for his readers. The same remark applies also to the notice of the reliques at the end. Here the incongruity reaches a climax. The document professes to be a narrative written by companions and eye-witnesses ($\sec{5}, 6, 7\) soon after the event for the sake of certifying their readers-apparently the members of the Antiochene Church—as to the exact date of the martyrdom, that so writers and readers might all meet together and keep the festival on the right day (§ 7). But under these circumstances why should they tell their readers that only the harder bones had been preserved, and that these 'had been carried back to Antioch and deposited there in a sarcophagus as an invaluable treasure' (§ 6)? Later ages might be interested in such information, but to the persons addressed it was quite superfluous.

Nor are these Acts discredited by their internal character alone. The external testimony is notably defective. Not a single witness to their existence has been adduced till the close of the sixth century. They were unknown to Eusebius who, as we have seen (p. 384), correctly sends Ignatius by land to Smyrna, thus contradicting the story of our Acts in one of its main features. Moreover Eusebius says nothing of the altercation with Trajan, of whose intervention he betrays no knowledge. Lastly; when he has occasion to mention the account of Polycarp's martyrdom, he speaks of it as the earliest written narrative of the kind with which he was acquainted (H. E. iv. 15 ἀναγκαιόταπον δὲ αὐτοῦ τὸ τέλος ἐγγράφως ἤδη φερόμενον ἡγοῦμαι δεῖν μνήμη τῆς ίστορίας καταθέσθαι). We cannot but infer from his language on this occasion that if he had likewise had this Ignatian martyrology in his hands he would have felt an equally strong 'necessity' to insert extracts from it. Nor again does it appear to have been known at Antioch at the close of the fourth century; for Chrysostom in his panegyric on S. Ignatius makes no use whatever of its incidents, but on the contrary assumes, like Eusebius, that the saint journeyed to Rome mainly by land (αί κατά την όδον πόλεις... έξέπεμπον κ.τ.λ., ταῦτα διδάσκων κατά πάσαν πόλιν, ταις έν τῷ μέσω κειμέναις πόλεσιν άπάσαις διδάσκαλος κ.τ.λ.), though his language is not so explicit on this point as the historian's. This father does indeed mention the translation of the martyr's remains from Rome to Antioch (p. 600 B)—of which Eusebius says nothing and here is a point of coincidence with our Acts; but this, whether true or false, must have been a vulgar tradition of the Antiochenes quite independently of any written sources of information. Nor again is there any reason for supposing that Jerome (Vir. Ill. 16) was acquainted with this narrative. He too, like Chrysostom, mentions the reliques as being at Antioch; but inasmuch as he speaks of their lying 'in the Cemetery outside the Daphnitic gate,' he must have derived his information from some independent source, probably from oral tradition. Nor can any inference be drawn from the fact that Jerome uses the expression 'quum jam navigans Smyrnam venisset'; since he, like the author of our Acts, would independently assume that Ignatius was conveyed to Smyrna in the easiest and most usual way, though a more careful reading of Eusebius, whose text was before him, might have saved him from the error.

The first coincidence of any value appears in Evagrius who wrote at the close of the sixth century, and this is explicit enough. The notice is significant and deserves to be given at length.

'At that time also,' writes Evagrius, 'the divine Ignatius (as

1 Evagr. H. E. i. 16 Τότε καὶ Ίγνάτιος ό θεσπέσιος, ώς Ἰωάννη τῷ Ὑήτορι σὺν ἐτέροις ίστόρηται, ἐπειδή γε ώς ἐβούλετο τάφον [ΜS τάφων] τὰς τῶν θηρίων ἐσχηκώς γαστέρας έν τῷ τῆς 'Ρώμης ἀμφιθεάτρω [ἐτελειώθη] καὶ [ἔπειτα] διὰ τῶν ὑπολειφθέντων άδροτέρων ὀστῶν, ἃ πρὸς τὴν ἀντιόχου ἀπεκομίσθη, έν τῷ καλουμένω κοιμητηρίω [κατετέθη], μετατίθεται πολλοῖς ὕστερον χρόνοις, ύποθεμένου τοῦ παναγάθου Θεοῦ Θεοδοσίω τον θεοφόρον μείζοσι τιμήσαι τιμαίς, ίερον τε πάλαι τοῖς δαίμοσιν ἀνειμένον (Τυχαῖον τοῖς ἐπιχωρίοις ὧνόμαστο) τῷ ἀθλοφόρω καὶ μαρτυρι ἀναθεῖναι καὶ σηκὸς εὐαγὴς καὶ τέμενος ἄγιον τῷ Ἰγνατίω τὸ πάλαι Τυχαίον γέγονε, των ίερων αὐτοῦ λειψάνων μετά πομπης ίερας άνα την πόλιν έπ' οχήματος ένεχθέντων και κατά το τέμενος τεθέντων. όθεν καὶ δημοτελής έορτη καὶ πάνδημος εὐφροσύνη μέχρις ἡμῶν τελεῖται, πρός τὸ μεγαλοπρεπέστερον τοῦ ἱεράρχου Γρηγορίου ταύτην έξάραντος. γέγονε δὲ ταῦτα ἐκεῖθεν ἔνθεν [.....], τοῦ Θεοῦ τὰς όσίας των άγιων τιμώντος μνήμας κ.τ.λ. τοῦτο δ' ἄρα ἦν τὸ οἰκονομούμενον παρὰ τοῦ σωτήρος Θεού, ώς αν και τών μεμαρτυρηκότων ή δύναμις έκδηλος ή, και τοῦ άγίου μάρτυρος τὰ εὐαγῆ λείψανα εὐαγεῖ μετενεχθείεν χώρω, καλλίστω τεμένει τιμώμενα. The passage is translated literally in the text, without any attempt to improve upon the style of Evagrius which is as bad as possible. The words which I have inserted in brackets [] seem to be required to complete the sense. The passage is obviously mutilated, as the break in the construction after ἐκεῖθεν ἔνθεν shows, though commentators do not appear to have noticed the fact. By this mutilation an apparent confusion is created between the original translation of the bones from Rome to Antioch, and the later translation of them from the Cemetery of Antioch to the Tychæum in this city. Hence the erroneous heading of the chapter, "Οπως ὁ θεοφόρος Ίγνάτιος ἐκ 'Ρώμης ἀνακομισθείς παρά Θεοδοσίου έν 'Αντιοχεία κατετέθη, which must have been added after the text was mutilated. The mutilation had already taken place, and the false heading had been prefixed, before the time of Nicephorus Callistus H. E. xiv. 64 (Migne's Patrol. Graec. CXLVI. p. 1212), who derives his account from Evagrius; for (1) The heading to his chapter is substantially the same; (2) He writes όσα δη στερρότερα και άδρότερα περιελέλειπτο των δστέων ἐκεῖσέ πη [i.e. έν 'Ρώμη] έκρύπτετο, and adds και δη ἐκεῖθεν ἀράμενος [Θεοδόσιος] σὺν λαμπρᾶ τῆ πομπη ἐπὶ τὴν Αντιόχου ἀνήγαγε χρόνου παραρρυέντος πολλοῦ, καὶ ἐν τῷ καλουμένω κοιμητηρίω σεμνώς κατατίθησιν, ίερόν τε μέγα δαίμοσιν άνειμένον, δ τοις έπιχωρίοις Τυχαῖον ἀνόμαστο, τῷ θεοφόρῳ καὶ μάρτυρι έχαρίζετο, thus making Theodosius transfer the reliques from Rome to Antioch, and identifying the sepulchre in the Cemetery with the Tychæum. It may be well to add by way of caution that in the opening sentence of Nicephorus, Έν δὲ τῷ τότε καὶ ὁ θεοφόρος Ίγνάτιος ἐκ Ῥώμης εἰς τὴν Κωνσταντίνου άνεκομίζετο, the word Κωνσταντίνου must be regarded as a mere scribe's blunder for 'Αντιόχου (assisted perhaps by the contractions). This appears both from the parallel passage of Evagrius and from the context of Nicephorus, which throughout contemplates Antioch and not Constantinople as the place of translation. The Bollandist editors have argued from this Κωνσταντίνου as if it were genuine. For the meaning of διà in the opening sentence of Evagrius, διὰ τῶν ὑπολειφθέντων άδροτέρων όστῶν, see the note on Magn. 2 διὰ Δαμᾶ. It is not easily translated in its connexion here.

recorded by Joannes Rhetor and others)-forasmuch as he had met his death in the amphitheatre of Rome finding his tomb in the bellies of the wild beasts in fulfilment of his own wish, and afterwards, so far as regards the tougher bones that remained, which were conveyed back to the city of Antiochus, had been deposited in the Cemetery, as it is called—was translated long years afterwards, when the good God put it into the mind of Theodosius to honor the God-bearer with higher honours, and to dedicate to the victorious martyr a sanctuary given over from ancient times to the demons, and called the Tychæum (or Temple of Fortune) by the people of the place. Thus the ancient Tychæum is made into a consecrated shrine and holy precinct dedicated to Ignatius, his sacred reliques having with sacred pomp been conveyed through the city on a car and deposited in the precinct. Whence also a public festival and general rejoicing is celebrated down to our own times, the archbishop (high-priest) Gregory having exalted this festival to greater magnificence.' 'This then has providentially been so ordered by God our Saviour, that the power also of those who have suffered martyrdom might be clearly manifest and the sacred reliques of the holy martyr might be translated to a sacred place, being honoured with a most beautiful sanctuary.'

The historian Evagrius himself wrote about the close of the sixth century. His history reaches down to A.D. 594, and no later event in his own life is on record. The Gregory, whom he mentions, was his contemporary and friend, and held the patriarchate of Antioch from about A.D. 570 or 571 to A.D. 593 or 594. Joannes Rhetor, whose authority he quotes, was the author of a history which comprised the period from the commencement of the reign of the younger Theodosius to the earthquakes and fire at Antioch in A.D. 526 (Evagr. H. E. iv. 5). The translation of the bones of Ignatius, which is recorded, took place in the reign of the younger Theodosius who succeeded to the empire as a child, when 7 years old, and reigned from A.D. 408 to A.D. 450. The incident is related immediately after the notices of Isidore of Pelusium and Synesius of Cyrene (i. 15) and immediately before the account of Attila's invasions. Thus, as a rough approximation, we may suppose that the translation to the Tychæum took place about A.D. 430-440.

The account here given by Evagrius of the preservation of the tougher bones and the conveyance of these reliques from Rome to Antioch is clearly not independent of the story of our martyrologist (§ 6 μόνα γὰρ τὰ τραχύτερα τῶν ἀγίων αὐτοῦ λειψάνων περιελείφθη, ἄτινα εἰς τὴν ἀντιόχειαν ἀπεκομίσθη κ.τ.λ.), and may have been taken directly from it. The alternative remains, that both alike were derived from some common source, e.g. the account of Joannes Rhetor; and this solution is far from improbable. However this may be, the narrative of Evagrius is highly suggestive as to the origin of these Acts. The translation of the martyr's bones from the Cemetery outside the Daphnitic Gate to the Tychæum by Theodosius II would arouse curiosity with respect to the history of the reliques. The saint had been devoured by wild beasts at Rome, and the presence of his bones at Antioch needed explanation. The document would be compiled to gratify this curiosity and to supply this explanation. Either at the time of the translation, or more probably at some later date, when public interest was excited on the subject, as for instance when the patriarch Gregory added new splendours to the festival of the martyr, the narrative would make its appearance. To this subject I shall have to return again, when I come to speak of the change in the day of the saint's commemoration.

At a later date this document obtains a wide circulation. It finds its way into the Menea. It is translated into Syriac. It is used by the Metaphrast. It is combined with the Roman Acts in different ways; and, thus combined, it is read not only by Greek-speaking Christians, but also in Armenia and in all the Churches of Latin Christendom.

It has been seen then, that these Acts have no claim to be regarded as an authentic narrative. But the possibility remains that they may have embodied some earlier document and thus may preserve a residuum of genuine tradition. Such a residuum, if it exists at all, will naturally be looked for in those portions which profess to be related by eye-witnesses, and in which the first person plural is employed. But, even when so limited, the hypothesis of authenticity is involved in great difficulties. As Zahn (I. 7. A. p. 42 sq) has truly remarked, the first person plural in this document does not justify itself in the same way as in the Acts of the Apostles. There it is suddenly dropped at Philippi, and resumed again at the same place after an interval of several chapters and a lapse of several years (Acts xvi. 17, xx. 5). Here on the contrary there is no such propriety in its presence or absence. If the writers were, as many critics suppose, Philo and Rhaius Agathopus, whom we learn from the letters to have been in the martyr's company at Troas (Philad. 11, Smyrn. 10, 13) the 'we' might be expected to appear, while the martyr was still on the shores of the Ægæan (see above, p. 279). As a matter of fact, its first occurrence is where we should least look for it-on the Tyrrhene Sea, as the ship is approaching the Italian shore (§ 5 οὐρίοις ἀνέμοις προσχρησάμενοι ἡμεῖς μεν κ.τ.λ.). Still the objection is very far from being fatal; while on the other hand there is at least a naturalness in its introduction without any attempt to justify or explain it. Moreover I cannot help feeling impressed with the air of truthfulness, or at least of verisimilitude, in some incidents in the latter portion of the narrative which have excited the suspicions of others. Thus Hilgenfeld (A. V. p. 215) argues that the desire of landing at Puteoli, attributed to Ignatius, is due to the writer's wish 'to make his journey to Rome as like as possible to that of the Apostle.' To my mind it suggests the very opposite inference. not easy to see how two journeys from the shores of the Levant to Rome could differ more widely. S. Paul goes by sea to Melita; Ignatius crosses over Macedonia and Epirus to Dyrrhachium. S. Paul lands at Puteoli; Ignatius is prevented from landing there and disembarks at Portus. The two journeys in short have nothing in common, except the fact that both travellers were on the Adriatic and Tyrrhene seas. The voyage of Josephus (Vita 3) bears a much closer resemblance to S. Paul's. On the other hand, if this is not an authentic tradition, it shows some artistic skill and very much self-restraint in the martyrologist, that having an unfettered license of invention as regards his incidents, and remembering, as evidently he does remember, the express desire of the saint to tread in the footsteps of S. Paul (Ephes. 12 οὖ γένοιτό μοι ὑπὸ τὰ ἴχνη εἰρεθῆναι), he not only refrains from representing it as fulfilled, but even emphasizes the disappointment of the hope. So again, objection has been taken to the appearance of the saint to his friends on the night after the martyrdom (§ 7), as if this were impossible in an authentic document. But here too I cannot but think that such an apparition was in the highest degree natural after the agonizing scenes of the day, and with the tension of feeling which they must have left behind in the mourners. If I mistake not, scores of parallels could be produced from contemporary and genuine narratives of the deaths of saints and martyrs in later ages. At the same time it is very difficult to separate these incidents from the inauthentic references to the reliques and to the day of commemoration with which they are closely connected, and which also are given in the first person plural (§ 7 ἐφανερώσαμεν ὑμῖν κ.τ.λ.). Still I should be disposed to believe, that the martyrologist had incorporated into the latter portion of his narrative a contemporary letter of the martyr's companions containing an account of the journey from Philippi and the death, though freely interpolating and altering it, where he was so disposed.

The Chronology of Trajan's reign requires investigation as a preliminary step towards any discussion respecting the time of the martyrdom of Ignatius. The labours of Borghesi, Mommsen, and other recent critics, have contributed greatly to a more satisfactory arrangement of the dates of this period; and the Fasti, as given by previous writers such as Clinton, require considerable modification in consequence. The investigations of Borghesi are scattered up and down his works, to which frequent references will be given below. Mommsen's Fasti of this reign will be found in his article Zur Lebensgeschichte des jüngeren Plinius in Hermes III. p. 31 sq. From it I have mainly taken the names of the consuls, but not without verification. Under each year I have given the typical and important inscriptions, so that the reader may test for himself the epigraphical evidence on which the chronology rests¹.

dates given with either his earlier or his later theory respecting the tribunician years. Thus in C. I. L. III. p. 866 (comp. pp. 1110, 1124) June 30 of Trib. Pot. xi is assigned to A.D. 108, whereas it belongs to 107 on either reckoning; and in C.I.L. III. p. 102 sq Mommsen reckons according to Borghesi's computation of the tribunician years, not according to either of In the volumes for which Mommsen is not personally responsible, there is still less constancy of reckoning in the dates A.D. affixed to the inscriptions. Klein's Fasti Consulares (1881) had not yet appeared when these sheets were passed through the press for my first edition. Otherwise I should have been saved some trouble. I have made use of this work, where necessary, for this second edition.

- (2) The tribunician years of Trajan are the backbone of the chronology of his reign, and it is therefore important to determine how they were reckoned.

The tribunicia potestas was conferred on Trajan about the end of October A.D. 971, three months before the death of Nerva, which

parens verus [i.e. Vespasianus] tantum in alterum filium [Titum] contulit' (comp. § 9 'jam Caesar, jam imperator, jam Germanicus, absens et ignarus'). Thus Trajan was adopted as son and made Cæsar about the same time, perhaps even on the same day. Then after a short interval he was associated in the empire took place towards the end of January A.D. 98. Accordingly older numismatists and chronographers (e.g. Eckhel and Clinton) commonly reckon the 2nd tribunician year from Oct. 98 to Oct. 99, the 3rd from Oct. 99 to Oct. 100, and so forth. This mode of computation however fails to explain certain inscriptions and coins where the number of the tribunician year is one in advance of the reckoning as required by this hypothesis; and fresh discoveries are constantly adding to these examples. Later writers therefore have busied themselves to find some other solution which would explain these phenomena.

- I. Borghesi first applied himself to the problem (Œuvres v. 19 sq; see also his letter to Henzen Bull. Inst. di Corrisp. Archeol. 1859, p. 119 sq). His hypothesis is that Trajan renewed his tribunician power at his accession (Jan. 27 or 28), so that his second tribunician year was from the end of January A.D. 98 to the end of January 99, the broken piece of a year from the end of October 97 to the end of January 98 counting as the first year.
- 2. Borghesi's hypothesis covered most of the examples which the older view failed to explain, but not all (e.g. C. I. L. III. p. 864, given above under A.D. 103). To account for those which still remained, Mommsen (Hermes III. p. 128 sq) substituted Jan. 1 for Jan. 27 or 28. In other words he supposed that Trajan renewed his tribunician power with the beginning of the new year next after he had assumed it, so that the 2nd tribunician year coincided exactly with A.D. 98, the third with A.D. 99, and so forth. One or two examples however resisted this hypothesis also; but Mommsen was persuaded that the inscriptions in these cases were either spurious or misread or miscut.
- 3. Another hypothesis was started by Stobbe in an article Die Tribunenjahre der Römischen Kaiser p. 1 sq in Philologus XXXII, 1873. He maintained that some extraordinary event, especially the association and the tribunician power. But the interval was so brief that Aurelius Victor can speak of the adoption and the association in the empire together as taking place three months before Nerva's death. This account is quite consistent with Dion's narrative lxviii. 3, 4, δ Νερούας... $\mathring{\alpha}$ νέβη τε εls τ $\mathring{\alpha}$ Καπιτώλιον καὶ ἔφη γεγωνήσας... Τραϊανὸν ποιοθμαι· καὶ μετ $\mathring{\alpha}$ ταθτα ἐν τ $\mathring{\varphi}$ συνεδρί $\mathring{\varphi}$ Καίσαρ $\mathring{\alpha}$ τε αὐτὸν $\mathring{\alpha}$ πέδειξε κ.τ.λ... οὖτω μὲν $\mathring{\delta}$ Τραϊανὸς Καΐσαρ καὶ μετ $\mathring{\alpha}$ τοῦτο αὐτοκράτωρ ἐγένετο. The expression μετὰ ταῦτα would be satisfied even if Nerva proceeded straight from the Capitol to the Senate, while the μετὰ τοῦτο requires an appreciable, though not necessarily a long, interval. It appears from Pliny's language that the 'tribunicia potestas' was conferred at the same time ('pariter et statim') with the association in the 'imperium.' There is no ground whatever for deferring the tribunicia potestas to the next January, as Stobbe does (Philologus XXXII. p. 34 sq, 1873).

of a colleague in this office, would lead the emperor to a fresh assumption of the tribunicia potestas. Thus he supposed that Nerva would begin a new tribunician year, when Trajan was associated with him in the office. He believed however that this association in the tribunician power took place not, as is generally assumed and as the authorities seem naturally to imply, contemporaneously, or nearly so, with the adoption, i.e. in October or November 97, but in the early days of January 98. This assumption was made to account for the fact that the 4th consulate of Nerva (i.e. January A.D. 98, for this emperor died towards the end of the month) is found connected not only with Trib. Pot. ii, but also with Trib. Pot. iii, in inscriptions. On this hypothesis therefore the 1st tribunician year of Trajan actually began on some early day in January A.D. 98; but by a fictitious reckoning this 1st year was counted as the 2nd year, the previous three months since his adoption as Cæsar being thus retrospectively regarded as his first year. This hypothesis is far too artificial to commend itself, nor does it explain any phenomena in the inscriptions of Trajan's reign which Mommsen's solution had left unexplained. But Stobbe has the merit of endeavouring to treat the question of the tribunician years of the emperors connectedly as a whole.

4. Lastly, Mommsen in a later work (Römisches Staatsrecht II. p. 756, 1ste Aufl. 1875; II. p. 775 sq, 2te Aufl. 1877 [II. p. 799 sq, 3te Aufl. 1887]) has replaced his former hypothesis by another. He now supposes that Trajan's second tribunician year began not on Jan. 1, A.D. 98, but on Dec. 10, A.D. 97. This latter day, Dec. 10, was the ancient day for the election of the tribunes, and Dionysius (Ant. Rom. vi. 89) says explicitly that it remained so in his time (ωσπερ καὶ μέχρι τοῦ καθ' ήμᾶς χρόνου γίνεται). Now Dion Cassius (liii, 17) tells us that the years of the emperors' reigns were counted by the tribunician power 'on the assumption that they received it year by year together with those who for the time being held the office of tribune' (δι' αὐτῆς καὶ ἡ ἐξαρίθμησις τῶν ἐτῶν τῆς ἀρχῆς αὐτῶν, ὡς κατ ἔτος αὐτὴν μετὰ τῶν ἀεὶ δημαρχούντων λαμβανόντων, προβαίνει). It appears therefore that, as a rule, the tribunician years of the emperors commenced with Dec. 10. Dion himself seems not to be aware of any other mode of reckoning. This however was not the case with the earlier emperors, who reckoned their tribunician years from the day of their accession (dies imperii). Such apparently was the computation adopted by all the emperors of the first century. At what time and for what reason then was a change made? The association of Trajan with Nerva in the sovereignty appears to have been the starting point for the new reckoning. It was a matter of paramount convenience that the two colleagues in the tribunician power should compute their tribunician years from the same point of time. The difficulty had never occurred before. When Tiberius was associated with Augustus in the tribunician power, and again when Titus was associated with Vespasian in the same, this was done on the anniversary of the dies imperii. But when Nerva adopted Trajan, the political emergency was so pressing that the recurrence of this anniversary, which was then some ten or eleven months distant, could not be waited for. The tribunician power was therefore conferred upon him at once. But in order that the years of Nerva and Trajan might synchronize, both the colleagues re-assumed the tribunician power on the next Dec. 10, this being the ordinary day for the election of the tribunes; and the practice, thus initiated, became general with succeeding emperors. This hypothesis is confirmed by an inscription in Ephem. Epigr. II. p. 339 IMP. NERVAE. CAESARI · AVG · PONTIF · MAX · TRIB · POT · III · COS · III. The third consulate of Nerva fixes this inscription to A.D. 97, since he was consul for the fourth time in A.D. 98. But his second tribunician year only began in the middle of September 97. Therefore between this time and the end of the year he must have re-assumed the tribunician power; and such a re-assumption would appropriately be made on Dec. 10. Thus the inscription belongs to some date between Dec. 10 and Dec. 31, A.D. 97.

It may be a question which of the rival claimants for the vacant place should be preferred—whether Borghesi's theory, or the early or later hypothesis of Mommsen; but there can be no doubt that the older method of reckoning the tribunician years, from the actual anniversary of the first assumption, must be finally abandoned. The following facts show its inadequacy.

I. The base of a statue set up to Trajan at Aratispi in Baetica gives the emperor's honours (C. I. L. II. 2054; see above, p. 398) TRIB·POTEST·XXI·IMP·XIII·COS·VI. Coins also bear the inscription ΔΗΜΑΡΧ·ΕΞ·ΚΑ; see Eckhel VI. p. 456. Now, as Trajan was invested with the tribunician power in October 97 and died in August 117, he held this rank somewhat less than twenty years, and a 21st year of his tribunician power is only explicable on some hypothesis as regards the mode of reckoning, which anticipates the actual anniversary.

Mommsen I. R. N. 5619 (C. I. L. IN. 3915) OPTIMO . AVG .GERMANICO . DACICO . PAR-THICO . PONT . MAX . TRIB . POT . XXIII .

2. The military diplomas sometimes give the month and day, as well as the consuls of the year; and by this means we are able to compare the tribunician years with the consular years. The comparison is decisive. Thus the inscription, C. I. L. III. p. 868, Henzen 5443, gives TRIBVNIC. POTESTAT. XIIII. IMP. VI. COS. V, and is dated 13 Kal. Mart, of the consulate of Salvidienus Orfitus and Peducaeus Priscinus, i.e. A.D. 110. Thus again in C. I. L. 111. p. 865, Henzen 6857, we have TRIBVNIC POTESTAT VIIII · IMP · IV · COS · V, the date being 3 Id. Mai of the consulate of C. Julius Bassus and Cn. Afranius Dexter; but these appear elsewhere (C. I. L. VI. 2075) as the consules suffecti of A.D. 105. Henzen himself wrongly ascribes this inscription to A.D. 106 (p. 375). Again in a military diploma, C. I. L. 111. p. 863, dated 19 Kal. Sept., Trajan is styled TRIBVNIC. POTESTAT. III. COS. II. The consuls of the year indeed are not named here, but cos. II fixes it to A.D. 99, since the emperor was consul for the third time in A.D. 100. Again in another, C. I. L. III. p. 870, dated 6 Id. Sept., he is described as TRIB. POTESTAT. XX; and this must refer to A.D. 116, since Trajan was no longer living in September 117.

This point therefore must be regarded as settled. But hitherto no facts have been mentioned, which are not equally consistent with Borghesi's theory and with either of those put forward by Mommsen. This is not the case however with others. Thus in the inscription C. I. L. III. p. 864 (see above, p. 393), a military diploma dated 14 Kal. Febr. (= Jan. 19) of the consulate of M'. Laberius Maximus II, Q. Glitius Atilius Agricola II, Trajan is designated TRIEVNIC POTESTATIONING IIII COS V. This evidently belongs to the year 103, the emperor having retired at once from the consulate to make room for Atilius (see Mommsen Hermes III. p. 128). The only alternative is to transpose the consuls for the years A.D. 103 and A.D. 104, as older critics did; but Mommsen has shown that this transposition is inadmissible. Borghesi's theory therefore fails to explain this example. But this inscription does not enable us to decide between the earlier and later of Mommsen's hypotheses, since it would be satisfied by either. At this point however a legend on a coin (Cohen Méd. Imp. 11. p. 57, no. 354) comes to our aid: IMP.CAES.NERVA.TRAIAN.AVG.GERM. P.M.TR.P.VII, with the R. IMP.IIII.COS.IIII.DES.V.P.P.S.C. Here the date is fixed as the last part of A.D. 102 by COS-IIII-DES-V. Therefore the 7th year must have begun earlier than Jan. 1, A.D. 103. When he was maintaining his earlier hypothesis, Mommsen had questioned the deciphering or the genuineness of this coin (Hermes l.c.): but he was afterwards satisfied by M. Waddington that it was neither spurious nor misread (Staatsrecht II. p. 777, note I). There are other coins also (Cohen II. p. 57, no. 355; p. 85, no. 539), though less certainly authenticated, with similar legends. This fact is in favour of Mommsen's later theory as against his earlier, and combined with the arguments which have been mentioned already (p. 400 sq) invests it with a high degree of probability. Some difficulties indeed still remain, but these are perhaps less serious than on any other hypothesis1.

COS. VI. PATRI. PATRIAE. SENATVS. POPVLVSQ. ROM. found at Avezzano. Orelli (I. p. 191) treats it as spurious. Probably it has been wrongly transcribed. Mommsen says 'scribe TRIB.POT.XXI. IMP.XII'. But we now know that TRIB.POT.XXI requires IMP.XIII, and this better explains the error, some letters having been dropped in transcription TRIB.POT.X[XI.IMP.] XIII.COS.VI, if not left out by the stone-cutter himself.

As an official inscription was not likely to omit the imperatorial titles, this explanation seems very probable. (2) Renier I. A. 1842 (C. I. L. VIII. 2356) AVG. GERM. DAC. PART. PONT. MAX. TRIB. POT. XXIII. IMP. XVIII. COS. VI. P. P. at Thamugas. This again, if correctly transcribed, can only be explained by carelessness of the stone-cutter or of the transcriber. It ought perhaps to be TRIB. POT. XVIII. IMP. VIII.

¹ It would not be surprising if in the earlier years of Trajan's reign we found some wavering in the inscriptions between the old reckoning and the new. But I am unable to understand many of the statements of Mommsen Staatsrecht II. p. 776, note 2. The diploma (C. I. L. III, p. 862) of Feb. 20, A.D. 98, may perhaps be regarded as an example of the retention of the old reckoning, as it gives TRIB. POTEST. COS. II, where the absence of any number suggests the first year of the tribunician power, though according to the new reckoning it was the second. But, inasmuch as it is the exception, not the rule, when the number of the tribunician year is given on the coins of Trajan (though it appears commonly in diplomas), the instance is not conclusive. Mommsen goes on to say that we possess no documents of the years 99-102 which are decisive as between the old and the new systems. He then instances the diploma (C. I. L. III. p. 863) of Aug. 14, which has Trib. Pot. iii, and says that on both systems this belongs to 100, not 99 [as he himself gives it in C. I. L. l. c.]. But it is fixed to A.D. 99 by the addition COS.II, for Trajan was COS.III in A.D. 100; and according to the old system Aug. 14, A.D. 99, would belong to the and tribunician year. Again he adduces another diploma, Orelli 782 (= C. I. L.VI. 451, given above, p. 392), bearing date Dec. 29, with Trib. Pot. iv, and says that this again would belong to 100 on either reckoning. It is indeed fixed to A.D. 100 by the specification cos. III. DESI[G. IIII]; but Dec. 29, A.D. 100, would fall in the fifth tribunician year according to the new reckoning, as the year began on Dec. 10. If therefore Mommsen's later theory be correct, either there is some stone-cutter's error here, or in this instance the old system has survived. [Mommsen has corrected himself on both these points in his last edition, 1887, 11. p. 800, note 1.]

At the same time Mommsen omits to mention some inscriptions which, if correctly transcribed, are opposed to his theory. Thus C. I. L. II. 2352 of Julipa in Baetica is given TRIB. POT. IIII. COS. III. Here we must read COS. III, if it is to harmonize with either of Mommsen's theories; though, as it stands, it is con-

We may therefore accept it provisionally. So far as regards the Ignatian question, the differences between the three solutions are unimportant.

In the tables given above the inscriptions dated by the tribunician years are assigned to the years A.D. with which they roughly coincide. If Mommsen's later theory be correct, these may possibly belong in some cases to the last twenty-one days of the preceding year. If Borghesi's view be adopted then they may fall within the first twenty-seven days of the following year. This is the limit of possible divergence.

- (3) See the note on Mart. Ant. 1 "Αρτι διαδεξαμένου κ.τ.λ.
- (4) The First Dacian War must have broken out after September A.D. 100, when Pliny's panegyric was delivered, since the panegyrist makes no mention of it. Until quite recently, this was the nearest approximation to an exact date, which the evidence supplied. But some lately discovered fragments (A.D. 1867—1871) of the Acta Fratrum Arvalium afford more precise information. Here we find these officials sacrificing Q.ARTICVLEIO.[PAETO].SE[X.ATT]IO.SVBVRANO.COS.VIII.K.APR.IN.CAPITOLI[O.PRO.SALVTE.ET.REDIT]V.ET.VICTORIA.IMP.CAESARIS.NERVAE.TRAIANI.AVG.GERM., and lower down the object of the sacrifice is defined 'itu et reditu et victoria imperatoris etc.' (C. I. L. VI. 2074; comp. Henzen Act. Fratr. Arv. pp. 117, 124 sq). This is the year 101, Trajan having retired from the consulate to make room for Suburanus. The sacrifice therefore takes place on March 25, A.D. 101; and it is evidently synchronous, or nearly so, with the emperor's departure from Rome, as the whole context shows.

This First Dacian War seems to have been brought to a close towards the end of the year 102. The title Dacicus at all events appears then, if the evidence can be trusted. The following coins and medals given by Cohen illustrate the course of events.

sistent with Borghesi's. The case is similar also with I. R. N. 2487 (C. I. L. X. 1633) AVG.GERM.DACICO.PONT.MAX. TRIB.POT.XV.IMP.VI.COS.VI.P.P. OPTIMO.PRINCIPI, which is reconcilable with Borghesi's view but not with either of Mommsen's. Here however cos.v would set all straight, and it appears from Mommsen's own collation that this reading is given in one transcription. Both these examples would be explicable on the old system of reckoning by complete years from the day of the first assumption of the tribunician power, but this view must be regarded as definitively abandoned.

All these belong to A.D. 102, as COS. IIII. DES. V. shows.

Of these (a), on which the title Dacicus is wanting, is certainly genuine, and belongs to Dec. 10—Dec. 31 of the year (see above, p. 401). The others are not so well attested; but, if genuine and correctly read, (b) (c) must also fall within this same period. The devices on the reverses of both represent the subjugation of Dacia. It would appear therefore that the final submission of Dacia and the title Dacicus belong to the very last days of A.D. 101. Mommsen at one time (Hermes III. p. 131) threw discredit on all three alike; but now that he accepts the first as genuine (see above p. 403), the ground for objecting to the others (the combination of TR-P-VII with COS-IIII) has been cut away. Two other types of coins, likewise bearing the name DACICVS in conjunction with COS-IIII, i.e. not later than A.D. 102, are also given by Cohen, p. 15, nos. 78, 79.

- (5) For the consuls of this year see the note on Mart. Ant. 7.
- (6) On the names of the consuls for this year, and on their transposition with those of the preceding year, see the note on Mart. Rom. 1.
- (7) The outbreak of the Second Dacian IVar is determined by the same means as the first, the recently discovered fragments (A.D. 1867—1870) of the Acta Fratrum Arvalium; C. I. L. VI. 2075 (comp. Henzen Act. Fratr. Arv. p. 124). Here we find these officials assembled AD.VOTA.SVSCIPI[ENDA.PRO.IT]V.ET.REDITV.[IMP.C]AESA[RI]s etc, some day during the Nones of June (i.e. between June 2—5) in the year 105. This therefore is the time of the emperor's departure from Rome for the Second Dacian War.

The close of this war is not so easy to determine. Unfortunately no inscriptions have yet been discovered belonging to the 10th tribunician year (A.D. 106); so that the information is deficient just where it is wanted. The sequence of the imperial titles is imperfect in consequence. On May 13, A.D. 105, immediately before he starts for the Second Dacian War, Trajan is still Imperator iv. On June 30, A.D. 107, he is Imperator vi. These two additional attributions of the title are doubtless due to the second subjugation of Dacia by Trajan himself, and to the reduction of Arabia Petræa by Palmas. On this point there can hardly be two opinions. But it is doubtful which of these two events preceded the other. No trustworthy inscriptions bearing the designation Imperator v have been discovered; for, though the words inscribed on the bridge at Alcantara (C. I. L. II. 759) are certainly TRIB. POTES. VIII. IMP. V. COS. V (the tribunician year being written viii, and not viiii, as it has been read; see Renier's note on Borghesi Euvres IV. p. 122), this must be a stone-cutter's error, since Trajan was still Imperator iv in the following year, and probably therefore IMP-IV should be substituted for IMP-V. Here therefore we receive no assistance as regards the matter in question. Mommsen (C. I. L. III. 550), combining the sequence of Hadrian's honours as recorded in an Athenian inscription with the account of the same in Vit. Hadr. 3, arrives at the result that the Second Dacian War extended into A.D. 107; and his inference, though far from conclusive, is plausible. Dion at all events remarks that Trajan's operations in this second war were characterized by caution rather than by speed, and that he only conquered the Dacians after a long time and with difficulty (σὺν χρόνω καὶ μόλις, lxviii. 14). On the other hand Julian (Caes. p. 327) makes Trajan say that he reduced this people 'within about five years' (ἐπράχθη δέ μοι τὸ ἔργον τοῦτο ἐν $\dot{\epsilon}$ νιαυτοῖς $\dot{\epsilon}$ ίσω που π $\dot{\epsilon}$ ντ $\dot{\epsilon}$); and five years reckoned from the outbreak of the First Dacian War would bring us to about midsummer A.D. 106. To meet this difficulty, Mommsen suggests that the interval of peace between the two wars is not reckoned in the five years; but this solution seems impossible. It does not appear necessary however to take Julian's off-hand statement au pied de la lettre. On the other side Dierauer (p. 106, note) decides positively that the war must have been concluded before the end of 106, because Sura, one of Trajan's generals in this war, was consul in 107.

(8) Dion Cassius (lxviii. 14), after describing the Second Dacian War, adds, κατὰ δὲ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον καὶ Πάλμας τῆς Συρίας ἄρχων τῆν ᾿Αραβίαν τῆν πρὸς τῆ Πέτρα ἐχειρώσατο κ.τ.λ. This is not very precise. The epigraphic evidence again, as will have appeared from the last note, admits of our placing the subjugation of Arabia Petræa at any time between about midsummer A.D. 105 and midsummer A.D. 107. The testimony of the Chronicon Paschale p. 472 (ed. Bonn.) here comes to our aid. Under the consulship of Candidus and Quadratus (i.e. A.D. 105) it states that the people of Petra and Bostra reckoned their years from this date. This probably means, as Clinton says, that the year of the Seleucidæ which began in the October falling within this consulship was counted as the 1st year of the Petræan era. The fact would imply that Arabia Petræa was conquered and made a Roman province some time between Oct. 105 and Oct. 106. Whether early or late in this period, it would probably be before the close of the Second Dacian War. If so, Imperator v belongs to the conquest of Arabia, and Imperator vi to that of Dacia.

- (9) For the consuls of the year 107 see the note on Mart. Ant. 7.
- (10) For the date of Pliny's proprætorship in Bithynia, and the persecution of the Christians connected therewith, see the note on Mart. Rom. 11.
- (11) It may now be regarded as an established fact that Trajan as emperor only made one expedition to the East, and that this took place in the last years of his reign. This is the opinion of almost all, if not all, critics who have approached the subject from an independent point of view (without reference to the Acts of Martyrdom of Ignatius): e.g. Eckhel D. N. vi. p. 450 sq, Francke Geschichte Trajans pp. 16 sq, 253 sq. Dierauer Geschichte Trajans p. 152 sq. Mommsen C. I. L. III. p. 103 sq. And even among those who accept these Acts as genuine in the main, many have been led to infer that there is an error in the date there given, the 9th year of Trajan. It is Pearson's great merit that, with the very imperfect and confused materials before him, he yet discerned the main fact correctly, that an earlier expedition of Trajan to the East was impossible. His view required that the 19th year should be substituted for the 9th, and in this he is followed by Clinton and others. The only point of difference among these writers has reference to the exact year in which Trajan started for the East. Thus Eckhel and others placed his departure in the autumn A.D. 114, being misled by their mode of reckoning the tribunician years. With the new light thrown upon this point, we may now regard it as certain that he left Rome in the autumn of 113.

The reasons for concluding that this was the first and only expedition of Trajan as emperor seem quite conclusive. (i) Dion Cassius represents his departure for the East as taking place after the erection of the column (A.D. 113), and says nothing of any earlier expedition. (ii) There is not the slightest indication in the genuine coins and inscriptions of any such Eastern expedition, or indeed of any important military operations of any kind, in the interval between the close of the Second Dacian War and the autumn A.D. 113. Thus for instance there is no accession to the emperor's titles. He is Imperator vi in June A.D. 107, and he remains so as late as A.D. 113 when the column is erected. The next accumulation, Imperator vii, first appears A.D. 114. (iii) In accordance therewith, so far as we are able to trace the movements of the emperor during the interval, we find him in Rome or Italy. The correspondence of Pliny with the emperor (A.D. 111—113), which falls in this interval, indicates this. The medals and inscriptions too, which belong to this period, represent him as actively engaged in public works at home, e.g. the forum bearing his name at Rome, the Aqua Trajana, the great roads and harbours of Italy, etc.

On the other hand Tillemont (Empereurs II. p. 196 sq, p. 562 sq) sends Trajan to the East several years earlier and makes him enter Antioch in January A.D. 107, thus antedating the conquest of Armenia and Mesopotamia, which really took place A.D. 114, by seven years. With the mixture of genuine and spurious documents accessible to Tillemont this position is intelligible. But such views are not so easy of explanation in later writers. Quite recently (A.D. 1869) Nirschl (Das Todesjahr des Hl. Ignatius) has made an elaborate attempt to prove that Trajan made three several expeditions to the East, A.D. 107, A.D. 110, and A.D. 116. And even De Rossi (Inscr. Christ. Urb. I. p. 6 sq) is disposed provisionally (for he speaks with caution) to assume one earlier Parthian expedition with Tillemont in order to save the credit of the Ignatian Acts of Martyrdom. The arguments by which it is attempted to sustain the theory of an early expedition or expeditions to the East are as follows.

(i) Our information respecting Trajan's reign is very deficient. Dion Cassius, our chief authority, or rather his abbreviator Xiphilinus, does not give events in sequence, but groups them. Hence all the campaigns in the East are put together. This however is not an accurate statement of the case. The historian (lxviii. 17), after describing the construction of the forum and the erection of the column, proceeds $\mu\epsilon\tau\lambda$ $\delta\epsilon$ $\tau\alpha\hat{v}\tau\alpha$ $\epsilon\sigma\tau\rho\dot{a}\tau\epsilon v\sigma\epsilon v$ $\epsilon\pi$ 'Armevious kal Hárdous. Hence it was not before the close of A.D. 113 according to this representation. Thus there is a direct notice of time. Nor is there any ground for supposing that the abbreviator tampered with the sequence of the original. The order of Xiphilinus is the order of Zonaras also. Thus it must be regarded as Dion's own. Moreover the sequence of events, as given by Dion, is confirmed in all respects by the genuine coins and inscriptions. It should be added also that Julian (Caes. p. 328) only speaks of one Parthian expedition, which he assigns to Trajan's old age. The words which he puts into Trajan's mouth are these: πρὸς Παρθυαίους δέ, πρὶν μὲν ἀδικεῖσθαι παρ' αὐτῶν, οὐκ ὤμην δείν χρήσθαι τοίς ὅπλοις, ἀδικοῦσι δὲ ἐπεξήλθον οὐδὲν ὑπὸ τῆς ήλικίας κωλυθείς, καίτοι διδόντων μοι τῶν νόμων τὸ μὴ στρατεύεσθαι.

- (ii) The Ignatian Acts of Martyrdom are themselves put in evidence. This arguing in a circle would be quite legitimate, if these Acts approved themselves as genuine in all other respects. But, as we have already seen (p. 383 sq), they are discredited by various - considerations, apart from this difficulty about the date.
- (iii) The evidence of other Christian writers is alleged. More especially stress is laid on the testimony of John Malalas (p. 270 sq. ed. Bonn.), who states that Trajan made an expedition against the Parthians in the 12th year of his reign (ἐπεστράτευσε τῷ ιβ' ἔτει τῆς βασιλείας αὐτοῦ) leaving Rome in October, reaching Syria in December, and entering Antioch on Jan. 7. Of the blunders of Malalas I shall have much to say hereafter. At present it will be sufficient to remark that the events recorded as taking place on this occasion are obviously the same as those narrated by Dion, though mixed up with much fabulous matter by Malalas; and that Dion, as interpreted by the monuments, places this campaign in A.D. 114. Moreover Malalas convicts himself. For afterwards, when mentioning the earthquake which happened during a subsequent winter spent by Trajan at Antioch, he places it two years after his arrival in the East (μετὰ β' ἔτη τῆs παρουσίας τοῦ θειστάτου βασιλέως Τραιανοῦ τῆς ἐπὶ τὴν ἀνατολήν), and yet dates it Dec. 13, A.D. 115. Of the other Christian authorities cited it may be said generally that they either prove nothing or are based on the story of Trajan's interview with Ignatius at Antioch. To the former class belongs Eusebius, who in his Chronicon (p. 162, Schoene) places the martyrdom of Ignatius in A.D. 107, there or thereabouts. But, as he knows nothing about the appearance of Ignatius before Trajan at Antioch or elsewhere, his testimony has no bearing on Trajan's movements. As regards the latter class of writers, the case presented itself to them thus. The Antiochene tradition or Antiochene Acts of Martyrdom relate that Ignatius was brought before Trajan at Antioch. Now Eusebius says that he was martyred about A.D. 107. Therefore Trajan must have been in Antioch at that time, preparing for his Parthian campaign. In fact these writers were in the same position as Tillemont or Nirschl with regard to the evidence; and, like these modern writers, they drew this as a critical inference from statements which they accepted without sifting. One authority however is not so easily explained. The compiler of the Chronicon Paschale (p. 471 sq, ed. Bonn.) places the martyrdom of Ignatius in the consulate of Candidus and Quadratus (i.e. A.D. 105). Then under the following year (A.D. 106) he writes, πολέμου χαλεποῦ ἐπιβάντος τῆ Ῥωμανία ύπο Περσων καὶ Γόθων καὶ έτέρων ἐθνων, Τραιανὸς ἀπερχόμενος εἰς τὸν τούτων πόλεμον κ.τ.λ. The Goths here are doubtless the Dacians!. This is the correct date for the Second Dacian War, which commenced in the previous year and was not yet ended (see above, p. 405 sq). Against these Trajan conducted the expedition in person. But he could not march at once against both Dacians and Persians, and the writer cannot have meant this. Perhaps this 'Persian' War here mentioned represents the operations of Palmas in Arabia, which were really synchronous with the Second Dacian War. Or it may be an echo of some previous Christian writer, who sent Trajan to the East at this time in order to satisfy the exigencies of the Ignatian story. Under any circumstances it is valueless as against the plain inference drawn from more authentic sources of information.

- (iv) Lastly; certain medals and inscriptions are cited. They profess to belong to a much earlier date than A.D. 114, and yet they bear the legend TIGRIS, or INDIA, or PARTHICVS, OF REX PARTHIS DATVS, or other words which point to an eastern campaign of Trajan. It is sufficient to say that they are discredited by the channels through which they come to us, that their genuineness has never been established, that in some instances they convict themselves, and that generally they are confuted by the eloquent silence of a large and ever-increasing mass of epigraphic and numismatic evidence, which betrays no knowledge of such stirring events.
- (12) The designation Optimus is an important landmark in the chronology of this reign. The two following notices have reference to it.
- (i) Pliny Paneg. 2 writes, 'Jam quid tam civile, tam senatorium, quam illud additum a nobis Optimi cognomen? quod peculiare hujus

[Trajani] et proprium arrogantia priorum principum fecit'; and again c. 83 'Justisne de causis S.P.Q.R. Optimi tibi cognomen adjecit? Paratum id quidem et in medio positum, novum tamen. Scias neminem ante meruisse...Adoptavit te optimus princeps in suum, senatus in Optimi nomen.' As Pliny's panegyric was delivered in September A.D. 100, this must refer to the very beginning of Trajan's reign.

(ii) Dion Cassius (Ixviii. 23), as abridged by Xiphilinus, says of Trajan τά τε ἄλλα ἐψηφίζετο αὐτῷ πολλὰ ἡ βουλή, καὶ ὅπτιμον, εἴτ' οὖν ἄριστον, ἐπωνόμασεν, and a little lower down, καὶ ὧνομάσθη μέν, ἐπειδὴ καὶ τὴν Νίσιβιν εἶλε καὶ τὰς Βάτνας, Παρθικός πολλῷ δὲ μᾶλλον ἐπὶ τὴ τοῦ ὀπτίμου προσηγορίψ ἡ ταῖς ἄλλαις συμπάσαις...ἐσεμνύνετο. As these events are related after Trajan's first campaign in the East, they seem to belong to a date not earlier than A.D. 114.

Thus there is a difference of some fourteen years in the two accounts; and yet the language of both writers is so alike, that they seem to be referring to the same incident. It is only when we examine the monuments, that the solution of the difficulty appears. On the coins and medals of the early years, at least as early as the 5th consulate (A.D. 103 sq), we find frequently the legend optimo principl, and so occasionally in inscriptions. To this use of the word Pliny must be alluding. But in the later years, in coins and inscriptions alike, optimys appears no longer as an epithet, but as an inseparable part of the name; and, as such, it precedes even Augustus, so that the order is impensely traian optimeave germ dac [parthic.]. This phenomenon first makes its appearance in the 18th tribunician year, i.e. a.d. 114, the point of time to which Dion is referring.

¹ Several types of coins are given by Fabretti Col. Traj. p. 292 (see Francke Geschichte Trajans p. 16) with APICTOC before ceBactoc, dated ΔΗΜΑΡΥ. ez. IZ. As they are not cited by Eckhel and others, I presume that they are not regarded as genuine. No accredited inscription hitherto discovered exhibits this title before the 18th tribunician year. Still its appearance in the 17th would not be altogether irreconcilable with Dion's account. Though Dion mentions the bestowal of the title at the end of his account of the eastern campaign of A.D. 114, and the natural inference is that it was not bestowed till some time during that campaign, still it is quite conceivable that he intended to group together all the honours bestowed on Trajan by the senate after his departure from Rome, and so this might belong to the last months of A.D. 113.

[Since the above was written the inscription C. I. L. VIII. 10117 (see above, p. 395) has been published, in which this title appears in the 16th tribunician year. Wilmanns, the editor of this volume, writes, 'Offendit Optimi nomen ea ratione positum, quam tam nummi quam tituli ab anno demum 114 proponunt. Fortasse titulus conceptus a. 112 post intervallum incisus est coque tempore

(13) The date of the assumption of the title 'Parthicus' presents some difficulties. Dion Cassius (lxviii. 23) in the abridgment of Xiphilinus, as quoted just above, says that he was designated (ἀνομάσθη) Parthicus after taking Nisibis and Batnæ. He does not say by whom this designation was given. Zonaras (xi. 21) however represents it as conferred by the senate, ή βουλή...Παρθικὸν αὐτῷ ἐπίκλησιν ἔθετο; but this may be merely his own inference from the words of Dion. According to the arrangement of the events which I have adopted (p. 413 sq), this would be towards the end of A.D. 114. At a later point Dion (Xiphilinus), describing a subsequent campaign (lxviii. 23), says that when the emperor entered Ctesiphon as victor, he was saluted (ἐπονομάσθη) imperator, and 'confirmed the epithet of Parthicus' (τὴν ἐπίκλησιν τοῦ Παρθικοῦ ἐβεβαιώσατο). This would take place in the following year, A.D. 115.

The expression εβεβαιώσατο implies that there was some uncertainty about the use of the term. Perhaps we may infer that though it was employed unofficially, yet the emperor did not adopt it himself. or allow it to be adopted in official quarters, when it was first bestowed upon him. The monuments confirm this supposition. In the year 114, in a military diploma of Trajan dated Sept. 1st, with IMP VII, it is wanting1. So also in the inscription on the arch at Beneventum, erected by the senate, likewise with IMP.VII, it is absent. Even later in this same year, when the emperor's titles have risen to IMP.IX, it does not appear in an inscription set up at Ferentinum in Trajan's own name. Yet before the date of this last-mentioned inscription, and while Trajan is still only IMP.VII, it appears on a monument in Baetica. Thus, unless we have here some stone-cutter's error, this first bestowal of the title, whether by the senate or by the army, must have occurred in sufficient time to allow the news to travel to Spain before the close of the year 114. In the following year we find the same fluctuation. In an inscription set up by the senate on the arch at Ancona², in another (recorded by Fabretti) which was inscribed by the emperor's own orders, and in a third (an Egyptian inscription bearing date May 24) which likewise has an official character3, it is wanting; while interpolatus. It is perhaps simpler to suppose a stone-cutter's error in the xvi. See the next note for an example.]

again in another Bætican inscription it appears. The provincial and unofficial character of this last is evident from the circumstance that PARTHICO is placed before DACICO, whereas its proper place is later. In the following year (A.D. 116) all the monuments have the title. One of these, a military diploma, bears the date Sept. 8. The capture of Ctesiphon therefore, and the official acceptance of the title by Trajan himself, must have preceded this. But the exact date of this incident is not determined for us by the inscriptions hitherto discovered. So far as their evidence goes, it may have occurred in the early part of this year 116, or in the later part of the preceding year 115.

(14) The year of the great earthquake at Antioch is fixed as A.D. 115 by the notice in Dion (lxviii. 24) that Pedo the consul perished in it. And Dion's account is so far confirmed by Malalas, that the latter gives the date as A.D. 115. Moreover the calamity happened according to both these authors while Trajan was wintering at Antioch. But the alternative still remains that the winter in question was 11½ or 11½, i.e. that the earthquake took place at the beginning or the end of 115. If Malalas is worthy of credit, it happened on Dec. 13 of this year. But several modern critics (e.g. Eckhel vi. p. 453 sq, Clinton Fast. Rom. sub ann. 115, Borghesi Œuvres v. p. 19) on various grounds reject his statement, and place it at the beginning of the year, in January or February.

The degree of credibility which attaches to statements of Malalas in general will be discussed hereafter. It will then be seen that in this particular notice the day of the month is not consistent with the day of the week. But still the possibility remains, that Malalas has given correctly the month and day of the month; and this view is taken by many critics of consideration, e.g. by Von Gutschmid (in

Aug. 29 A.D. 98 to Aug. 28 A.D. 99, the broken year preceding the Egyptian new year's day counting as the first year; see Raoul Rochette Journal des Savans 1824, p. 240 sq, Mommsen Staatsrecht 11. p. 778. According to this reckoning, May 24 of the 19th year would belong to A.D. 116, as given by Letronne, Franz, and others. But I agree with Dierauer (p. 167, note) that the official character of this inscription suggests the reckoning by tribunician years. Thus it must be referred to A.D. 115. Otherwise it would be the only verified inscription of A.D.

Dierauer Geschichte Trajans p. 157 sq), by Dierauer, and others. This view seems to me to present serious difficulties.

The coins and inscriptions show clearly that Trajan set out for his eastern campaigns in the autumn A.D. 113, not A.D. 114, as maintained by Eckhel and Clinton; for their error about the reckoning of the tribunician years led them to post-date it by a year. In August 117 he died. Within this interval therefore we have to arrange all the incidents of these campaigns. For these incidents Dion is our only trustworthy authority; and as there is no reasonable ground for supposing that he gives these events out of their chronological order, we may follow his sequence.

'After these things,' says Dion, 'he made an expedition against the Armenians and Parthians' (lxviii. 17). The completion of the Forum and the erection of the Column have been mentioned just before. On his way eastward Trajan stays at Athens, where he receives an embassy from Osrhoes, asking the crown of Armenia for Parthamasiris. From Greece he passes to Asia and Lycia; from thence to Seleucia (c. 17). While he is in Antioch, he receives overtures from Augarus of Osrhoene. This is obviously therefore the winter A.D. 11³/₄. The subsequent events are as follows.

- (a) The expedition begins. Entering the enemy's territory, Trajan is met by satraps and kings who are the bearers of presents. The whole country of Armenia submits without a battle $(a\mu\alpha\chi t)$, and the emperor enters Satala and Elegia, its strongholds. The humiliating interview at which Parthamasiris was deposed is described at length. It takes place at Elegia (c. 18, 19, 20). Trajan then goes to Edessa, and there sees Augarus and receives overtures from other kings (c. 21). Other negociations with petty princes are mentioned while he is in Mesopotamia. From Mesopotamia he marches against Adiabene. Lusius gains possession of Singara and other places without a battle $(a\mu\alpha\chi t)$. Adenystræ, a strong fortress, opens its gates to the Romans, the garrison having been massacred (c. 22). The emperor receives the title of Optimus from the senate. After taking Nisibis and Batnæ, he is also designated Parthicus (c. 23).
- (β) While he is residing at Antioch, an earthquake lays the city in ruins. The consul Pedo is killed. Trajan himself escapes through a window. The shocks last for several days, during which he lives in the open air in the hippodrome (cc. 24, 25).
- (γ) At the approach of spring $(\mathring{v}\pi\mathring{o}\ \mathring{\tau}\mathring{o}\ \mathring{\epsilon}a\rho)$ he sets out on his march into the enemy's country. Vessels built at Nisibis are carried on carts to the Tigris. A bridge across the river is constructed with much difficulty (ἐπιπονώτατα) in the face of the opposing barbarians; and the Roman army crosses. The whole of Adiabene is reduced, including the scenes of Alexander's exploits, Arbela and Gaugamela. After this the Romans advance as far as Babylon itself. not meeting with much opposition from the natives, because Parthia had been wasted by civil wars and was torn asunder by factions. Trajan surveys the wonders of Babylon. He then designs digging a canal between the Euphrates and the Tigris, that his boats may pass through for the construction of a bridge; but this design he abandons on account of the engineering difficulties, and the boats are carried overland. He then enters Ctesiphon, on taking which he is saluted Imperator and 'confirms' the title Parthicus. The senate votes him honours liberally. After taking Ctesiphon, he sets out towards the Red Sea (i.e. the Persian Gulf). He acquires without trouble the island Messene in the Tigris; but owing to the difficulty of navigating the river, he is in great peril. However he reaches the Ocean, which he explores, and sees a vessel sailing for India. He writes an account of his exploits to the senate. His despatches to them, announcing victories, follow in such quick succession that they cannot understand the tidings or even pronounce the names. They however vote him honours freely, and prepare to erect a triumphal arch. Meanwhile, during his journey to the Ocean and back, all the places which he had taken revolt. The bad news reaches Trajan while at Babylon. Accordingly he sends Lusius and Maximus to quell the revolts. Maximus is slain in battle; Lusius 'among many other successes' recovers Nisibis and besieges and sets fire to Edessa. Seleucia is taken by the lieutenant-generals Erycius Clarus and Julius Alexander. Trajan, now fearing fresh difficulties from the Parthians, gives them a king of their own. After this he marches into Arabia, and attacks the city of the Atreni, which had revolted from him. Here however he encounters enormous difficulties and is unsuccessful. He leaves the place. Not long after his health begins to fail. Meanwhile there is an uprising of Jews in Cyrene, accompanied by wholesale massacres. The same thing happens also in Egypt and in Cyprus. Lusius is sent by Trajan and puts down the insurrection. Trajan prepares for another expedition; but his sickness increasing, he sets out on his return to Italy, leaving Hadrian in Syria in command of the army. He dies at Selinus in Cilicia.

Now the winter at Antioch (β) separates the events enumerated in the paragraphs (α) and (γ) respectively; and supposing this to be the winter of 11 $\frac{5}{6}$, we should get two whole years for the operations (α), while only one year and a half would be left for all the campaigns (y). But this is quite disproportionate to their relative difficulty and extent. The operations (a) were confined to a range of territory which compared with the subsequent campaigns was limited, for Trajan does not seem to have advanced beyond the borders of the Greater Armenia, and it is not clear that he himself entered Adiabene at all. Not a single battle appears to have been fought; no delay in crossing great rivers is recorded; not one siege is mentioned; and altogether the operations resolve themselves into a straight-forward bloodless march. But the incidents (γ) are wholly different in character. They extend from Cyprus and Cyrene to the Persian Gulf. There are subjugations and revolts and subjugations again. There are boats to be built and dragged overland, and rivers to be bridged, and cities to be besieged. Trajan and his generals appear now here and now there—over vast tracts of country. Dierauer speaks of the 'astonishing rapidity', the 'breathless haste', of Trajan's movements (pp. 173, 181). But with this apportionment of the time, we have something more than breathless haste; and it may fairly be asked whether human energy could have crowded all these operations within the limits thus assigned to them.

The same result seems to follow from an investigation of the chronology of the emperor's titles. We have seen (pp. 396, 411) that Optimus occurs on more than one inscription belonging to the year 114, and one of these, a military diploma found at Carnuntum in Pannonia, bears the date Sept. 1. The designation Parthicus on the other hand is less frequent. Hitherto it has been found only on one monument belonging to this year, a non-official inscription in the province of Baetica (see above, p. 412 sq). It must therefore have been given in sufficient time to get known in Spain before the close of the year.

These facts are in harmony with the meagre notice of Dion, in which he represents both titles as conferred during the first part of the eastern campaign, and Optimus as preceding Parthicus. But the date of the latter title has an important bearing on our investigation. It was conferred, says Dion, after he had taken Nisibis and Batnæ, i.e. after he had overrun Mesopotamia and while he was close to the frontier of Adiabene, so that the operations (a) were already drawing to a close. Indeed it seems probable from Dion's account that he left Lusius to complete them, while he himself returned to Antioch. This being so, the operations (a) are all exhausted in the year 114, and nothing is left for 115.

So again with the successive titles of Imperator. In the years A.D. 114, 115, Trajan rises from Imperator vi to Imperator xi, if not to Imperator xii, so that the title is conferred five times, if not six; whereas in A.D. 116, 117, there are only two fresh accumulations at most. This ratio of five to two, or possibly of six to one, would be out of all proportion to the respective operations (a) and (γ). On the other hand, if all the events (a) were comprised in the year 114, the three fresh titles vii, viii, and ix, which belong to that year, would supply all that the history requires; and four accumulations of the titles would still remain for the numerous operations (γ) of the years A.D. 115, 116.

On these grounds I have assumed that the winter of the earthquake was $11\frac{4}{5}$, not $11\frac{5}{6}$; and the incidents are arranged accordingly in the chronological table. The distribution of the subsequent events however which fall to the years 115, 116, 117, is still left undetermined by the monuments, and here conjecture must step in. It seems probable however that the entrance into Ctesiphon, which was the crowning triumph of the expedition, took place at the close of 115, and that the winter 115 was spent in this city. This is a reasonable, though not certain inference from the language of Dion. He says that Trajan after leaving Ctesiphon set out to visit the Red Sea (i.e. the Persian Gulf) but that 'owing to the wintry season (or the stormy weather) and the rapidity of the Tigris and the reflux of the ocean he was in some peril.' The expression ὑπὸ χειμῶνος is not indeed conclusive in itself as to the season of the year'; but in conjunction with the description of the danger it points naturally to the winter or the very early spring. The documents are quite consistent with when winter is intended; e.g. Thucyd. vi. $34 \ \epsilon \xi \omega \sigma \theta \hat{\eta} \nu \alpha \iota \ \tilde{\sigma} \nu \tau \hat{\eta} \ \tilde{\omega} \rho \alpha \ \epsilon \iota s \chi \epsilon \iota \mu \hat{\omega} \nu \alpha$. In fact $\dot{\nu} \pi \dot{\sigma} \ [\tau \sigma \hat{\upsilon}] \chi \epsilon \iota \mu \hat{\omega} \nu \sigma s$ may have several meanings; (1) 'stormy weather', e.g. Thucyd. vi. 104 τὰs ναθς ὅσαι ἐπόνησαν ὑπὸ τοῦ χειμώνος, Antiphon Tetral. i. 2. 1 (p. 116) οἱ δυστυχοῦντες, ὁπόταν μὲν ὑπὸ χειμώνος πονῶσιν, εὐδίας γενομένης παύονται: (2) 'severe climate', as at high altitudes, e.g. Herod. viii. 138 οὖρος κέεται, Βέρμιον οὔνομα, ἄβατον ὑπὸ χειμώνος: (3) 'winter season', e.g. Thucyd. ii. 101 ὑπὸ χειμώνος ἐταλαιπώρει (comp. c. 102 τοῦθε τοῦ χειμώνος), Herod. iv. 62 ὑπονοστέει γὰρ δὴ aleὶ ὑπὸ τῶν χειμώνων.

this view. The official assumption of the title Parthicus was, as we have seen (p. 412), coincident with the entrance into Ctesiphon. This title is not wanting on any document belonging to the year 116.

Nor again do the inscriptions which bear the name of the consul Pedo offer any impediment to this solution, as some critics seem to think. If the earthquake occurred during this winter, he must have perished soon after he had assumed office, probably not later than February. The news might not have reached Rome before March. Of the documents bearing his name, some merely mention him as the eponym of the year (e.g. C. I. L. VI. 1984, 2404, 2411). These therefore have no bearing on the question. The only two which have a date both belong to the month of January (C. I. L. VI. 543, dated Id. Jan., and VI. 43, 44, dated v Kal. Febr.), while he was probably still alive, but at all events before his death was known at Rome.

The day on which S. Ignatius was commemorated is a fit subject for investigation, for it has some indirect bearings which are not unimportant. It varied at different times and in different places.

- 1. OCTOBER 17. This was the original day observed as the anniversary of the saint's martyrdom in Syria and Greece, as will be evident from the following facts.
- (i) Chrysostom in his panegyric on S. Ignatius states that the festival of the martyr followed immediately on that of S. Pelagia; Hom. in S. Ignat. (Op. 11. p. 562 sq). The grace of the Spirit, he says, sets before us its banquets of the martyrs in rapid succession (συνεχεῖς ἡμῖν καὶ ἐπαλλήλους τὰς τῶν μαρτύρων παρατιθέναι τραπέζας). Only the other day it was a young virgin Pelagia who entertained us; to-day the valiant Ignatius has succeeded to her festival (πρώην γοῦν ἡμᾶς κόρη κομιδῆ νέα καὶ ἀπειρόγαμος ἡ μακαρία μάρτυς Πελαγία...εἰστίασε· σήμερον πάλιν τὴν ἐκείνης ἑορτὴν ὁ μακάριος οὖτος καὶ γενναῖος μάρτυς Ἰγνάτιος διεδέξατο). The persons, he adds, are different, but the table is one.

This statement created a difficulty. The Pelagia here mentioned was doubtless the saint of Antioch, in whose honour Chrysostom delivered two orations which are extant. But, whereas the day of Ignatius in the Greek calendar is December 20, neither this nor any other Pelagia is commemorated in December or even in the preceding month in any known calendar. The days assigned to Pelagia of

- (ii) The Syriac Ms Brit. Mus. Add. 12,150 is described in Wright's Catalogue of Syriac MSS p. 631. It is probably the oldest dated ms in existence, having been written A.D. 411. At the close of the volume, which contains portions of the Clementine Homilies and Recognitions, the Books against the Manicheans by Titus of Bostra, the Theophania and Palestinian Martyrs of Eusebius, etc., in Syriac versions, is a Syriac Martyrology, in which the names of the Western martyrs are arranged in the order of the Syrian months. This Martyrology has been published and translated by Wright in the Journal of Sacred Literature VIII. pp. 45 sq. 423 sq. Under the month Former Teshri (October) we have, among other names;
 - 8. At Antioch, Pelagia.
 - 17. Ignatius, bishop of Antioch, of the number of the ancient confessors.

Attention was called to this entry by Zahn (Ign. et Pol. Ep. pp. xiii, 343, 381), who thus in his later work corrected his earlier conjecture as to the time.

Here then we have found what we sought. The MS, as we have seen, dates from the early years of the 5th century; but the Martyrology itself, even in its Syriac dress, must be much older. It is full of errors arising from the confusion of Syriac letters having similar forms, and therefore probably is removed by several stages of transcription from the original Syriac document. But this Syriac document itself was a translation from the Greek (see Zahn Ign. et Pol. Ep. p. 381). We shall probably therefore be correct in assigning the work to a date not later than about the middle of the 4th century. At all events it will be older than S. Chrysostom's panegyric; and it seems to have emanated from Antioch or the neighbourhood.

(iii) In the Syriac translation of the Antiochene Acts of Ignatius, published by Mcesinger (p. 12, l. 1; comp. p. 15 for the translation), the date of the martyr's death, which in the extant Greek and Latin copies of this same document is given December 20, appears as 'the seventeenth of the Later Teshri' (i.e. November). Comparing this statement with the previously mentioned Syrian Martyrology, and bearing in mind that no calendar places the commemoration of the saint on November 17, we can hardly doubt that it is a slip for the Former Teshri, so that here also the same date (Oct. 17) is given. The translator doubtless substituted the day of commemoration which was still kept by his own church for the day which he found in the Greek document before him (see below, p. 423). Thus the commemoration of Oct. 17 survived, in some Syrian Churches at least, long after the Antiochene Acts were composed.

(iv) I have also found this date of the festival preserved in a Jacobite Syriac calendar in the Vatican Ms Syr. xxxvii, described in Assemani Bibl. Apost. Vatic. Cod. MSS Catal. Pars i. Tom. ii. p. 244, a volume of miscellaneous contents brought from Mesopotamia. On p. 250 sq is 'Kalendarium per anni circulum festorum Domini et sanctorum ordinatum a sancto Jacobo Edesseno.' It contains these notices;

Oct. 15 'Isaiah of Aleppo; and the decease of Mar Asia [the Physician] who is also Pantaleon; and Ignatius of Melitene who is also the Runner¹; and Mar Phineas of Hah.'

Oct. 17 'The Prophets generally; and Hosea the Prophet; and Ignatius Nurono; and Theophilus of Alexandria.'

Jan. 29 'Burial of the bones of Ignatius Nurono; and Severus the Capharsæan, Archimandrite of Kartamin; and the Martyrs of Galatia.'

The celebration of the other Ignatius two days before was probably due to an attraction. We shall meet with other instances in the calendar of this tendency to bring into proximity saints bearing the same name. Of Jan. 29, as the day of the translation of our Ignatius from Rome to Antioch, I shall have to speak hereafter.

(v) A search through the Syriac calendars in the British Museum, which Dr Wright kindly undertook at my request, has brought to light one interesting entry.

The Ms Add. 17,134 is dated A.D. 675, and was probably written by the hand of the famous Jacob of Edessa himself (see Wright's Catalogue of Syriac MSS p. 330 sq). It contains chiefly Hymns of Severus and others (among these a Hymn on Ignatius, and another on cur cers huis. Rheindh airsh: hylfena chalisa liyaisaa arsich : 648 lot credeai edrig ara rairsh hylfena Ligina chalisa : 658 lot 'On the 1st of the Later Kanun [January]; Of the holy fathers Ignatius, Basilius, Gregorius, and the rest.'

'On the 17th of the Former Teshri [October]; Of the holy (ones),

Ignatius, Gregorius, Basilius.'

S. Basil died on the first day of the year 379, and his commemoration was and is kept accordingly on Jan. 1, while Oct. 17, as we have seen, was the festival of Ignatius1. Here then they make common cause—each sharing his festival with the other. This phenomenon illustrates other notices respecting Ignatius. Of the 125 Epithronian Orations, delivered by Severus of Antioch and preserved in Syriac versions, six (9, 37, 65, 84, 102, 116) were spoken on the festival of S. Basil and S. Gregory² (Wright's Catalogue p. 534 sq, Cureton C. I. p. 215 sq. p. 247 sq). Respecting four of these we are told that they were delivered in the Church of Ignatius, that is, no doubt, in the ancient Tychæum, which had been converted into a Christian church, and whither the bones of Ignatius had been translated from the Cemetery. In one case it is distinctly said that the delivery of the oration on the Cappadocian fathers in this church was 'according to custom,' while in three reference is made to Ignatius, and the preacher dwells on the resemblance of Basil and Gregory to this early martyr of Antioch. This habitual association of their names by the great Monophysite patriarch of Antioch may have suggested a corresponding arrangement in the calendar of the great Monophysite father of Edessa. At all events the two cannot be independent. But, however this may be, these notices show that Oct. 17 continued to be the festival of S. Ignatius after the Monophysite schism, and had not yet been supplanted by Dec. 20.

¹ The day of Gregory Nazianzen is Jan. 25. On Jan. 30 the Greek Church (besides their several commemorations) commemorates in common Basil, Gregory, and Chrysostom; but this common festival was not instituted till the 11th century.

² These six homilies were evidently delivered on Jan. 1, for they appear between homilies on the Nativity and the Epiphany.

- (vi) Another trace of this day appears in the Bollandist Acta Sanctorum Feb. 1 (I. p. 14, ed. nov.), where, after mention of the proximity to S. Pelagia's day in S. Chrysostom's time, the editors say 'Neque in Junio neque in Octobri ulla. S. Ignatii in martyrologiis reperitur observata solennitas, si quaedam annotata MSS excipiantur Carthusianorum Bruxellensium, in quibus xvii Octobris traditur B. Ignatii martyris translatio.' As the day of the martyrdom was already fixed for them in their own calendar at a different time, these Carthusians would naturally assume that October 17 must be the day of the translation of the reliques. But whence they derived their information, I do not know.
- 2. DECEMBER 20. This is the common date of the martyrdom, which prevailed in the Greek and other Eastern Churches at a later age. The Menæa contain two festivals of our saint.

Dec. 20. The anniversary of the martyrdom (Μνήμη τοῦ ἀγίου ἱερομάρτυρος Ἰγνατίου τοῦ Θεοφόρου).

The στίχοι are

Λέουσιν, Ἰγνάτιε, δεῖπνον προὖτέθης, Κοίνωνε δείπνου μυστικοῦ, θάρσους λέον.

Εἰκάδι Ἰγνάτιος θάνε γαμφηλῆσι λεόντων.

Jan. 29. The return of the reliques (Ἡ ἀνακομιδὴ τῶν Λειψάνων τοῦ ἀγίου ἱερομάρτυρος Ἰγνατίου τοῦ Θεοφόρου).

Χάρις λέουσιν, Ἰγνάτιε, παμβόροις Σοῦ σώματος λιποῦσι καὶ πιστοῖς μέρος. Τῆ δ' ἐνάτη ἐπάνουδος Ἰγνατίφ εἰκάδι τύχθη.

This second festival is almost as prominent in the Menæa as the first.

The Armenian calendar agrees substantially with the later Greek as regards the day of the martyrdom, though it exhibits slight variations. In the Armenian Acts of Ignatius (§ 49) the date is given ix Kal. Jan., i.e. Dec. 24. It has been suggested above that this was an alteration made arbitrarily from xiii Kal. Jan. (Dec. 20)—the day given in the original Greek from which this portion of the Armenian Acts is taken—because Dec. 24 was the Armenian day of commemoration at the time when the translator or transcriber lived. Just in the same way we have seen (p. 420) that the Syrian translator in this very passage has substituted another day, to bring it into conformity with the usage of the Syrian Church. The day in the Armenian calendar was originally, we may suppose, identical with the day in the Greek; but the beginnings of the Armenian months at that time did not exactly synchronize with the beginnings of the Greek months. In the same way Dec. 20 is Choiak 24 in the Egyptian, and Tahsas 24 in the Ethiopic calendar (see below p. 425 sq). In the Armenian Menologies, if I am correctly informed, the day is given Dec. 20, conformably to the Greek calendar. On the other hand in two Armenian calendars reprinted in Assemani (Bibl. Orient. III. p. 648, p. 654) it is neither Dec. 24 nor Dec. 20, but Dec. 17. Whether this slight variation again can be explained by some fluctuation in the Armenian year or not, I am unable to say. It should be observed however that this last date agrees with some early forms of the Latin calendar (see below p. 430). In the two Armenian calendars last mentioned there is also a second day of commemoration for this saint; Jan. 29 in the one (p. 645), and Jan. 30 in the other (p. 649). This second commemoration corresponds to the festival of the translation in the Greek calendar.

The earliest document which gives December 20 for the martyrdom is the Antiochene Acts of Ignatius (§ 7 τη πρὸ δεκατριῶν καλανδῶν Ἰαννου-αρίων). Notwithstanding the various reading of the Syriac version mentioned above (p. 420), the existing Greek and Latin texts unquestionably give the date which stood originally in this document; for this xiiith before the Kalends is mentioned in the body of the work (§ 6 ἡ λεγομένη τῆ Ῥωμαϊκῆ φωνῆ τρισκαιδεκάτη), where it belongs to the texture of the story, and where the number is left undisturbed by the Syriac translator himself.

3. July 1. This appears to have been the anniversary of the martyrdom, as commemorated in the Egyptian Churches.

The correct text of the Roman Acts of Martyrdom is unquestionably (§ 12) καὶ ἔστιν ἡ μνήμη τοῦ θεοφιλεστάτου καὶ γενναίου μάρτυρος Ἰγνατίου μηνὶ πανέμω νεομηνία, 'in the month Panemus on the 1st day,' as it appears in P, the best of the three Greek Mss. The retention of this date is the more remarkable, because this document is inserted in a hagiology for December (see above, p. 364); its place having been adapted to the later usage of the Eastern Churches as regards the commemoration of Ignatius, but the corresponding change in the month and day, which was thus required, having been overlooked. So too the date is given in the Memphitic version, πετοπαι μπαιλοτ εμβατικοτή εροφιατα πρωπέσω σε παπέπος κατα πρεπίχημα σε πέτος ξ ήεπιπ, 'the first of the month which is called according to the Romans Panemus, but according to the Egyptians the seventh of Epiphi [Abib].' The Macedonian names of the months prevailed in Egypt; and in Macedonian nomenclature July was Panemus. The Egyptian equivalent was Epiphi; but the native Egyptian months only coincided roughly, and Epiphi began on June 25, so that Panemus I = Epiphi 7; see Clinton Fast. Hellen. III. pp. 360, 363, Ideler Handb. d. Chron. I. p. 143 sq. So too the heading of these Acts in this Coptic Version describes the martyrdom as taking place icor 7 иплавот єпип, 'on the seventh of the month Epiphi.' And again the corresponding notice in the Armenian Acts of Martyrdom (§ 52), taken from these Roman Acts, runs 'Memoriam Deo dilecti et fortis propugnatoris Ignatii in Hrotitz mensis die primo [secundum Graecos Decembr. 20] manifestavimus vobis etc.' (p. 547, Petermann). Hrotitz is the last of the Armenian months, but the Armenian year commenced with August, so that here again we have the date July 1. The words in brackets therefore (an addition, I suppose, of the editor Aucher) do not give the Greek equivalent in time, but communicate the information that the day was different in the Greek calendar. It has been observed already (p. 375) that this statement is quite inconsistent with an earlier notice in these same Armenian Acts (§ 49), 'Facta est res haec ante ix [secundum Graecos xiii] Kalendas Januarias' (p. 545), taken from the Antiochene Acts.

This then (July 1) was the original date for the martyrdom in this document; but in the other Greek MSS VL it is altered to conform to the later Greek usage μηνὶ Δεκεμβρίφ εἰκάδι, and L also adds the day of the translation of the reliques Jan. 29, ἐνεχθέντων δὲ ἐν ἀντιοχείφ τῶν τιμίων αὐτοῦ λειψάνων μηνὶ Ἰαννουαρίφ εἰκάδι ἐννάτη.

This same day, Epiphi [Abib] 7, was also, I do not doubt, the original festival of the martyrdom in the native Coptic Churches. Melchite Coptic calendars indeed, as we should expect, follow the later Greek usage, giving Dec. 20 for the martyrdom, and Jan. 29 for the translation. Two such are given in Mai, Script. Vet. Nov. Coll. IV. ii. pp. 50, 52, and p. 169, respectively. In the present Jacobite Coptic calendar also the martyrdom of Ignatius is commemorated on Choiak 24 (Dec. 20), and his name has disappeared from Abib 7 (July 1), which commemorates only Shenuti (see Malan's Documents of the Coptic Church, pp. 16, 34, of the calendar). The translation is dar Epiphi is wanting. Conversely in Brit. Mus. Oriental 1321, dated A.D. 1346, a lectionary with calendar, Shenuti alone without Ignatius is commemorated on Epiphi 7; but the month of Choiak is not included in this volume.

not mentioned at all. But in other Coptic calendars the original Egyptian day, Epiphi 7, is preserved. Probably documents may be extant in which this is the sole day of commemoration. But in those which I have noticed the later Greek usage is combined with the original Egyptian, so that there are two days of commemoration, July 1 and Dec. 20. This double commemoration appears, for instance, in a Jacobite Coptic calendar (in Arabic) given in Mai l.c., where we have under Abib 7 [July 1] 'Sancti Ignatii et Scenudii abbatis' (p. 31), and under Choiak 24 [Dec. 20] 'Sancti Ignatii' (p. 21). A second example appears in another Coptic calendar (in the Arabic language), likewise given in Mai, ib. pp. 103, 117, which under Abib 7 has 'Martyrium Ignatii papae Romae, qui Petrum excepit imperante Trajano,' and under Choiak 24 'Martyrium sancti Ignatii patriarchae Antiochiae, discipuli sancti Johannis evangelistae.' The designation 'Papa Romae' is a hasty inference from the statement that he succeeded S. Peter. This last quoted calendar is stated to be 'juxta recensionem factam a patre Michaele episcopo Atribae et Meligae, et ab aliis sanctis patribus' (p. 93). This Michael flourished about A.D. 1425. The alternate ascendency of Melchites and Jacobites for some generations in the Egyptian Churches will explain this intermingling of different usages.

So far as I have observed, the Ethiopic calendars all commemorate Ignatius on both days, Tahsas 24 and Hamlē 7, corresponding to Dec. 20 and July 1 respectively. So for instance the calendar given in Ludolf, p. 389 sq (see pp. 402, 421). But they most commonly add a third commemoration also, Hamlē 1 (June 25). This is the case with the Ethiopic Synaxarion described in Dillmann's Catal. Cod. Aethiop. Bibl. Bodl. p. 37 sq, where we have the following entries; and similarly in Zotenberg Catal. des MSS Éthiop. de la Bibl. Nation. pp. 169, 189, 190.

Several such Ethiopic Synaxaria are described in Wright's Catal. of Ethiop. MSS in the Brit. Mus. p. 152. At my request Dr Wright examined them with a view to the notices respecting the commemoration of Ignatius, and has furnished me with the following translation of the entries.

Tahsas 24 'And again on this day the holy and illustrious Ignatius, patriarch of Antioch, became a martyr.'

'He was the disciple of the blessed Apostle John the Evangelist, and ministered unto him in preaching, and went with him to many cities. Thereafter he appointed him patriarch over the city of Antioch; and he preached therein with life-giving preaching, and converted many unto the knowledge of the Lord, and baptized them with the Christian baptism, and enlightened them with knowledge, and showed their error unto those who worshipped idols.'

'And the heathen were enraged with him and accused him before king Trajan (Trabyanos), the wicked Cæsar; and they said unto him: Ignatius abolisheth the worship of thy gods, and teacheth the people and bringeth them into the Christian faith of Christ.'

'Then he sent and bade him come unto him. And the king said unto Ignatius: Why hast thou done this? and why hast thou abolished the worship of my gods? and hast brought all men into the worship of Christ? And Ignatius said unto him: If it were possible for me, I would bring thee too, O king, into the worship of Christ, the King of all, that I might make thee a friend of His. And the king said unto him: Let this talk alone, and sacrifice unto my gods; and if not, I will torture thee with great torture. And the holy Ignatius said unto him: Do unto me, O king, all that thou pleasest; because, as for me, I will not sacrifice unto thy filthy gods, and I am not afraid of thy torture, neither of thy fire nor of thy lions; and thou art not able to divide me from the love of Christ, the living King.'

'And when the king heard this, he became very angry, and ordered him to be tortured with great torture. And they tortured him with much torture, and placed coals of fire in his hands, and seized him with pincers (or fleshhooks) a long time, whilst the fire was in his hands; and after this they burned his sides with brimstone ($\theta \epsilon \hat{l}o\nu$) and oil, kindled with fire. And after this they lacerated all his body with knives of iron.'

'And when those who tortured him were weary of torturing him, they cast him into prison, until they could do with him according to all that they wished; and he remained in prison many days. And thereafter they remembered him and brought him forth, and set him before the king.'

'And the king said unto him: O Ignatius, if thou couldest see the gods, their beauty would please thee. And the holy one said unto him: If thou wouldest believe in Christ, He would make thee raise the dead and heal the sick. And the king said unto him: There is no worship which is better than the worship of the sun. And the holy one said unto him: How is it better to worship the sun, which hath been created, and to forsake the Creator, whose kingdom doth not fail? And the king said unto him: Thou speakest not well, but by thy transgression thou drawest all the people of Syria unto the worship of Christ. And the holy one was angered, and said unto him: O king, because I have drawn the people from worshipping idols and have brought them unto the worship of Christ, the Creator of heaven and earth, who was before the world, thou art angry with me and orderest me to sacrifice unto the gods and the filthy idols! But as for me, I will not obey the order, and I will not sacrifice unto devils, but I will sacrifice unto my God, who is in truth, Father and Son and the Holy Spirit?

'Then the king was angered, and commanded that they should let loose upon him two hungry lions, so that they should not leave even a morsel of his flesh. And when the holy Ignatius saw the lions coming nigh unto him, he cried out with a loud voice, and said to the people: Hearken unto my voice, O men of the city of Rome who are assembled here, and know that it is not because of pride and vainglory that I patiently endure this torture, but my patience is because of my Lord Jesus Christ, my God. And lo, my soul desireth that these lions should crush me like wheat, because my soul desireth now to go to my Lord Jesus Christ.'

'And when the king heard what he said, he marvelled and was astonished and said: How great is the patience of the Christians under these tortures! Who is there of the heathens who could patiently endure these tortures for the gods?'

'Then those lions came near to the holy one; and when they saw him, they stood still in terror. And afterwards one of them stretched out his paw upon his neck and seized him. Then he delivered up his soul into the hand of Christ his God with joy, and He fulfilled for him his prayer, and it was not possible for those lions to touch a morsel of his body, but it is preserved in the city of Rome until the second coming of the Lord Jesus Christ.'

'And after this they buried the body of the holy Ignatius in the cemetery which is outside the city, with hymns and psalms. And he accomplished his martyrdom well for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ; and they wrote his contest that it might be profitable for him who reads it and for him who remembers his name. And they made for him a festival in every place, and he intercedes for them in all their afflictions, because he hated the life of this world. May his holy blessing be with etc.'

'Hail to Ignatius, the chosen of God
Who preached the truth unto those who had gone astray!
The heathen, whilst they made sport of him,
Burned his side with boiling oil and sulphur,
And also placed in his hands coals of fire.'

Hamlē I 'And again on this day was the martyrdom of Ignatius the patriarch, may his blessing be with etc.2' of the city of Rome, became a martyr, who was after Peter, in the days of king Trajan (Trabyanos).'

'For when this king heard concerning this father that he taught all the nations and brought them into the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ (to whom be glory) and rejected the worship of idols, he bade him come, and said to him, Sacrifice unto the gods; but he hearkened not unto him, neither did he obey him. And he made him many promises, and was indignant with him; but he heeded not his promises, and feared not his indignation. And after there had been much talk between them, and he would not agree with him about his apostatising, then he brought him to the lions. And the holy Ignatius commanded his people, and strengthened them in the right faith. And one of the lions drew nigh unto him and seized his neck; and he delivered up his soul into the hand of the Lord. And thereafter that lion came not near him at all. And they carried away his body with much honour, and placed it in a fair spot, which the Lord had prepared for it.'

'Hail to Ignatius, who inherited (or occupied) the throne of Peter, The grace of which is exalted above all thrones.

While he was polluting the sacrifice of abominable idols,
As the consummation of his martyrdom a lion killed him,
But did not thereafter come near to his body to touch it¹.'

This triple commemoration may be easily explained. The date Hamlē I is a repetition of Hamlē 7, according to another mode of reckoning. Strictly speaking Panemus (July) I corresponded to Hamlē 7; but roughly Panemus was regarded as equivalent to July. Hence by a careless transference the Egyptian day of commemoration Panemus I became Hamlē I; and this day, having been borrowed directly or indirectly from some Græco-Egyptian calendar, was set down without noticing that Panemus I was already represented by Hamlē 7.

It should be noticed that both the accounts of the martyrdom (under Tahsas 24, and under Hamlē 7) are derived almost entirely from the Roman Acts. This is an additional indication of the Egyptian origin of those Acts (see above p. 381).

4. February 1. The ultimate usage of the Latin Churches is represented in the Martyrology of Ado († A.D. 875);

Feb. I 'Eodem die apud Antiochiam, beati Ignatii episcopi et martyris.' Dec. 17 'Translatio S. Ignatii episcopi et martyris qui tertius post beatum Petrum apostolum Antiochenam rexit ecclesiam.'

See also his Liber de Festiv. p. 191 (Migne), where an account of the saint is given, and the same days are mentioned. The account concludes, 'Reliquiae ejus Antiochiam relatae jacent extra portam Daphniticam in coemiterio ecclesiae, xvi Kalendas Januarias delatae.' The days are the same in Usuard; and so Notker gives Feb. 1 for the martyrdom, but the two last months in the year are wanting in his calendar.

Thus comparing it with the final Greek calendar we find the final Latin calendar substituting Feb. 1 for Dec. 20 as the day of the martyrdom, and Dec. 17 for Jan. 29 as the day of the translation.

But this result was only attained after much fluctuation. In the oldest Latin calendars there is no mention of this saint at all (see Zahn I. v. A. p. 27 sq). This is the case for instance in the Hieronymian Martyrology. In the original Beda (Op. v. 1134, Migne), Dec. 17 is given as the day, not of the translation, but of the martyrdom¹; xvi Kal. Jan. 'Natale S. Ignatii episcopi et martyris qui tertius Antiochiae post Petrum apostolum episcopus duodecimo Trajani anno ad bestias vinctus Romae [l. Romam] missus est. Reliquiae tamen corporis ejus Antiochiae jacent (extra portam Daphniticam in coemeterio ecclesiae)'; while no other day is commemorated in connexion with this saint. The same is also the case with Rhabanus Maurus (Op. IV. II86, Migne), who repeats almost the same words; and with Wandalbert (Migne's Patrol. Lat. CXXI. p. 622), whose verses on Dec. 17 are,

'Ignatius sanctus deno sextoque triumphat, Antiochenae urbis pastor martyrque, ferarum Quem dentes panem vivum fecere; sequuntur Quem fuso ob Christum Rufus Zosimusque cruore'; where the companionship of Rufus and Zosimus with Ignatius is taken from Polycarp Phil. 9. These facts seem to show that, when Dec. 17 first appeared in the Latin calendar, it was intended for the martyrdom. How this day came to be selected, we can only conjecture. But I think it may be explained as a confusion of Oct. 17 and Dec. 20, the two days of the martyrdom in the earlier and later Greek calendar. On the other hand Zahn (I. v. A. p. 28) suggests that it is due to attraction, the commemoration of another martyr bearing the same name having already, as he supposes, been fixed on Dec. 25 (see Martyr. Hieron. Dec. 25, Hieron. Op. XI. p. 545). Meanwhile in other calendars in the West Feb. 1 had been fixed for the martyrdom of Ignatius of Antioch. This day must have been selected arbitrarily without any reference to tradition; but it would be suggested, as Zahn supposes (l. c.), by proximity to the festival of the African martyr bearing the same name Ignatius or Egnatius (see Cyprian Epist. xxxix. 3, p. 583 Hartel), who was already commemorated on Feb. 3 (see the Bollandist Act. Sanct. Februarius 1. p. 325 sq, ed. nov.)1. Again, Feb. 1 appears as the commemoration of Polycarp's martyrdom in some early Latin calendars (e.g. Martyr. Hieron.), and the memory of Ignatius of Antioch was inseparably connected with that of Polycarp. Thus the earlier Latin calendars exhibit two days as claimants for the martyrdom of Ignatius of Antioch, Dec. 17 and Feb. 1; and the ultimate form of the Roman calendar is, I am disposed to think, an attempt to reconcile these rival claims. Feb. 1 was allowed to retain the martyrdom, while Dec. 17 was compensated with the translation. This last adjustment would be the more easy, because those martyrologies which give Dec. 17 as the day of Ignatius include in the appended account of the saint the notice of the deposition of his bones at Antioch as related by S. Jerome. In this way 'Translatio' would be inserted on Dec. 17, and 'Natale' (where it occurred) would be removed.

From this account it will have appeared that the commemoration of Ignatius of Antioch only obtained a place among the festivals of the Latin Church at a comparatively late date, and even then with many fluctuations. But in these islands several centuries more elapse before he is recognised; and indeed he seems never to have obtained a firm footing in our northern calendars, whether Celtic or English. This appears, I think, from the calendars published in Hampson's Medii Aevi Kalendarium, and in Forbes's Kalendars of Scottish Saints. Even in those which belong to as late a date as the 14th century his name is frequently wanting, and S. Brigid still retains sole possession of Feb. 1.

The lesson from the Gospels, appropriated to the commemoration of S. Ignatius, was Mark ix. 32—40. This appropriation was owing ever in the early Carthaginian calendar of the 5th century appears to be June 14, not Feb. 3. But he was transferred to Feb. 3, before Ignatius of Antioch was assigned to Feb. 1; see Zahn I. v. A. p. 28 sq.

to the legend, founded on a misinterpretation of the name θεοφόρος, that Ignatius was the child whom our Lord took up in His arms and blessed. The legend appears in the Menæa and in the Metaphrast's Life, and through these channels it obtained currency as the recognised tradition of the Church. This lesson is assigned to his day, Dec. 20, in the Jerusalem Syriac Lectionary (p. 478, ed. Miniscalchi Erizzo), of which the date is A.D. 1030. So too in another Melchite Syriac Lectionary, dated A.D. 1216, of which an account is given by Assemani Bibl. Vat. Cod. MSS Catal. 11. p. 103 sq; see p. 121. In a Syriac Praxapostolos, likewise Melchite, described by Assemani (l. c. p. 137 sq), of which the date is A.D. 1041, and which was written in the neighbourhood of Antioch, I find a lesson from Heb. iv. 14 sq "Εχοντες οὖν ἀρχιερέα μέγαν κ.τ.λ. assigned to Dec. 20 'Coronatio episcopi Ignatii.' Again, in the Augsburg (Munich) MS of the interpolated Ignatian Epistles [g,] a marginal note points to a lesson taken from Ignatius himself, Rom. 4 εγω γράφω κ.τ.λ., as ordered to be read έν τη μνήμη τοῦ άγίου Ίγνατίου.

It will have appeared from the above account that the translation of the remains plays an important part in the commemoration of the saint. A few words therefore will be necessary respecting the history of the reliques, in order to clear up some points relating to the Calendar. Three distinct translations, real or imaginary, must be kept in mind.

I. The translation from Rome to Antioch. Of this incident Eusebius betrays no knowledge at all. At the close of the fourth century however, if not earlier, it was believed that the saint was buried at Antioch. Jerome in his Catalogue (§ 16), written A.D. 392, says explicitly 'The remains of his body lie at Antioch outside the Daphnitic Gate in the Cemetery.' As this is the only statement respecting Ignatius which he superadds to the particulars given by Eusebius (see above p. 377 sq), it may be presumed that he derived it from local sources; and perhaps he may himself have seen the real or reputed tomb of the martyr. This belief supposes a translation. Accordingly S. Chrysostom, when he pronounces his panegyric on Ignatius, delivered while he was still a presbyter at Antioch (A.D. 386-397), dwells at some length on the return of the reliques from the metropolis. Just as an athlete, he says, is carried home in triumph after his victory with cheers, and not allowed to set foot on the ground, so also the cities in succession, receiving Ignatius from Rome and bearing him on their shoulders, escorted him as far as Antioch, praising the crowned victor. At the moment, he continues, he brought advantage and prosperity to all those cities through which he passed; but from that time forward to the present day he enriches the city of Antioch (Op. 11. p. 600). In all this however there is nothing which suggests that Chrysostom was building upon any definite tradition. His language looks like a mere imaginative effort by which a skilful orator would dress up the bare fact of the restoration of the body to Antioch. Whether the bones of the saint were actually so restored or not, it is impossible to say. Such a belief, where there is no evidence of its existence before the close of the fourth century, is not entitled to serious credit. The mere name found on a tombstone would be sufficient to start the belief, where the disposition was ready. However from this time forward the translation from Rome to Antioch became a settled belief. It was commemorated, as we have seen, on Jan. 29 in the Greek and Syrian Churches probably as early as the fifth century; and in the Latin Churches also at a later date it appropriated a day to itself, Dec. 17.

- 2. The translation from the Cemetery outside the Daphnitic Gate to the Tychæum within the city. This second translation is so far historical, that some bones believed (whether truly or not) to be those of Ignatius were so translated. This took place, as we have seen (387 sq), some time during the first half of the fifth century under Theodosius the younger.
- 3. The translation from Antioch to Rome. This must be considered as a pure fiction, of which the growth is easily traced. The Acts of Martyrdom, which I have called the Roman, were written, as we have seen, not before the fifth century. By this time it was the stedfast belief in Antioch and the neighbourhood, that the reliques of the saint reposed in his own city. But the Roman Acts were composed probably in Egypt, and certainly without any knowledge of Antiochene belief. The writer therefore, being unfettered by any tradition, supposed that, as the saint had died at Rome, so he was buried there. This was the natural supposition. Accordingly he dressed up his statement in an attractive form. Before the 9th century however these Roman Acts, clumsily combined with the Antiochene Acts, had been translated into Latin (see above pp. 371, 382) and circulated in the West. A story so acceptable to Roman feelings could not be overlooked; and it soon became a settled belief in Rome that the body of the martyr lay in the city where, as these Acts express it, 'Peter was crucified and Paul was beheaded and Onesimus was perfected.' But by this time the Antiochene story of the translation to Antioch was also an established belief far beyond the region of Antioch and its neighbourhood. To reconcile the two therefore, it was necessary to suppose a retranslation at some later date. As to any such retranslation history and legend alike are silent; but the body, being at Rome, must have got to Rome somehow. Accordingly Baronio in his notes on the Martyrologium Romanum modestly suggests that they were removed from Antioch to Rome under Justinian, when the former city was devastated by Chosroes and the Persians, A.D. 540. This however is impossible, as the Bollandist editors (p. 35) point out, since half a century later Evagrius speaks of the saint's body as still at Antioch. In another passage however, in his Annales, Baronio states the case so as to evade this difficulty. Under the year A.D. 637, having occasion to speak of the Saracenic capture of Antioch in the time of Heraclius, he writes, 'Plane his temporibus, quibus sive a Persis antea, sive ab Arabibus postea iisdem Mahometanis et Sarracenis captae sunt nobilissimae civitates Orientis. Alexandria, Hierosolyma et Antiochia...accidit ut...complura sanctorum, tum martyrum, tum confessorum, corpora translata fuerint in occidentem... Romam autem translatas tunc fuisse venerandas reliquias Ignatii martyris Antiochia, constans fama vetusque traditio, potius quam scripta, significant', where the previous description leaves his tunc several centuries to move about in. But it is clear from his account that he had not found this tradition (if tradition it could be called) in any writer even of moderate antiquity. Of the numerous churches in Rome and elsewhere in Western Europe, which profess to have different bones of this martyr, an account is given in the Bollandist Acta Sanctorum Feb. 1. p. 36 sq. The most persistent, and perhaps the most ancient, claim is that put forward by the Basilica of San Clemente at Rome, which is asserted to possess the main reliques —the body—of the martyr. There is a certain propriety in the story which assigns a common resting-place to the remains of the two great Apostolical Fathers. Only a few years ago (A.D. 1868), when owing to the excavations in this ancient basilica the reliquary supposed to contain the bones of the two martyred saints had been for a time displaced, it was restored to its old position with much pomp. On this occasion the reliques of Ignatius were carried in solemn procession into the Flavian Amphitheatre, where he himself had suffered, and back again to the church. Of this latest 'translation' an account is given in Mullooly's Saint Clement and his Basilica p. 305 sq.

day of commemoration was October 17, and that this day afterwards gave place to December 20. How and when did the change take place? The account of Evagrius, quoted above (p. 386 sq), suggests the answer to this question. We are told by this historian that from the time when the reliques were translated to the Tychæum by Theodosius to his own day a public festival was observed with general rejoicing and that his contemporary the patriarch Gregory had added to the splendours of this festival. It is the natural inference from his language that the day so observed was the anniversary, not of the martyrdom, but of the translation to the Tychæum. If so, it was probably December 20, as Zahn (I. v. A. p. 53, Ign. et Pol. Ep. p. 358) suggests. The previous translation from Rome to Antioch was already commemorated on Jan. 29, in addition to the commemoration of the martyrdom on Oct. 17; and as three distinct festivals for this one saint were felt to be excessive, Oct. 17 would fall into disuse, and the commemoration of Dec. 20 would come to be regarded as the anniversary of the martyrdom.

The only anniversary therefore, which has any claims to consideration as the true day of the martyrdom, is Oct. 17. Nor is this date improbable in itself. Ignatius wrote his Epistle to the Romans on August 24 (Rom. 10); and he was about to embark at Troas at the time. This interval of between seven and eight weeks would be long enough, and not too long, for the journey from Troas to Rome and for the necessary delays which might occur on the way or after his arrival. On the other hand the later day of commemoration, Dec. 20, for which the Antiochene Acts are our earliest authority, leaves an interval of nearly four months-a delay not easily reconcilable with other notices in these same Acts; for this document represents the journey as hurried and the sentence as executed immediately on the saint's arrival in Rome. But even the observance of Oct. 17 cannot be traced back earlier than the later decades of the fourth century; and there are reasons for thinking that the commemoration had not then been established very many years. It is not indeed impossible that the initiators of this festival may have had authentic information as to the day of the martyr's death; but after the lapse of more than two centuries this cannot be regarded as probable.

The year of the martyrdom is not altogether independent of the day; but it has a still more direct bearing on the main question of the Ignatian controversy, and deserves special consideration.

So long as the personal interview with Trajan at Antioch was accepted without question as an accredited truth, it formed a definite starting point, from which investigations respecting the date of the martyrdom issued. Taking this assumed fact as his basis, Pearson in his posthumous disquisition (de Anno quo S. Ignatius a Trajano etc., first printed from his papers by Smith in S. Ignatii Epistolae Genuinae etc. p. 58 sq) endeavoured to show that Ignatius was condemned in the earlier part of A.D. 116 and suffered at Rome at the close of the same year. He proved conclusively, as against Ussher, who had dated the martyrdom A.D. 107, that Trajan's departure for the East took place several years afterwards, and that this early date therefore was untenable. Of other statements in the Antiochene Acts, which conflict with this result, e.g. the names of the consuls, which belong to A.D. 107, and the reference to the subjugation of the Dacians, which took place in this or the preceding year, he says nothing. Doubtless he regarded these Acts as interpolated1; but his dissertation seems to have been left unfinished, and hence his silence.

Pearson's dissertation held its ground as quite the most important contribution to the subject till recent years. But it turned wholly on he cannot have entertained a theory so irrational as this. Pearson's words are loose, and we may suspect some misprint; but they must mean that Ignatius was carried to Rome and wrote his epistles A.D. 107, according to the general opinion, but A.D. 113, as he himself believed. He seems to have been already meditating the theory which he puts forward in his posthumous dissertation, but it did not affect his immediate argument, and he could therefore pass the subject over. So again in Vind. Ign. p. 435 he provisionally accepts the common date, A.D. 107. Smith states in his preface that Pearson at one time agreed with Ussher in placing the martyrdom in this year.

the interview at Antioch, as related in the Antiochene Acts of Martyrdom. The credit of these Acts however has been irretrievably damaged by recent criticism; and with their authority the only grounds for regarding the interview at Antioch as historical have disappeared. It was unknown to Eusebius, and apparently also to Chrysostom1; and it appears for the first time in these very Acts, which cannot well be assigned to a date earlier than the fifth or sixth century. It was a fiction too, in which a hagiologist would be sorely tempted to indulge. The dramatic gain of confronting the saintly sufferer with his imperial persecutor was too great to be resisted. The martyr lived at Antioch, and Trajan visited Antioch. What more natural than that the two should have stood face to face? Moreover there was an ambiguity in the language in which the fact of the martyrdom was handed down, favourable to this assumption. It was related to have taken place ἐπὶ Τραϊανοῦ, and this might mean equally well 'in the presence of Trajan' or 'in the time of Trajan.' Thus all the elements of the fiction were ready to hand.

Recent criticism has thus given its death-blow to the interview at Antioch, which was at one time regarded as the central fact of the Ignatian history. One attempt however has been made in an unexpected quarter to reverse the verdict. Volkmar endeavours to revive this corpse of an exploded fiction; no longer however from a conservative point of view, from which it was defended by older critics, but with the destructive aim of closing for ever by an a priori negative the question of the genuineness of the Ignatian letters. Owing to the important consequences which thus flow from it, rather than to any inherent probability which it can claim, his theory requires a full investigation once for all.

John Malalas (Chronogr. xi. p. 275, ed. Bonn.) states that the earthquake at Antioch in Trajan's reign took place 'on the 13th of the month Apellæus, which is also December, on the first day of the week, after cock-crow, in the 164th year according to the reckoning of the said Antiochenes, two years after the arrival of the most divine king Trajan in the East.' The year 164 of the Antiochene era is A.D. 115.

After some intervening matter the same writer (p. 276) adds; 'Now the said king Trajan was residing in the said city (Antioch) when the tyrant's name, and he does not say whether the interview took place at Rome or at Antioch.

visitation (ἡ θεομηνία) took place. And in his presence (or under him) at that time the holy Ignatius, bishop of the city of Antioch, suffered martyrdom (or bore his testimony); for he was exasperated against him, because he reviled him' (ἐμαρτύρησε δὲ ἐπὶ αὐτοῦ τότε ὁ ἄγιος Ἰγνάτιος ὁ ἐπίσκοπος τῆς πόλεως ἀντιοχείας ἡγανάκτησε γὰρ κατ αὐτοῦ, ὅτι ἐλοιδόρει αὐτόν).

Combining these statements with the fact that in the normal Greek calendar Ignatius is commemorated on the 20th of December, Volkmar frames his theory (Handbuch der Einleitung in die Apokryphen 1. p. 49 sq, p. 121 sq; comp. Zur Chronologie des Trajanischen Partherkriegs in the Rheinisches Museum N. F. XII. p. 481 sq, 1857). He is convinced that Ignatius was not sent to Rome at all, but was condemned and executed at Antioch. The populace, he supposes, lashed into fury by the earthquake, demanded the life of Ignatius as a propitiatory offering to the gods. Trajan yielded to their fanaticism; and within a week of the calamity their victim suffered martyrdom in the amphitheatre. From this it follows that the letters must be spurious, for they pretend to have been written during the journey to Rome.

This theory, notwithstanding the slender basis on which it rests, is maintained with great assurance by Volkmar; but it has not generally been received with favour. The anonymous author of Supernatural Religion however has given it his unqualified support, regarding it as 'demonstrated' (I. p. 268), but not alleging any new arguments'; and it may be worth while to enquire what is thought to constitute demonstration in this case.

I. In the first place then it must be remarked that John Malalas did not write earlier than the latter half of the sixth century. His probable date as an author is the age of Justin II (see Mommsen in Hermes vI. p. 381) who reigned A.D. 565—578; though some critics have placed him much later (see Fabric. Bibl. Grace. vII. p. 447, ed. Harles). His date therefore constitutes no claim to a hearing. But his statement is directly opposed to the concurrent testimony of all the preceding centuries, which without a dissentient voice declare that Ignatius suffered at Rome. This is the case with all the writers and interpolators of the Ignatian letters; of whom the earliest is placed, even by those critics who deny their genuineness, about the middle or in the latter half of the second century. It is the case apparently even with the heathen satirist Lucian, who writing soon after A.D. 165 caricatures the progress of Ignatius through Asia Minor in his death of Peregrinus¹. It is the case with the authors of the two Acts of Martyrdom, which, written independently of each other and agreeing in little else, are united in sending the martyr to Rome to die. It is the case necessarily with all those fathers who quote the Ignatian letters in any form as genuine, among whom are Irenæus and Origen and Eusebius and Athanasius and Basil, besides numbers of later writers. It is the case especially with Chrysostom, who on the day of the martyr's festival pronounces at Antioch an elaborate panegyric on his illustrious predecessor, and with Severus, who preaching likewise at Antioch in the very church where the martyr's remains rested, or were supposed to rest, turns aside from his main subject to eulogize him, assuming throughout the traditional belief respecting the place of his martyrdom (Cureton Corp. Ign. p. 247 sq). All these writers lived before, and many of them several centuries before, the time when Malalas wrote. One of the earliest, Origen, writing about a century after the event, directly affirms that Ignatius was martyred at Rome (Ορ. 111. p. 938 τον έν τῷ διωγμῷ ἐν Ῥώμη θηρίοις μαχησάμενον).

But Malalas, it is said, resided at Antioch, and therefore was favourably situated for obtaining correct information. So did Chrysostom—a successor of Ignatius in the see of Antioch—some two centuries before Malalas. So did Severus—likewise a successor in the same see—nearly a century before Malalas. So did Evagrius, who, if the earliest date be adopted, was his contemporary, and who coincides with all preceding writers in placing the martyrdom of Ignatius at Rome. So almost certainly did Joannes Rhetor, whom Evagrius quotes among his authorities, and who must have written some years at least before Malalas. If therefore the testimony of Malalas deserves to be preferred to this cloud of witnesses, it can only be because he approves himself elsewhere as exceptionally sober and accurate and trustworthy in his statements.

- 2. As a matter of fact however, he is the very reverse of all this. Several tests of credibility may be applied to his narrative, and he fails to satisfy any one of them. The questions which the problem suggests are these. Is he generally trustworthy where he touches upon Christian history? Does his account of Trajan's doings harmonize with the notices of credible secular historians? Lastly; Are his statements at this particular point consistent with themselves?
 - (i) His notices of early Christian history are, almost without ex ception, demonstrably false or palpably fabulous. The following are all the notices bearing on the history of the Church during the reigns of Nero and Trajan, with the exception of the supposed 'recall' of S. John from Patmos by Nerva (p. 268); and they will serve therefore as a standard by which we may gauge his general credibility in such matters.

- (a) 'During the reign of the same [Nerva] Manes appeared, etc.' (p. 268). This heresiarch really flourished about A.D. 260—270, so that he is ante-dated by at least a century and a half¹.
- (b) 'And in like manner during his reign gladiators and their exhibitions were prohibited; and the exhibition of hunts (κυτηγίων, venationum) was devised in their stead.' The gladiatorial shows were not abolished till the time of Honorius (Theod. H. E. v. 26), three centuries after the reign of Nerva, owing to the courage of the monk Telemachus. There is indeed in the statute-book an order of Constantine (Cod. Just. xi. 44) dated A.D. 325, 'omnino gladiatores esse prohibemus'; but it evidently was not acted upon. Of Nerva's successor Trajan we are told, that at the celebration of his triumph after the close of the Dacian wars μονομάχοι μύριοι ἢγωνίσαντο (Dion Cass. lxviii. 15). The origin of the misstatement in Malalas may be partially explained from Dion Cass. lxviii. 2.
- (c) 'Until the second year of his [Trajan's] reign the holy John, the Apostle and Divine, was appearing and teaching in Ephesus, being bishop and patriarch; and having disappeared (ἀφανῆ ἐαυτὸν πουήσας) he was no more seen of any one, and no man knoweth to this day what came of him, as Africanus and Irenæus, men of the greatest wisdom, have recorded' (p. 269). Africanus and Irenæus assuredly never wrote anything of the kind. As regards Africanus, we have not the means of confronting this statement with the fact. Irenæus merely says that John survived to the time of Trajan (ii. 22. 5, iii. 3. 3); of his mysterious disappearance not a word.
- (d) Having mentioned the persecution under Trajan (p. 269), he afterwards states that Trajan, while he was at Antioch laying his plans for the war, received a letter from Tiberianus, governor of Palestine, relating to the Christians, in consequence of which he put an end to the persecution. The letter is given in full (p. 273). The story is generally acknowledged to be a fiction, and the letter a forgery.

³ The genuineness of this letter has recently found an advocate in Wieseler

- (e) The next statement relating to Christian history is the notice of the martyrdom of Ignatius (p. 276) with which we are concerned.
- (f) In the very next sentence Malalas introduces an account of further persecutions. He relates how Trajan had five Christian women burnt alive; the emperor then mingled their ashes with the metal from which the vessels used for the baths were cast; the bathers were seized with swooning fits in consequence; the vessels were again melted up, and out of the same metal were erected five pillars in honour of the five martyrs by the emperor's orders. These pillars, adds Malalas, stand in the bath to this day. As if this were not enough, he goes on to relate how Trajan made a furnace, and ordered any Christians, who desired, to throw themselves into it—an injunction which was obeyed by many. 'At that time,' he concludes, 'the holy Drosine and many other virgins were martyred' (pp. 276, 277).

From the company in which it is found, some estimate may be formed of the antecedent trustworthiness of Malalas' statement relating to Ignatius.

(ii) Again; the statement is mixed up with the narrative of Trajan's campaigns in the East, and it is therefore pertinent to enquire what degree of credit is due to this narrative.

(Christenverfolgungen der Cäsaren p. 126 sq, 1878); but his advocacy cannot be considered successful. The arguments against it are as follows. (1) Eusebius is ignorant of any such systematic persecution as this letter supposes; though it was not likely to have escaped him as a native of Palestine. We must infer too that Hegesippus said nothing about it. Otherwise Eusebius would have known of it. (2) The exaggerated expressions condemn themselves; 'I am exhausted with punishing and slaying the Galileans,' 'they do not cease informing against themselves that they may be put to death,' 'I got tired of warning these persons and threatening them that they should not give information to me.' The letter is evidently founded on Pliny's representations to this same emperor and exaggerates them. (3) The titles by which Trajan is addressed are at least suspicious, and savour of a later age, νικητή, θειστάτω, though they might stand.

(4) Tiberianus himself is designated 'governor of Palestina Prima' (ἡγεμών τοῦ πρώτου Παλαιστινών έθνους); whereas this division of Palestine into different provinces is not known to have taken place till much later. Marquardt (Röm. Alterth. IV. p. 261, ed. 2) escapes the difficulty by supposing that this designation was no part of the original document, but was due to Malalas himself. Wieseler (p. 129) endeavours to show that Palestine may have been so divided at an earlier date than is generally believed. If the document had come to us on earlier and more trustworthy authority, we should have felt bound to give full consideration to such possibilities, though they could hardly have been regarded as satisfactory solutions; but, where the sole voucher for its genuineness is a blunderer and fabulist like Malalas, they are powerless to remove the objections. This being so, the document stands self-condemned by its extravagance of language.

Malalas first gives an account of the previous events by which Trajan was provoked to undertake his eastern campaign, wholly irreconcilable with the trustworthy narrative of Dion. He then states that Trajan left Rome in the October of the 12th year of his reign (p. 270). The 12th year would be A.D. 108, if the tribunician years are counted, or A.D. 109, if the starting point be his actual accession to the throne. Neither year can be reconciled with the coins and inscriptions, or with the account of Dion. From all these authentic sources we learn that he did not set out on his eastern expedition till the autumn, A.D. 113. He makes Trajan arrive at Seleucia, while the Persians are holding Antioch. At Trajan's instigation the Antiochenes rise up by night against their Persian masters, and slay them. The few survivors set fire to a part of the city. Trajan orders the carcases of the murdered Persians to be burnt outside the walls at a distance, and drums to be beaten throughout the city to drive away the unrighteous spirits of the slaughtered Persians. After this he entered Antioch, we are told, 'through the Golden Gate, as it is called, that is the Daphnitic, wearing a crown of olive boughs on his head, on the 7th day of the month Audenæus, that is January, being the 5th day of the week, at four o'clock in the day: and he ordered the drums to be beaten for 30 days every night, giving directions also that this should be done every year at the same time in remembrance of the destruction of the Persians.' 'These things,' so he concludes, 'have been recorded by Domninus the chronographer' (p. 272 sq).

These 'Persian Vespers,' as they have been happily called, have no point of coincidence with contemporary history, and are plainly fabulous. Von Gutschmid (Dierauer Geschichte Trajans p. 157, note) conjectures that they may refer to some incident in the later campaign of Valerian against the Persians [A.D. 258—260], but this is mere conjecture. One inference, I think, may be fairly drawn from the story as told by Malalas. It is a legend founded on a snatch of a popular ditty, 'Away, away, Gargari, Fortune' (ἄγε, ἄγε, Γάργαρι, Φορτοῦνε), which he introduces into his account. All this nonsense, it will be observed, is accompanied by the utmost precision of dates.

The remaining notice respecting these eastern campaigns is not reconcilable in its details with Dion's account; but its main incident, the creation of Parthemaspates (so he writes the name) as king of the Parthians, is historical. It should be added that Malalas represents Trajan as sacrificing a beautiful virgin, Calliope by name, 'for the redemption and purification of the city' (ὑπὲρ λύτρου καὶ ἀποκαθαρισμοῦ $\tau \hat{\eta}$ s πόλεωs), and then erecting a statue of her in bronze gilt, apparently represented as impersonating the Fortune of Antioch (p. 275).

(iii) The third criterion was self-consistency. Even this simple test is not satisfied by Malalas.

For instance, this very date of the earthquake, with which we are mainly concerned, is consistent neither with itself nor with a previous date given by this author. He represents it as taking place 'on the thirteenth of December, the first day of the week, after cock-crow¹, in the year 164 according to the Antiochene reckoning [i.e. A.D. 115], two years after the arrival of Trajan in the East' (p. 275). But the 13th of December was not a Sunday in this year. The only years during Trajan's reign, in which Dec. 13 fell on a Sunday, were A.D. 100 and 106. Moreover, this was not two, but five or six years at the least, after Trajan's arrival, according to his own previous reckoning; for he makes him arrive there at the close of his 12th year, i.e. A.D. 108 or 109, as we have already seen (pp. 409, 441). It should be added that in a previous date which he has given (see above, pp. 409, 413) there is the same inconsistency between the day of the month and the day of the week, Thursday Jan. 7. January 7th was not a Thursday in A.D. 100 or 110, either of which years he might mean. The only years in which this day fell on a Thursday during Trajan's reign were A.D. 101 and 1072.

1 Volkmar (Rhein. Mus. N. F. XII. p. 490) falls into the error of translating α' μετὰ ἀλεκτρυόνα 'hora prima matutina,' whereas the practice of Malalas elsewhere (to say nothing else) shows clearly that α' means 'the first day of the week.'

(ii) As regards the 'two years,' the chronographers in their computations generally reckon by current years, so that the arrival in the East would be in A.D. 114 at the close of the year, and the entrance into Antioch on January 7, A.D. 115. (iii) This being so, a transposition sets everything right. The Thursday and the Sunday must change places. Jan. 7, A.D. 115, was a Sunday, and Dec. 13, A.D. 115, was a Thursday. The two dates indeed are not close to each other in Malalas, but probably they were much nearer in the authority from whom he obtained them.

We need not stop to enquire whether any weight is still due to statements which can only be rectified by a combination of hypotheses like this; since Von Gutschmid's solution depends on the date A.D. 114 for the emperor's

3. But again; while the general fidelity of Malalas is thus discredited, it cannot be said that his particular statement here carries with it any appearance of probability. I have already pointed out (p. 413 sq) what serious historical difficulties attend the assertion that the earthquake took place at the end of the year 115. The representation moreover, which the story gives of Trajan's character, is altogether untrue to the life. Nor indeed, if the emperor had so desired, would he have found time at such a crisis to try and to execute Ignatius in the manner suggested. If Volkmar's theory were correct, only seven days elapsed from the outbreak of the catastrophe to the execution of Ignatius in the amphitheatre. But what was the state of things at Antioch at this time? The earthquake, Dion tells us (lxviii. 24 sq), continued for many days (ἐπὶ πλείους ἡμέρας ὁ σεισμὸς ἐπείχεν); Mount Casius was seen to reel and split, and appeared as if it would fall and bury the city; there was a subsidence of other mountains; the emperor himself had escaped through a window, and was camping out of doors in the hippodrome; a great part of Antioch was overthrown; crowds were buried in the ruins; no nation escaped unhurt, says Dion, for owing to the presence of the emperor people had flocked thither from all parts of the Roman dominions. He states moreover that, as the shocks were repeated for many days and nights (ἐπὶ πολλὰς ἡμέρας καὶ departure from Rome, and this is now shown to be erroneous. The inscriptions given above (p. 394 sq), combined with the account of Dion, prove conclusively that the emperor left Rome in the autumn A.D. 113, and wintered at Antioch A.D. 113. Dierauer sees the difficulty (p. 158, note), and speaks of it as the 'only misgiving (nur ein Bedenken)' which arises as regards this solution. But, as this date is the very pivot of the whole, the explanation falls to pieces when it is removed. In C. de la Berge's Essai sur le Règne de Trajan pp. 160, 174 sq (Paris 1877) the inconsistency is still greater. He places Trajan's arrival in the East A.D. 113, and yet accepts Von Gutschmid's solution as 'decisive.' To this end, he tacitly takes Malalas' date for the entry into Antioch as referring to Trajan's second winter there, whereas Malalas distinctly gives it of his first. Whether Von Gutschmid's emendation of 17 for 12 is correct or not, I need not stop to enquire.

Wieseler offers another explanation (p. viii sq) of the date Sunday Dec. 13, A.D. 115. Malalas says μηνί 'Απελλαίω τῷ καί Δεκεμβρίω ιγ'. In an old Tyrian calendar (for which see Ideler Hand. d. Chron. I. p. 435 sq) he finds that Apellaus 13 corresponds to December 30, and December 30 was a Sunday in A.D. 115. He supposes therefore that the reckoning was according to this older calendar, and that Malalas erroneously treated Apellæus as exactly conterminous with December, following the calendar of his own day. This solution does not commend itself; but, if it were true, the date of the earthquake would be useless for Volkmar's purpose, as it would fall ten days later in the year than the supposed day of the martyrdom.

νύκταs), the sufferings of those buried alive were intense, some being mangled to death, others perishing from famine, before they could be extricated. Yet we are asked to believe that in the midst of this confusion a venatio was held in the amphitheatre, in which a victim formerly condemned by the emperor was thrown to the wild beasts.

- 4. But again; the last prop, on which Volkmar's theory rested, has been knocked from under it by the discovery that the anniversary of Ignatius' martyrdom, as kept in the early Antiochene and Syrian Church, was not December 20, but October 17. The only day therefore which has any claim to be regarded as authentic (see above, p. 434) is wholly unconnected with the earthquake. Malalas himself in fact says nothing about the day of the martyrdom, nor does he hint that the earthquake had anything to do with it, but on the contrary ascribes the death of Ignatius to the abuse which he poured upon the emperor. The combination is Volkmar's own; and it is thus shown to be a baseless fabric.
- 5. Lastly; if any other argument were needed to complete the evidence by which the falsity of the theory is shown, it is found in the fact that the error of Malalas can be easily explained by the ambiguities of the Greek language. The words μαρτυρέν, μαρτυρία, which were afterwards used especially of martyrdom, had in the earlier ages a wider sense, including other modes of witnessing to the faith. Again, the expression ἐπὶ Τραϊανοῦ is also ambiguous, as has been already noticed (p. 436), and might signify equally well 'during the reign of Trajan,' or 'in the presence of Trajan¹.' It seems probable therefore, that Malalas stumbled over one or other of these expressions, which he found in some earlier writer, and misinterpreted his authority accordingly².

Under cover of the latter ambiguity more especially the blunder of Malalas would easily shelter itself. The common mode of expressing a date is ἐπὶ τούτου [τοῦ αὐτοκράτορος], ἐπὶ τούτων [τῶν ὑπάτων]; and the following passages relating to the persecutions of Trajan's reign, which I have gathered from different historians and chronographers, will be found, if I mistake not, eminently suggestive, as pointing to the cause of the error in Malalas.

² The former ambiguity is suggested by Lipsius (S. T. p. 7), the latter by Zahn (I. v. A. p. 67), to account for the error of Malalas.

Hegesippus in Euseb. H. E. iii. 32 οὖτω μαρτυρεῖ ἐτῶν ον ἐκατὸν εἴκοσιν ἐπὶ Τραϊανοῦ Καίσαρος καὶ ὑπατικοῦ 'Αττικοῦ (speaking of Symeon the son of Clopas); where, as applied to Trajan, ἐπὶ can only mean 'during the reign of,' though as regards Atticus it might signify 'in the presence of,' as in fact it does in a subsequent passage of Hegesippus, κατηγορήθη...ἐπὶ 'Αττικοῦ τοῦ ὑπατικοῦ, καὶ ἐπὶ πολλαῖς ἡμεραῖς αἰκιζόμενος ἐμαρτύρησεν.

Chron. Pasch. p. 471 Έπὶ τούτου τοῦ Τραϊανοῦ καὶ Μάρκος ὁ εὐαγγελιστής...πυρὶ κατεκαύθη καὶ οὕτως ἐμαρτύρησεν: and lower down, after mentioning Symeon son of Clopas, this chronographer adds, ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ Ἰγνάτιος ἀντιοχέων ἐπίσκοπος ἐν Ῥώμη ἐμαρτύρησεν.

Suidas s. v. Dionysius Areopagita. Μαρτυρίφ τῷ ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ τελειοῦται ἐπὶ Τραϊανοῦ Καίσαρος, ὅτε καὶ ὅ θεοφόρος Ἰγνάτιος ἐν Ῥώμη τὸν τῆς ἀθανασίας διήθλησεν ἀγῶνα.

Now let us suppose that John Malalas, or some previous writer whom he copied, had before him in a chronography of Trajan's reign a sentence running Έπὶ τούτου [τότε] ἐμαρτύρησεν Ἰγνάτιος ὁ τῆς ἸΑντιοχείας ἐπίσκοπος. Being fresh from the fact that Trajan spent a winter at Antioch, and knowing nothing else about the death of Ignatius, he would easily, we might almost say inevitably, draw the conclusion that the martyrdom occurred at Antioch, and that ἐπὶ τούτου signified 'in the presence of this emperor.' If we suppose τότε also to have had a place in our hypothetical chronographer, it may have referred, when in situ, to some previously mentioned incident in the persecution, e.g. the martyrdom of Symeon son of Clopas, as in fact it does refer in Zonaras xi. 22 τούτου [Τραϊανοῦ] κρατοῦντος Συμεων ὁ τοῦ Κλοπᾶ...ἐμαρτύρησεν κ.τ.λ....τότε καὶ ὁ θεοφόρος Ἰγνάτιος κ.τ.λ. But, when separated from its context by Malalas or his predecessor, it would assume quite a different reference.

This supposition that the error of Malalas is due to his having misunderstood his authority is rendered still more probable from another consideration. John, surnamed Madabbar, was bishop of Nikiou (Pshati) in the later decades of the 7th century (Renaudot Hist. Patr. Alexandr. Jacob. pp. 176, 177, 182) and wrote a Chronicle which he carried down to the Arab conquest of Egypt. This work is extant in an Ethiopic translation made from the Arabic (Zotenberg Catal. des MSS Éthiop. de la Bibl. Nation. p. 223 sq, Wright Catal. Ethiop. MSS Brit. Mus. p. 300 sq). In great portions it runs parallel with John Malalas, so that the two accounts were evidently derived from the same source.

Chapter 73 [read 72]. 'After the death of the good king Arwâs [Nerva], Ěndrě-yânôs reigned. He was a lover of idolatry, and the third of those who persecuted the Christians. Many were martyred everywhere, and he condemned them in numbers. Moreover, the saint of God, Ignatius [Agnâtyôs] the patriarch of Antioch [Anşôkîyâ], who had been ordained after Peter the chief of the Apostles, he sent to the city of Rome in chains, and delivered him to the lions.'

'Further, he took them (women) and questioned them, and said to them, Whom do ye worship, and in whom do ye trust, that ye run and are in haste to die? They answered and said, We die for Christ's sake, who will give us everlasting life, and will raise us up from this corrupt body. And he was filled with wrath, because he was a heathen and did not desire the revelation of the resurrection. So he ordered the bodies of the holy women to be cast into the fire; and the very earth upon which the bodies of the holy women fell he ordered to be gathered up and thrown into the (vessel of) brass of the lighter of the public bath, which he had built (and called) by his own name. And afterwards, when any one bathed in this bath, it emitted a smoke (or vapour); and then, when he smelled this smoke, he fell down, and they had to carry him out; and every one who saw it, marvelled thereat. Moreover the Christians mocked at the heathen and boasted in Christ and glorified Him with His saints. But when Endreyanos knew this, he changed the lighters of the bath and removed hence the brazen vessels in which were the ashes of the bodies of the holy women. And he put the ashes of the bodies into five stelæ of brass [Malalas p. 277 7à δὲ πρῶτα χαλκία ἀναχώσας (ἀναχωνεύσας?) ἐποίησε στήλας χαλκᾶς πέντε ταῖς αὐταῖς γυναιξί] and set them up in this bath; and he used to watch and try to disgrace the martyrs, saying, They are not mine, nor their God's, and they died without knowledge. And at that time there were martyred his daughter Atrâsîs [Δροσινή in Malalas], and Yônâ the daughter of the patrician Fîlâsanrûn. And yet many other virgins suffered martyrdom at the hand of this infidel by the burning of fire.'

'And while Endreyânôs was at Antioch, the earth was sore afflicted and trembled because of the anger of God in the night, because he was impure, three times; and not merely Antioch but also the island of Rûţes (Rhodes). In like manner moreover there was an earthquake after cockcrow.'

There seems to have been some mutilation in the MS from which the Ethiopic This is the case with the narrative of the persecutions in Trajan's reign. Yet John Madabbar expressly places the martyrdom of Ignatius at Rome, and records it before, not after, the earthquake.

A similar explanation will apply to another document, which (at least in its present text) agrees with Malalas in representing Ignatius as martyred at Antioch. The British Museum MS Add. 14, 643 (described in Wright's Catalogue of Syriac MSS p. 1040) contains a Syriac Chronicle, of which the first part is an epitome of the Chronicon of Eusebius (translated by Roediger and published in Schoene 11. p. 203 sq), and the second part, with which alone we are now concerned, is a separate series of notices in chronological order derived from other sources. This second part is published by Land Anecd. 1. p. 2 sq, with a translation (p. 103 sq) and notes (p. 165 sq). The part relating to this period runs as follows in Land's translation (p. 116).

[This is clearly a miswriting for 410 = A.D. 99; since elsewhere the notices are in chronological order.]

Anno 415 [A.D. 104] persecutio in Christianos gravissima intenta est a Trajano rege improbo. Martyrium imprimis passus est Simeon filius Cleopae episcopus Hierosolymae.

Anno 419 [A.D. 108] Trajanus Armeniam subjecit. Eodem anno Ignatius Antiochiae [i.e. in Antiochia] martyrium subiit, qui discipulus erat Ioannis evangelistae.

The Ms which contains this chronicle belongs probably to the middle of the 8th century; it contains a list of caliphs reaching down to Hisham A.D. 724—742; and the last notice in the part with which we are concerned belongs to A.D. 636.

The statement here may have originated in the same way as in Malalas; or the change in a single letter in the Syriac would make the difference \beth for \beth , 'in Antioch' for 'of Antioch.' This latter is a very common blunder with Syriac transcribers. The Ignatian Epistles alone furnish several examples of it.

Thus, the interview of Ignatius with Trajan having no claim translation was made, for the story of the martyrdom of the five virgins wants a beginning. It is clear from the sequence of the Chronicle that Trajan is meant by Endreyanôs. In the index of chapters appended to the work, the passage is thus epitomized; 'Concerning the death of Ignatius the God-clad and the women who were martyred with him.'

to be regarded as historical, we have lost our one criterion of date from comparison with external chronology, and are obliged to fall back on the notices of Christian chronographers and martyrologists.

And here we cannot help being struck with the fact that both the Antiochene and the Roman Acts agree in the 9th year of Trajan. This agreement is the more remarkable, because they agree in scarcely anything else, and neither can possibly have been known to the writer of the other. Nor is the value of the fact diminished, but rather enhanced, when we find that the two martyrologists give different names of consuls, which in neither case belong to the 9th year; for thus it appears that this oth year was the one fixed element in the common tradition, while everything else was left to the caprice or the ignorance of the writer. Moreover in the case of the Antiochene Acts this 9th year has an additional value, because it has survived the confusion in chronology introduced by the necessity of making the condemnation synchronous with Trajan's Parthian expedition—a necessity arising out of the writer's belief that Ignatius was condemned by Trajan himself. This 9th year also is the date in the Chronicon Paschale p. 471 (ed. Bonn.) where moreover the consuls for the 9th year (A.D. 105) are correctly given, Candidus and Quadratus. It appears also, though amidst much confusion, in a Syriac Chronicle, Brit. Mus. Add. 14,642 (described in Wright's Catalogue, p. 1041). The Ms belongs to the early part of the 10th century, but the chronicle itself only reaches down to A.D. 797 (at which time it was probably compiled), though with later additions down to A.D. 811. Cureton (Corp. Ign. p. 221; comp. p. 252) gives the extract; 'And also Ignatius, when he had ruled 15 years, was cast to beasts at Rome, and Heron stood in his stead. In the 9th year John the Evangelist departed this world, having continued in the episcopate 70 years; and Ignatius and Polycarp were his disciples; and the life of John was prolonged to the 9th year of Trajan.' Here the chronicler has obviously blundered over some previous authority; and transferred the 9th year of Trajan from the martyrdom of Ignatius to the death of S. John.

Does this coincidence imply a wide-spread and very early tradition in favour of the 9th year? Or can all these authorities be traced to some one common and comparatively late source?

We naturally turn to the Chronicon of Eusebius as the work which exercised the widest influence in these matters, and we ask whether the solution can be found here.

This portion of the Chronicon is as follows;

OI.	Ann. Abr.	Traj.
220	2116 g 2117	3 4 h	g. Trajanus de Dacis et Scythis triumphavit. h. Trajanus Daciam in provinciam redegit.

Trajano adversus Christianos persecutionem movente, Simon Cleopae (filius) Hierosolymitanae ecclesiae episcopus martyrium subiit, cui successit Iostus. Itidem [Ignatius] Antiochensium episcopus martyrium passus est, post quem iii Antiochensium episcopus constitutus est Eron.

Plinius Secundus, cuiusdam provinciae praeses, multos e Christianis mortis reos fecit etc.

The probable inference from this arrangement is that Eusebius had no definite information as to the exact year or years in which the occurrences recorded in the two paragraphs beginning 'Trajano' and 'Plinius' took place. He put together the three known events bearing on the persecution of the Christians under Trajan; (1) The martyrdom of Symeon; (2) The martyrdom of Ignatius; and (3) The sufferings in Bithynia. He supposed that they took place somewhere about this time; but, not being able to give an exact date, he left them undetermined, placing them at the end of the 221st Olympiad, which coincided also with the round number 10 of the years of Trajan. This account is in accordance with his treatment of these incidents in the History, where they are not only undated, but recorded in a different order: (1) Martyrdom of Symeon (iii. 32); (2) Persecution in Bithynia (iii. 33); (3) Martyrdom of Ignatius (iii. 36). When we come to discuss the date of Polycarp's martyrdom, we shall find that Eusebius treats it in the same way.

Being thus left loose, they were liable to be assigned to any of the neighbouring years by later scribes and redactors. Thus Jerome in his revision of the Chronicon separates them, attaching the martyrdoms of Symeon and Ignatius to the 10th year, and the persecutions in Bithynia to the 11th. Accordingly in his Catalogue c. 16 he writes of Ignatius, 'passus est anno decimo Trajani'; for, though the word is printed 'undecimo' in Vallarsi, this editor's note clearly shows that the best MSS read 'decimo,' and the Greek version also has δεκάτφ. In like manner also they are divided in Zohrab's version of the Ar-

These facts are perhaps sufficient to account for the coincidence of the authorities mentioned above in naming the 9th year.

The writer of the Antiochene Acts was largely indebted to the Chronicon. The historical setting of the martyrdom is borrowed mainly from it. The mention of Ignatius as the pupil of S. John and the fellow-pupil of Polycarp is probably derived thence (see the note on § 1 'Ιωάννου μαθητής). The reference to the victory over 'the Dacians and Scythians' (§ 2) is plainly taken therefrom. Even the exaggeration έτέρων πολλών ἐθνών (§ 2) may have been due to it, if we may suppose that the author's copy contained a notice corresponding to that which appears in Jerome's revision immediately after the mention of Trajan's making Dacia a province; 'Hiberos Sauromatas Osroenos Arabas Bosforanos Colchos in fidem accepit, Seleuciam Ctesifontem Babylonem occupavit1, where events which occurred many years later are gathered together out of their proper chronological place in order to enhance the effect. And altogether the idea of making the subjugation of the Christians the crowning idea of Trajan's ambition is suggested by the sequence of the notices in the Chronicon.

To the Chronicon the author of the Roman Acts also betrays his obligations. Though generally in his narrative he has drawn more largely from the Ecclesiastical History of Eusebius (see the notes §§ 1, 10, 11, 12), yet the manner in which the Bithynian persecution and the correspondence of Pliny with Trajan are introduced cannot be traced to this source, and must be due to the Chronicon. Our hagiologist's point of view requires that the letter from Pliny should come immediately after the execution of Ignatius (§ 11). A glance at the extract given above (p. 449) from the Chronicon shows at once whence he derived the inspiration that the emperor's rescript to Pliny might be used to account for the disposal of the martyr's reliques. On the other hand in the Ecclesiastical History the persecution in Bithynia, with the account of the correspondence, is given before the martyrdom of Ignatius: two chapters intervene: and there is nothing to suggest the connexion which our author establishes between the two events.

Thus the acquaintance of our two martyrologists with the Chronicon seems clear. And the same is plainly also the case with those chronographers who give the 9th year of Trajan for the date of the martyrdom. The obvious inference therefore would seem to be that all these writers alike derived this date from the Chronicon, to which they were certainly indebted, directly or indirectly, for other facts. The only objection to this otherwise simple solution lies in the fact that Eusebius does not assign the martyrdom to the 9th year specially. Still the manner in which he arranges the events might very naturally lead to its special attachment to this year, as we have seen to be the case in Zohrab (see above p. 449). The 6th, 7th, and 8th years are each supplied with their special notice. The 9th year is the first vacant year, and the notice of the martyrdoms of Symeon and Ignatius, which were found hanging loose, would be attached to it so as to fill the void. It seems fairly probable therefore that we may ultimately trace to a particular interpretation, or recension, of the Chronicon of Eusebius all the notices which assign the martyrdom of Ignatius to the 9th year of Trajan.

But what grounds had Eusebius himself for placing the martyrdom where he does in the Chronicon? Wieseler (Christenverfolgungen d. Cäsaren p. 125 sq), who himself would date it in the 10th year [the 11th tribunician year] of Trajan, A.D. 107, alleges Eusebius as 'the most trustworthy witness' for this date. But Eusebius, as we have seen, is not so precise. He only places it thereabouts. Wieseler further supports this view on the ground that Pliny's letter implies previous persecutions of the Christians during Trajan's reign. not impossible; but Pliny's language itself only implies that the emperor had decreed proceedings against 'hetæriæ' generally', in which the Christians might or might not be involved. Moreover, so far as regards Eusebius, it is clear that he had not, and did not profess to have, any definite idea of the relative chronology of these persecutions under Trajan which he relates in proximity, since he gives the Bithynian martyrdoms in one place before, and in another after, the death of Ignatius (see above p. 449). Of the Bithynian persecution he knows nothing, except what he has learnt from the account of Pliny's letter and Trajan's rescript, as read by him in a Greek translation of Tertullian (H. E. iii. 33). He cannot even tell the name of the province, and he is obviously quite ignorant of the date (see the note on Mart. Rom. 11). In the same way Wieseler urges in favour of his view the fact that 'the martyrdom of Symeon the son of Clopas...according to Eusebius and Jerome happened a short time before,' and that 'according to says 'cognitionibus de Christianis interfui numquam,' he may be referring to the persecution of Domitian.

Waddington (Fastes des Provinces Asiatiques p. 720) the consular Herodes Atticus, under whom he was martyred, was consular legate of Palestine in the years A.D. 105—107.' Here again the answer is the same; that Eusebius does not profess to give these martyrdoms in chronological sequence, for in the History he interposes the Bithynian persecution (which happened about A.D. 112) between the two. Moreover, when we come to examine Waddington's argument for the date of Herodes Atticus' government in Palestine, it amounts to nothing more than this; that Eusebius represents him as putting Symeon to death about the 9th or 10th year of Trajan, and that, as the years A.D. 105—107 are unoccupied by any other governor whose name has been preserved, we may suppose Atticus to have ruled there during this period. Wieseler's attempt therefore to establish a definite date for the martyrdom of Ignatius on the authority of Eusebius must be regarded as unsatisfactory.

On the other hand, Harnack in an important contribution to the subject (Die Zeit des Ignatius etc, Leipzig 1878) arrives at conclusions diametrically opposed to those of Wieseler1. He has investigated the Eusebian list of the Antiochene bishops as a whole; and, if we could accept his inferences, Eusebius would be deprived of all authority as a witness respecting their chronology. He remarks that the dates of accession assigned to the Antiochene bishops in the Chronicon have a suspicious relation to those assigned to the Roman bishops. In the earlier part of the list each Antiochene bishop is placed 4 years (i.e. one Olympiad) after some Roman bishop; in the latter part each Antiochene bishop is placed one year before some Roman bishop; and the point of transition from the one arrangement to the other is after the accession of the Antiochene bishop Philetus (Ol. 249). This is a rough abstract of Harnack's statement of the facts; and his inferences are as follows. The Chronicle of Julius Africanus is known to have been brought down to the third year of Elagabalus, Ol. 250 (see Clinton Fast. Rom. 1. p. 233); and we have also information that Africanus used Olympiads in his arrangement of dates. Clearly therefore Eusebius borrowed the earlier dates of the Antiochene bishops as far as Ol. 250 from Africanus. By this discovery the authority of Eusebius is replaced by that of Africanus. So far there is a gain in the exchange, for an earlier authority has been substituted for a later.

^{(1879).} The speculations of Harnack and Erbes are discussed by R. A. Lipsius ib. VI. p. 233 (1880). On Lipsius' own view see below, p. 468, note.

But this gain is more than neutralised by the other facts thus elicited. From this symmetrical relation of the dates referring to the Roman and Antiochene sees it is clear that Africanus invented the latter on some artificial plan. Thus his authority is deprived of any weight. In the interval between composing his Chronicon and his History Eusebius discovered that he was leaning on a rotten reed in following Africanus. In the later work therefore he rejected the dates of accession, so far as regards the Antiochene bishops, and was content to give their sequence, merely noting in a rough way their synchronism with the bishops of the other great sees and with contemporary events. On the second part of the list Harnack does not say very much; but he ascribes the artificial arrangement here directly to Eusebius himself (p. 19, note 1).

In one respect Harnack seems to be unquestionably right. Eusebius evidently had no list of the Antiochene bishops, giving the lengths of their respective terms of office, as he had in the case of the Roman and Alexandrian sees. This fact had been already noticed by Zahn (Ign. v. Ant. p. 56 sq). But on the other hand it is equally evident that he possessed some previously existing tables containing the dates of accession of the Antiochene bishops, or at least information which enabled him to construct such tables, and was not utterly without chronological records, as he confesses himself to be in the case of the Jerusalem bishopric (Chron. II. p. 172 sq, Schoene), for which he contents himself with giving the sequence of bishops, and does not attempt to assign dates. With regard to the Antiochene see he stood in an intermediate position. Beyond this point Harnack's inferences are very questionable, but they at least deserve careful consideration.

Before entering into an examination of its details however we are struck with an antecedent objection to the theory as a whole. As regards its adoption and its abandonment alike, it is burdened with improbability. As regards its adoption; for is it likely that two persons independently should hit upon a similar artifice of placing the Antiochene bishops at regular intervals after or before certain Roman bishops, while nevertheless the second person was taken in by the device of the first? As regards its abandonment; for in his History Eusebius treats the later Antiochene bishops exactly as he has treated the earlier. Here too as in the former case, he is content to give rough synchronisms without assigning exact dates as in the Chronicon. But though he might be supposed to have detected the artificial character of Africanus' dates in the meanwhile, there is no room for the theory of subsequent detection as a motive for the abandonment of his own dates.

When we pass from such general considerations to an investigation of details, our difficulties increase. The chronological relation of the Antiochene to the Roman bishops in the Chronicon, as stated by Harnack, stands thus:

Order.	Antioch.	A. Abr.	Intervals.	Rome.	A. Abr.	Order.
1 2 3 4 5 6 77 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18	Euodius Ignatius Hero Cornelius Eros Theophilus Maximinus Serapion Asclepiades Philetus Zebinus Babylas Fabius Demetrianus Paulus Domnus Timæus Cyrillus	2058 2085 2123 2144 2158 2185 2193 2206 2228 2233 2245 2270 2272 2278 2288 2288 2297	3 years after 3 '' '' 4 '' '' 4 '' '' 5 '' '' 4 '' '' 1 year before 4 years after I year before I '', '' I year before I 'year before I year before	Peter Linus Alexander Telesphorus Pius Soter Eleutherus Victor Callistus Callistus Pontianus Xystus Dionysius Felix Eutychianus	2055 2082 2119 2140 2154 2180 2202 2229 2229 2229 2246 2271 2279 2289 2298	1 5 7 9 11 12 13 15 15 17 23 24 25 26
19	Tyrannus	2319	of Eusebius

In this table the numbers of the last column give the order of succession of the Roman bishops named, S. Peter not being counted. The dates are given in the years of the era of Abraham, in accordance with the practice of Eusebius in the Chronicon.

In this list Harnack draws the line after Philetus, at which point he supposes the earlier arrangement to be exchanged for the later. It will therefore be necessary to consider the two parts of the list separately.

(1) The first list contains ten bishops; and the numbers representing their chronological relations to the corresponding Roman bishops are,

Here there is a great predominance of the number 4, and it might be increased by supposing with Harnack that in other cases the date of accession had been accidentally displaced by a year. This supposition is not extravagant in itself, for displacements certainly occur frequently elsewhere in these tables. But we have no right to postulate it as the basis of a theory not otherwise probable, since a displacement is as likely to have occurred in a 4 as in a 3 or a 5.

Moreover, the date of Hero's accession must be withdrawn; for Eusebius, as pointed out above (p. 447), does not give any definite date for the death of Ignatius and accession of his successor, but mentions it at the end of the 221st Olympiad (the tenth year of Trajan) as having occurred thereabouts. If then we deduct this date, and if n the case of Asclepiades we substitute the number of years after the preceding Roman bishop, as in the other cases, we get;

Thus five out of ten give the number 4. This is no doubt a larger proportion than the doctrine of probabilities would suggest. But then in historical records, as in games of chance, events are constantly found recurring with a frequency far in advance of any such calculation.

(2) The second list contains nine names. In this list five examples occur, where the artificial rule supposed to prevail in this part is observed. But from these five two must be deducted. The dates of Timæus and Cyrillus do not occur in the Armenian Version, which is taken as the authority for the original Chronicon of Eusebius, and Harnack therefore supplies them from Jerome's recension. But Jerome's recension, as a whole, would not have borne out his theory. Its figures are as follows²;

Babylas 2 Fabius 2 Demetrianus 2 Paulus 2 Domnus 2 Timæus 2 Cyrillus 2	5 years before 1 year before 269 1 year before 277 5 years before 283 288 6 years before 1 year before 1 year before	Cornelius 2: Lucius 2: Stephanus 2: Dionysius 2: Felix 2:	250 269 270 282 294 298

doubt'? Is Eusebius likely to have had information independently of Africanus at this point in the list which he did not possess for the later dates? If he had such information, this very circumstance gives a higher value to his testimony. If he had not, and if the uncertainty was expressed by Africanus, then this frankness inspires confidence in Africanus.

³ These bishops are called Fabius and Demetrianus by Jerome in accordance In using Jerome's figures Harnack has made an arbitrary selection. In dealing with the first pair of bishops, he takes the date of Timæus from Jerome, but retains that of Felix as it stands in the Armenian. With the next pair however, Cyrillus and Eutychianus, his treatment is different. Here he has taken Jerome's date for the Roman bishop, as well as for the Antiochene. This substitution of the Hieronymian date 2298 in place of the Armenian 2296 for Eutychianus is unintelligible on his own principles, and must have been an oversight; yet without it the example falls to the ground. But indeed Harnack's confidence that the missing Armenian dates for Timæus and Cyrillus would have agreed with Jerome's is not justified by the facts. The presumption is quite the other way. For six out of the eight preceding bishops, from Asclepiades to Domnus, Jerome's dates, whether we take the years of Abraham or the years of the Roman emperors, differ from those of the Armenian version1. After these reductions are made, there remain in nine accessions only three examples of this interval of one year, which is supposed to betray an artificial arrangement in the latter part of the list; and, considering the very rapid succession of the Roman bishops during the earlier years of this period, such a proportion can excite no misgiving. In Jerome's list also there are three examples, but they are all different; and the fact exemplifies the accidental character of such recurrences.

But again; there is no clear frontier line between the earlier and later lists, such as Harnack's theory requires. On the one hand with Euseb. H. E. vi. 39, 46, etc. The Armenian Version on the other hand names them Fabianus and Demetrius. The former are their correct names; the latter are probably due to confusion with the bishops Fabianus of Rome and Demetrius of Alexandria, who are nearly contemporary and are sometimes mentioned in proximity with them.

that he had been already three years a prisoner in the mines of Pannonia. Eusebius was probably some forty years old at this time; he was already actively engaged in literary work; he took an eager interest in the history of the martyrs; and he was in constant communication with Antioch. This being so, it is quite incredible that he can have been ignorant of the true date of the death of so important a person as Cyrillus. We must conclude therefore either that Jerome does not reproduce the date of Eusebius in this instance, or that Tyrannus was appointed to succeed to the see during the life-time of Cyrillus. But this last mode of solution, if admissible, may possibly apply in other cases where the same difficulty exists; e.g. in the case of Maximinus the successor of Theophilus.

Asclepiades, though belonging to the first list, is an example of the artificial arrangement which marks the second. On the other hand Demetrianus and Domnus, though included in the second, betray the characteristic feature which distinguishes the first, as Lipsius (Jenaer Literaturzeitung, April 6, 1878, p. 201 sq) has pointed out; for Demetrianus is placed Ann. Abr. 2272, four years after the accession of the Roman bishop Stephanus Ann. Abr. 2268 [other Antiochene and Roman bishops however having intervened], and Domnus Ann. Abr. 2283, four years after the accession of the Roman bishop Dionysius Ann. Abr. 2279.

But besides the fact that there is no such clearly drawn line of demarcation, separating the list into two parts at the very date when Africanus wrote, the phenomena at the supposed point of juncture are not such as to favour the theory that Eusebius was indebted to a fictitious table of this chronographer for the first part. The great work of Africanus was carried down to A.D. 220 or 221, at which date (or within a year or two) it was written. About the same time, during the reign of Elagabalus (A.D. 218-223), we read that he was instrumental in rebuilding Emmaus under the name of Nicopolis, and that he went as a delegate (evidently to the emperor) on this business (Euseb. Chron. II. p. 178, Hieron. Vir. Ill. 63, Chron. Pasch. p. 499). About the year 220 therefore his literary activity and his political influence alike were at their height. It is not too much to assume that he was 40 years of age at least at this time. If so, he must have been born not later than about A.D. 180. But from another circumstance we may infer that his birth was some years earlier than this. Origen was born about A.D. 185 (Clinton Fast. Rom. 1. p. 183), and Africanus (Routh Rel. Sacr. II. p. 225) calls him his 'son.' Moreover, as a native of Palestine, Africanus was favourably situated for ascertaining the chronology of the Antiochene Church. He was a traveller too; for, besides the embassy just mentioned, we know that he went to Egypt before writing his Chronography, attracted thither by the learning of Heraclas (Euseb. H. E. vi. 31). A diligent and acquisitive investigator, who took so much pains in the cause of learning, could hardly have been mistaken, or seriously mistaken, about the dates of those Antiochene bishops who flourished during his own youth or manhood. How does this consideration bear on the dates given in the Chronicon of Eusebius?

The accession of the last bishop before he wrote, Philetus, is placed A.D. 215, i.e. five years before his Chronography ended, and (as we must suppose) while he was already engaged on his work. If therefore this date be his, we may safely assume that it is correct. Any other supposition would be irrational. Yet it exhibits the supposed schematism, for it is placed 4 years after the Roman bishop Callistus. In this case therefore the period is accidental. Though an exact Olympiad, it is not due to the fact that Africanus reckoned by Olympiads.

Tracing the succession backwards we come next to ASCLEPIADES, whose date is A.D. 210. Here the schematism attributed to Africanus is not observed. He is placed not four but twelve years after the preceding Roman bishop Zephyrinus. He stands however one year before the next Roman bishop Callistus, in accordance with the supposed schematism of the latter part. What account can we give of this fact, if Harnack's theory be true? Harnack himself believes that Eusebius here altered the date as given by Africanus (see p. 28). Eusebius, he supposes, had some 'sort of tradition' that Serapion, the predecessor of Asclepiades, lived beyond the 4th year of Zephyrinus; accordingly he moved the accession of Asclepiades forward and, abandoning the schematism of Africanus in this instance, made the date conform to his own schematism. This seems to me an improbable supposition. Eusebius elsewhere (H. E. vi. 11) gives an extract from a letter to the Antiochenes written by Alexander, afterwards bishop of Jerusalem, in which he says that the Lord had lightened his bonds 'in the season of captivity' (κατὰ τὸν καιρὸν τῆς είρκτῆς) by the news that Asclepiades had been appointed their bishop. The confession of Alexander is placed by Eusebius himself in the Chronicon (II. p. 176) during the persecution in the 10th year of Severus, i.e. A.D. 203. We may waive the question whether Eusebius was right or wrong in so dating Alexander's imprisonment. For our immediate purpose it is enough that he did so. Thus the only tradition which Eusebius is known to have possessed, bearing on the matter, so far from leading him to substitute a later date, would have prevented him from doing so. curious fact is that, if Africanus had dated the accession of Asclepiades. according to his supposed schematism, four years, instead of twelve, after Zephyrinus, the date (A.D. 203) would have entirely satisfied the contemporary allusion in Alexander's letter. As it is, critics (e.g. Valois on Euseb. H. E. l. c., Clinton Fast. Rom. 1. pp. 209, 211), whether rightly or wrongly, condemn the date A.D. 210 as impossible, and themselves place the accession of Asclepiades seven or eight years earlier. These con-substitute it. He suggests that the see remained vacant for a time, and he places the accession of Asclepiades about A.D. 209 (p. 46 sq). This however does not siderations seem to show that Eusebius found this date already in his authority, and did not himself invent it. If this authority was Africanus, the date must almost necessarily be correct; for it is only ten years before his Chronography was published.

The predecessor of Asclepiades was SERAPION. The date of his accession, A.D. 190, accords with the supposed schematism, being four years after the accession of the Roman bishop Victor. Here again there is a high probability that Africanus would have had correct information; but, as we are now getting back into his youth or his boyhood, the certainty is less than in the previous cases. When however we come to test the statement by known facts, we find not only that it does not conflict with any historical notices, but that it must at all events be within a year or two of the correct date. The facts are as follows. Eusebius (H. E. v. 19) places Serapion among the writers who took part in the Montanist controversy in the reign of Commodus (slain Dec. 31, A.D. 192), saying that he became bishop of Antioch during the times of which he is speaking (ἐπὶ τῶν δηλουμένων χρόνων), and alleging for his statement a constant tradition (κατέχει λόγος). In a later passage (H. E. v. 22), after mentioning the accessions of Victor of Rome and Demetrius of Alexandria, both which he places in the 10th year of Commodus (A.D. 189), he adds that 'contemporary with them the afore-mentioned Serapion still continued to flourish at that time, being eighth bishop of the Church of the Antiochenes after the Apostles' (καθ' ούς καὶ τῆς 'Αντιοχέων ἐκκλησίας ὄγδοος ἀπὸ τῶν αποστόλων ο πρόσθεν ήδη δεδηλωμένος έτι τότε Σαραπίων ἐπίσκοπος explain the notice in Alexander's letter. This difficulty, if I understand him rightly, he meets elsewhere (p. 14) by supposing that Eusebius was wrong in connecting the imprisonment of Alexander, during which he heard of Asclepiades' accession, with the great persecution in the 10th year of Severus (A.D. 203). The alternative would be to suppose that Alexander was detained several years in captivity (A.D. 203—210). One or other hypothesis seems necessary if we are to maintain the date of Asclepiades' accession as given in the Chronicon.

τον τοῦ διωγμοῦ καιρόν). Harnack infers from this that Serapion must have survived the persecution of Severus (p. 46). The inference may be correct; but the necessity which he has felt of postulating some other event to satisfy the reference in Alexander's letter suggests misgivings as to the certainty of the allusion in the very similar case here.

Altogether we may take warning by the perplexities which these strictly genuine and contemporary records create—not to condemn hastily the dates of the Chronicon in other cases, even where the prima facie interpretation of authentic notices seems imperatively to demand it, e.g. the accession of Maximinus.

εγνωρίζετο). Again, Eutychius patriarch of Alexandria (see Harnack p. 45), a late and untrustworthy writer indeed, but here apparently relating a historical fact, states that Demetrius of Alexandria wrote to Gabius [Gaius] bishop of Jerusalem, Maximus [Maximinus] patriarch of Alexandria, and Victor patriarch of Rome, on the paschal computation (Ann. I. p. 363 sq. ed. Pococke). If these statements be true, Maximinus the predecessor of Serapion must have survived the accession of Victor (A.D. 189), and yet Serapion must have succeeded before the death of Commodus (A.D. 192). These notices combined point to about A.D. 190, as the date of Serapion's accession.

Serapion was preceded by MAXIMINUS, whose accession in the Chronicon is assigned to A.D. 177, four years after the Roman bishop Eleutherus. This is almost demonstrably wrong. Theophilus the predecessor of Maximinus in his extant work (ad Autol. iii. 27) cites a chronography of Chryseros which closed with the death of M. Aurelius, and himself carries down his reckoning to that event; so that he cannot have written his third book till the first year of Commodus (A.D. 180) at the earliest. The only escape from the contradiction would be the supposition that he vacated his see for some reason or other during his lifetime. On the other hand it is not probable that he lived very much later than this date, inasmuch as his name is not mentioned in connexion with the Montanist controversy which raged soon after. The reckoning of the Chronicon therefore would seem to antedate the accession of Maximinus by about five years.

With regard to the six earlier accessions we have no contemporary or trustworthy notices which enable us to test the accuracy of the dates. Of these six, the dates assigned to the first two do not satisfy the supposed schematism; the third is not assigned to any precise year; the fourth and fifth agree with the assumed rule, being placed four years after Telesphorus and Pius, the 7th and 9th Roman bishops, respectively; while the sixth again violates it. Thus of these six earlier dates only two afford examples of this schematism.

As the result of this examination, we are led to the conclusion that in this first part of the list as far as Philetus, the authority followed by Eusebius cannot have been Africanus, unless the chronology here is genuine in the main, though not necessarily accurate in its details. If it was a fictitious list, the authority followed must have been some later writer who was less favourably situated for obtaining correct information.

From these facts it will have appeared, unless I am mistaken, that Harnack's theory is not built on a secure foundation. For the general predominance of the interval of four years, i.e. one Olympiad, there is indeed some show of evidence. But it does not necessarily point to any deliberate artificial arrangement on the part either of Eusebius himself or of a previous authority copied by him. The frequent recurrence of the number 4, if not accidental, might be explained in the following way. The primary authority—whether Africanus or some one else—arranged his chronography by Olympiads. He knew roughly that such and such an Antiochene bishop succeeded to the see of Antioch, when such and such a Roman bishop occupied the see of Rome, and he placed them in the next Olympiad accordingly. The exact year in the Olympiad to which the accessions of the Antiochene bishops are assigned in the Chronicon of Eusebius would then be due to this previous writer's form of tabulation, which was misunderstood by his transcribers or successors and is lost to us.

Beyond this point we are not at liberty to assume any artificial arrangement. All the accompanying facts forbid us to suspect either Eusebius himself or his previous authority of deliberate invention. There is no appearance of artifice in the Olympiads themselves, which, for the accessions from Euodius to Philetus inclusive are as follows;

Ol. 205. 3, Ol. 212. 2, Ol. 221. 4, Ol. 227. 1, Ol. 230. 3, Ol. 237. 2, Ol. 239. 2, Ol. 242. 3, Ol. 248. 1, Ol. 249. 2.

It should be observed also that where Eusebius does not know a date, or at least does not believe that he knows it, he indicates his uncertainty. Thus in the case of the bishops of Jerusalem he masses them together at intervals, giving their names and the order of succession, but not attempting to fix the dates of accession; and as regards this very see of Antioch, in the case of Hero the successor of Ignatius he is satisfied with indicating a rough proximity, without naming a precise year. Moreover in his preface to the whole work he cautions his readers against attaching too much weight to individual dates, where much must necessarily be uncertain. The Scriptural saying, 'It is not yours to know the times and the seasons,' holds good (so he considers) for the chronology of all times, as well as for the Second Advent (Chron. I. p. 3, ed. Schoene).

But, though this recurrence of the number 4 may perhaps be due to some cause such as I have suggested, the possibility remains that its frequency here was a mere chronological accident. From this point of view the following example from the recent history of France may not prove uninstructive.

Here we have a schematism, of which the principle is the recurrence of the number 4 in the units. The majority of the dates already fulfil this condition. The rest may be brought into accordance by adding or subtracting one in each case. But what supposition is more natural than that the events should have been accidentally displaced by a year in some transcription of the tables? We have a right to expect only one occurrence of the same unit 4 in ten dates, and here we have four in seven (or if we commence with the accession of Louis xvi, the beginning of the revolutionary period, four in five), with a reasonable presumption that originally it occupied the remaining places also. Moreover, if the fictitious character of this chronology thus betrays itself by its artificial arrangement, what shall we say when we observe the inordinate length of time assigned to the earliest names? Not less than 131 years are given to two sovereigns alone. it may be safely said, is without a parallel in European annals. greatest length of time occupied by any two successive reigns in the preceding history of the French Monarchy appears to be 86 years. The average duration of a reign, from Hugh Capet downwards till we arrive at this point, is 21 or 22 years. Even the chronology of the regal period in Roman history is not guilty of any such extravagance. Thus the condemnation of this table is complete. From this point onward a different principle prevails. The new French Monarchy begins with Louis Philippe, A.D. 1830. This king dies A.D. 1850, and his death is followed in the next year by the Coup d'État, which results in the establishment of the Second Empire. This Second Empire ends, and the new French Republic begins, A.D. 1870. Here, it will be observed. there is an interval of 20 years between each event.

This example will serve as a caution against too rapid inferences from the recurrence of numerical peculiarities in history. But indeed any ordinary chronological lists furnish abundance of such warnings'. There is no end to the tricks which authentic history plays with numbers. Few European states are safe from the suspicions which these freaks of chronology may stir in the minds of critics in the remote future?

In the above criticisms I have argued provisionally on the assumption that the Armenian dates give the chronology of Eusebius himself; but, as I have elsewhere shown³, this assumption is burdened with difficulties, and another aspect of the question is presented in the following communication which I received from Dr Hort, when my first edition was going through the press.

'Harnack's theory takes for granted the truth of Lipsius's assumption that the Roman episcopal chronology of Eusebius's Chronicle is to be found in the Armenian version, not in the Hieronymian Chronicle. This has always seemed to me an improbable view: but it would acquire fresh strength if the Antiochene chronology, which is approximately the same in both versions, were shown to be founded on the Armenian dates of the Roman chronology. On all accounts therefore it is worth while to ascertain whether the relations between the Antiochene chronology and the Hieronymian dates of the Roman chronology exhibit any correspondences like those which have been pointed out by Harnack. The following table will furnish provisional means of comparison. It gives both the Armenian and the Hieronymian dates

1 The recent chronology of the two archiepiscopal sees of England for instance may be taken as examples. The dates of accession to the see of Canterbury since the middle of the last century are 1758, 1768, 1783, 1805, 1828, 1848, 1862, 1868, where five out of eight have the same unit. The three preceding accessions bear the dates 1737, 1747, 1757. The see of York again exhibits in succession these dates; 1747, 1757, 1761, 1776 [1777], 1807 [1808], 1847, 1857, where the dates in brackets are as I find them in another list. Here not only have five at least out of seven the same unit 7, but in two cases the same years, 47, 57, are repeated in succession in two successive centuries.

Prussia? Accession of the great Elector Frederick William A.D. 1640; Accession of the great King Frederick II A.D. 1740; Accession of Frederick William IV A.D. 1840. Is it too much to assume that this schematism was drawn up when the hopes of the national party centred in Frederick William IV as the sovereign of a united Germany? The date of his accession is, we may assume, correct, or at least roughly so; and the chronographer, writing at a crisis when he was expected to take his rank with the two most illustrious sovereigns of the past, adopted this date as his starting point and placed the accessions of the triad at intervals of a century, filling in the intermediate dates at his pleasure.

'The Armenian list for Antioch starts in the same year as the list for Rome; the Hieronymian list two years later in Schoene's text, one year later in Pontac's text and the excellent Cod. Freherianus. The difference cannot however be original, for the appointment of the first bishop of Antioch must have been taken to accompany or follow immediately the departure of S. Peter from Antioch for Rome: the intervening Hieronymian article is on the preaching of S. Mark, 'interpres Petri,' in Egypt and Alexandria, and the three articles were evidently intended to form a single whole. The year intended to be common to all three was apparently not 2058, but 2059. Without this change the Roman date cannot be made to agree with the 25 years of office assigned to S. Peter in the Hieronymian Chronicle; while comparison with other lists shews that xxv is not itself a corruption of xxvi. In the Armenian Mss (see Aucher's edition, II. 268 sq) the three years 2057, 2058, 2059 form a separate compartment, the right-hand portion of which is entirely taken up with the articles on S. Mark and Euhodius; so that the displacement is easily accounted for by considerations of space. Moreover, if we put S. Peter's date entirely out of sight, 2059 remains evidently the most probable Eusebian date for Euhodius; since it accounts for both 2058 and 2060, and in the Antiochene (unlike the Roman) episcopates there is no reason to suppose that the discrepancies between the two forms of the Chronicle are due to anything but accidents of transcription.

'The beginnings of the second episcopates likewise approximately coincide. Linus is clearly referred to 2084, the last year of Nero, assumed as the date of S. Peter's martyrdom: the Hieronymian article on Ignatius is attached in a singular manner to the Olympiadic numeral answering to 2085 (see Schoene's note), but apparently should rather be regarded as part of an overflow from the too numerous articles of 2084: the Armenian position of Ignatius is at 2085, but evidently by a mistake of transcription, for the article interrupts a single long sentence about Vespasian, and the existence of a dislocation at 2084 is proved by the interposition of the reigns of Galba and Vitellius before the death of Nero. Eusebius doubtless placed both Ignatius and Linus at 2084.

'At the third Antiochene episcopate there is a real breach of synchronism, though only to the amount of two years: the Armenian and Hieronymian records agree in placing Hero at 2123, while Alexander of Rome stands at 2125. Here Eusebius had a historical landmark independent of any artificial co-ordination with Roman chronology, for Hero became bishop of Antioch in consequence of the death of Ignatius. He mentions the succession in connexion with the martyrdom; and as the martyrdom was said to have taken place under Trajan, he includes the record of it in what he has to say about what passed as Trajan's persecution.

'Accordingly the first seven Antiochene episcopates stand related to

Ignatius	2084	Linus
Hero	2123
	2125	Alexander
Cornelius	2144	Telesphorus
Eros	2158	Pius
Maximinus	2193	Eleutherus.

'Such a series of exact coincidences speaks for itself, and cannot be accidental. The one exception occurs in the one place where it could not but occur: an artificial distribution was required only through defect of knowledge; and if Eusebius supposed himself to have direct or indirect knowledge of the date of such an event as the martyrdom of Ignatius, the beginning of the next episcopate was already determined for him. This and the accession of Euhodius, as due to S. Peter's removal to Rome, were doubtless his two early fixed points. Between them he had to place the accession of Ignatius, and the persecution under Trajan might easily suggest the persecution under Nero, in which S. Peter suffered martyrdom; and Linus was recorded to have succeeded him. This juxtaposition of the two sees, sanctioned by S. Peter's traditionary connexion with both, would supply a helpful resource for the following Antiochene episcopates in the absence of any evidence. If Eusebius found the date of Serapion's accession recorded or in any way indicated as 2206, he might take his first two dates, reckoning backwards, from the two Roman episcopates immediately preceding 2206; and then, observing five more to remain while only two dates were needed, he might adopt every alternate Roman date. The process here supposed would account naturally and precisely for the actual facts; but of course the borrowing of the Antiochene from the Roman dates, with the single inevitable exception, is all that can be safely affirmed. In the rest of the list we find no such coincidences, where historical attestation is wanting. The single absolute synchronism which occurs in this part—that of Fabius and Cornelius—was attested by the fact, unquestionably known to Eusebius, that their respective predecessors, Babylas and Fabianus, both perished in the short Decian persecution.

'At the accession of Clement of Rome, the fourth on the list if S. Peter is included, the Armenian date precedes that of Jerome by five years, and during the next nine episcopates, to Eleutherus inclusive, the interval is always either four or five years (Alexander making only an apparent exception), owing to the fact that the fundamental term-numerals are all but identical in the two lists throughout this period. This is the reason why the 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th Antiochene bishops appear to stand about an Olympiad in advance of corresponding Roman bishops, when Armenian are substituted for Hieronymian dates in the Roman chronology. Of course Julius Africanus vanishes with the Olympiads. But even if the Armenian chronology is retained, two of the Olympiadic intervals become incorrect as soon as the Armenian dates are tested critically instead of being simply copied as they now stand. The term-numerals show conclusively that the Armenian year for Alexander is not 2119 but 2120, and for Eleutherus not 2189 but 2188; so that the intervals would be of five and of three years, not of four years in both cases.'

I cannot doubt that this is the right solution in the main. The Chronicon and the History appear to have been completed within a year or two of each other; and Eusebius must have been employed upon them at the same time. This being so, it would be strange if they presented two widely divergent chronologies of the early Roman bishops. This difficulty disappears if we suppose the Roman episcopal

1 The Chronicon was carried down to the vicennalia of Constantine, A.D. 325 (II. p. 191, Schoene); the History, unless internal evidence is altogether delusive, was written before the death of Crispus (A.D. 326). Eusebius indeed appears to have issued two editions of the Chronicon, as he certainly did of other works, e.g. the Martyrs of Palestine and the Two Books of Objection and Defence read by Photius (Bibl. 13). Thus in the Eclog. Prophet. i. I (p. I Gaisford) Eusebius directly refers to the Chronicon; yet elsewhere in this same work, i. 8 (p. 26), he speaks of the 'present persecution.' Again in Praep. Ev. x. 9. II there is a reference to the Chronicon; yet indications are not wanting that the Praeparatio and Demonstratio were written during the persecution and in the years immediately succeeding (Tillemont H. E. VII. p. 53 sq). But this hypothesis of an earlier edition will not explain the difficulty; for the Armenian represents one which was contemporary with the History, since it mentions the vicennalia (I. pp. 71, 131). On this subject see S. Clement of Rome I. p. 224 sq (cd. 2.)

dates of the Armenian version to be due either to accident or to some later revision or to both causes. But, even supposing that the Armenian version did give the original Eusebian dates for the Roman bishops, the possibility would still remain that for the dates of the Antiochene bishops Eusebius copied some previous writer who had arranged the Antiochene chronology according to another list of Roman bishops—a list afterwards substituted in the Chronicon by Jerome for that of Eusebius 1. As regards details, the procedure which Hort suggests, but does not insist upon, to account for the synchronism of the 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th Antiochene bishops with the 7th, 9th, 11th and 12th Roman bishops respectively, seems to me to attribute too elaborate an artifice to Eusebius. Eusebius or his authority must have known, as we know, that Theophilus was contemporary with Soter and Maximinus with Eleutherus. He may have believed or known also, what we do not know, that Cornelius was contemporary with Telesphorus and Eros with Pius. In placing their accessions over against the same year, he or his authority merely adopted an inexact, or rather too exact, way of expressing these rough synchronisms in a tabular arrangement where assignment to a definite year was convenient. His treatment of the Jerusalem bishops, where he had no chronological data, ought, I think, to liberate him from the suspicion even of the moderate artifice which Hort's suggestion ascribes to him in the case of the Antiochene bishops. We are bound to believe that for the latter he had some data, however rough and imperfect. With this exception, which however does not affect the main question, Hort's solution has everything to recommend it. It is free from the difficulties which beset Harnack's theory, and it explains the phenomena better.

One other objection is brought by Harnack (p. 70 sq) against the early part of the list in the Chronicon. The average duration of office assigned to these early Antiochene bishops is unusually long. If we suppose Theophilus to have died about A.D. 185 (the Chronicon places his death A.D. 177, but for reasons already stated it seems necessary to advance the date by some years), we have then a period of more than 75 years for four bishops alone, Hero, Cornelius, Eros, Theophilus, or an average of 18 or 19 years apiece. This is an unusually long time.

press for my first edition, but before they were published. See S. Clement of Rome I. p. 224 (ed. 2) on the difficulties which attend this hypothesis.

He infers from this that the original chronicler had before him simply a list of the names of the successive Antiochene bishops; that he felt bound to represent the earliest of these persons so named as appointed directly by Apostles; and that he was obliged accordingly to stretch out the duration of their tenure of office on the Procrustesbed of this necessity so as to cover the period, though in fact the earliest name belonged to a date much later than the Apostolic times. On this principle he rectifies the chronology thus. If we reckon the duration of office at an average of twelve years, this gives 48 years for the four, and we are thus carried back to about the time of the martyrdom of the Roman bishop Telesphorus for the death of Ignatius. Or again; if we place the death of Theophilus in the middle of the episcopate of Eleutherus, and reckon back the duration of four episcopates in the Roman list, we are brought to about A.D. 138, i.e. nearly the same date, for this same event. 'In the Alexandrian list,' he adds, 'a similar reckoning leads to a similar date.' As the result of this calculation, he considers that the death of Ignatius may be placed in the reign of Hadrian, or even of Antoninus Pius (p. 71).

But, even if we allow that the length of the period constitutes a real difficulty in the Eusebian chronology, the solution does not seem to be the most probable under the circumstances. It is more natural, as well as more in accordance with experience, to suppose that some links in the chain have been lost, than that the links are continuous but have been stretched out to lengthen the chain backwards. Thus our original chronicler may only have been able to recover a name of a bishop here and there, in connexion with some fact which enabled him to fix approximately their respective dates; and, as he was not acquainted with any other names in the early annals of the Antiochene episcopate, may have assumed that there were no others. This is a matter of common occurrence in the lists of official personages in their earlier stages, where the historical record is imperfect.

But in fact the period of 75 years, though longer than the average of four episcopates, has been again and again attained, and sometimes largely exceeded, in authentic records about which no doubt can be entertained. We may compare for instance the annals of the other Eastern

80 years, and from A.D. 1783—1862, or 79 years, though in all cases the archbishops were translated from other sees; in York from A.D. 1761—1857, or 96 years, and again from A.D. 1776—1862, or 86 years, though again all were transpatriarchates, Alexandria and Terusalem, at the first moment when we reach the broad daylight of history and no cloud of obscurity hangs This is probably as fair a parallel as the case admits. over the dates. At Alexandria then we have Demetrius, Heraclas, Dionysius, Maximus, extending from A.D. 190-283, or 93 years; Alexander, Athanasius, Petrus II, Timotheus I, from A.D. 313-385, or 72 years; Timotheus I, Theophilus, Cyrillus, Dioscorus, from A.D. 377-452, or 75 years: and at Jerusalem Narcissus, Alexander, Mazabanes, Hymenæus, from A.D. 190-298, or 108 years; Hermon, Macarius, Maximus, Cyrillus, from A.D. 300-388, or 88 years; Cyrillus, Joannes I, Prayllus, Juvenalis, from A.D. 348-458, or 110 years; Joannes I, Prayllus, Juvenalis, Anastasius, from A.D. 388—478, or 90 years. In fact at Alexandria 13 successive bishops, from Demetrius to Cyrillus inclusive, cover from A.D. 190-444, i.e. 254 years, giving an average of between 19 and 20 years; and at Jerusalem 13 successive bishops, from Narcissus to Anastasius inclusive, cover from A.D. 190-478, i.e. 288 years, giving an average of more than 22 years1.

From the preceding investigation it will have appeared generally that there is no sufficient ground for suspecting an artificial arrangement of the dates of accession; but that, if it exist at all, it is not of such a kind as to affect the substantial accuracy of the chronology, though it may have caused a displacement of a few years in any given case. Of the capricious invention of names, or the arbitrary assignment of them to particular epochs irrespective of tradition, there is no indication. The information may be incorrect; the tradition may be hazy; but this is a different matter. Our guarantee of substantial fidelity will be the rough accordance of these dates with extraneous and authentic notices. If this ordeal be applied to the list, its general credibility does not suffer. From Theophilus onwards we are able lations; in London from A.D. 1675—1761, or 86 years, though all the four were translations; in Winchester from A.D. 1734—1827, or 93 years, and again from A.D. 1761—1869, or 108 years; in Durham from A.D. 1632—1730 (with the vacancy of one year), or 97 years, and again from A.D. 1660—1750, or 90 years; in Chichester from A.D. 1731—1824, or 93 years (70 years being occupied by two episcopates alone); in Bath and Wells, where longevity seems to prevail, from A.D. 1703—1802, or 99 years, and again from A.D. 1727—1824, or 97 years, and again from A.D. 1744—1845, or 101 years, though all were translations; in Lincoln from A.D. 1787—1869, or 82 years, though all were translations; in Worcester from A.D. 1781—1861, or 80 years, though all were translations. These examples might be multiplied.

to test every name, though the test is sometimes rough; and in no case is the divergence from known or suspected fact very wide. In all cases, which we have means of verifying, the Antiochene episcopates were contemporary with the Roman episcopates with which they are co-ordinated.

But the value of Harnack's investigations is quite independent of the particular theory which he founds upon them. He has raised definitely the question what degree of credit is due to the chronology of the early Antiochene bishops. He has collected the data for a satisfactory answer to this question, so far as it can be answered. And above all: he has set the relation of this chronology to the Ignatian controversy in its proper light.

With this last point alone we are directly concerned. The question which critics henceforth must ask is this. If there be a conflict between the very early date assigned to Ignatius in the traditional chronology of the Antiochene episcopate, and the phenomena of the Ignatian epistles regarded as a genuine work of Ignatius, so that the two cannot be reconciled, which must give place to the other? To the question so stated there can, I think, be only one answer in the end. The evidence, internal and external, for the genuineness of the Ignatian epistles is twenty times stronger than the evidence for the early Antiochene chronology. Elsewhere I have given reasons for the belief that no such conflict exists. But, assuming for the moment that the epistles do betray a later date than the chronology of the Antiochene episcopate assigns to Ignatius, it is not the genuineness of the epistles but the veracity of the chronology which must be surrendered.

Meanwhile, if we consider this chronology in itself (irrespective of its bearing on the Ignatian controversy), it is reasonable to take up an intermediate position between Wieseler and Harnack. We cannot with Wieseler tie down the date of the martyrdom to the precise year A.D. 107, for indeed there is no reason to think that Eusebius himself intended this. But neither can we with Harnack allow it such latitude as A.D. 138, because the evidence, while it disproves the chronology as a strictly accurate statement, confirms it as a rough approximation. Even as a rough approximation however, its value will diminish as we go farther back. The dates of the first century, the accession of Euodius A.D. 42, and the accession of Ignatius A.D. 69, deserve no credit. Both alike, we may suppose, were due to speculative criticism, rather than to traditional report. If Hort's synchronism with the Roman bishops be not accepted, these two accessions may be explained in another way. The first would aim at giving the date when the Antiochene Church first received a definite constitution, this date being inferred from the Acts of the Apostles1; the other would represent the close of the Apostolic age as marked by the destruction of Jerusalem², Ignatius being regarded as still a disciple of the Apostles and as appointed by them to the episcopate. The dates during the first half of the second century on the other hand may be accepted as rough, but only very rough, approximations. first of these, the death of Ignatius, does not profess to be more than this. Not making any extravagant claims, it is the more entitled to credit. If it comes to us on the authority of Africanus, it is highly valuable, because Africanus lived in a neighbouring country, and must have been born within a single life-time of the alleged date. However this may be, we have the indisputable testimony of a contemporary of Africanus to the same effect. Origen (Hom. in Luc. c. i, Op. 111. p. 938 A) speaks of 'Ignatius who was second bishop of Antioch after the blessed Peter, and during the persecution (èv τῷ διωγμῷ) fought with wild beasts in Rome.' From this statement the date of the martyrdom may be inferred approximately3. Origen, it should be observed, had himself resided at Antioch before this (Euseb. H. E. vi. 21; about A.D. 226, see Clinton Fast. Rom. I. pp. 239, 241). If in addition to these facts we bear in mind that common tradition assigned the martyrdom to the reign of Trajan, we shall be doing no injustice to the evidence by setting the probable limits between A.D. 100-118, without attempting to fix the year more precisely4.

² The accession of Ignatius is placed one year before the destruction of Jerusalem in the Armenian, and two years before in Jerome. The final dispersion of the surviving Apostles, which immediately preceded the overthrow of the city, would be thought a fit moment for the consecration of the last bishop of Antioch who was a disciple of Apostles.

There is no ground for the surmise of Harnack (p. 67) that Origen derived his information from Africanus.

The two Acts of Martyrdom which I have designated the Antiochene and the Roman respectively are given in the following pages. The other three, having no independent value, are not reprinted here.

The authorities for the text of the Antiochene Acts are:

- (1) The Greek MS [G], which I have collated anew for this edition.
- (2) The Latin Version [L], of which a revised text will be found in the Appendix.
- (3) The Syriac Version [S], which also is re-edited in the Appendix.
- (4) The Bollandist Acts [B], which comprise a Latin version of a considerable portion of the Antiochene Acts (see above, pp. 366, 371). They will be found in the Acta Sanctorum for Feb. 1.
- (5) The Armenian Acts [A], which also comprise a very large portion of these Acts (see above, pp. 367, 371 sq). Petermann's reprint of Aucher has been used for these.
- (6) The Acts of the Metaphrast [M], which are compiled partly from these Acts (see above, pp. 367, 375 sq), and may be used occasionally for textual purposes.

As G is a late and poor MS, the different versions LSBA are highly important aids to the construction of a text. Of these L is valuable on account of its literalness. On the other hand SBA frequently offer better readings, and generally may be said to preserve older forms of the text. But the license which they have taken with the original lessens their value; and I have only recorded their readings where they appeared to represent variations in the Greek. No weight attaches to M; for, where his text coincides with our Acts, it is evidently founded on a comparatively late MS closely resembling G.

These Acts were first edited in the original Greek by Ruinart (Act. Mart. Sinc. p. 605 sq, Paris, 1689) from the Colbert Ms G, the Latin him when ὁ σοφὸς Θεόφιλος ὁ χρονογράφος is adduced by him (x. p. 252, ed. Bonn.) as stating that Anianus succeeded S. Mark as bishop of Alexandria. Theophilus of Antioch, who shows himself a chronographer in his extant work, is doubtless meant; but this is probably a blunder akin to the erroneous statement of Malalas about Africanus and Irenæus quoted above (p. 439). Otherwise Theophilus might have been looked to, as a primary source of information respecting the Antiochene bishoprics. As it is, Harnack (p. 43 sq) seems to me to treat the statement of Malalas with too much respect.

Version having been previously published by Ussher (A.D. 1644) together with the Ignatian Epistles which it accompanies. Subsequent editors contented themselves with reproducing the text of Ruinart. Jacobson recollated G, but did nothing more for the text. Zahn first made use of the versions for the correction of the errors in the Greek Ms, and thus produced a much superior text to those of his predecessors. He did not however exhaust all the good readings which they would yield. A further use of them is made in this edition. The readings $\tilde{\epsilon}\omega\theta\epsilon\nu$, and $\lambda\eta\nu\hat{\varphi}$ (for $\lambda\acute{u}\nu$), in § 6, with several others elsewhere, are now introduced into the text for the first time from these versions.

- (1) The Three Greek MS.S [V][L][P], described above, p. 364.
- (2) The Coptic Versions [C], of which an account is also given above, p. 364 sq. These are the Memphitic [C_m] and the Thebaic or Sahidic [C₃]. In passages where the two agree, or where only one is extant, the symbol used is C simply.
- (3) The Bollandist Acts [B], in which is incorporated a very large portion of these Roman Acts (see above, pp. 366 sq, 371).
- (4) The Armenian Acts [A], which likewise contain a large portion of these Acts (see above, pp. 367, 371 sq).
- (5) The Acts of the Metaphrast [M], in which use is made of the Roman Acts (see above, p. 375 sq); but the coincidences are very rarely close enough to have any value for textual purposes.

The Greek text of these Acts was first printed in full by Dressel from V. Extracts had been given before from L by Ussher (see above p. 364). Zahn improved upon Dressel's text here and there, chiefly by corrections from AB; but with the imperfect materials before him he was unable to do much, and the text has remained hitherto in a very bad state. Thus it has been disfigured by such corruptions as Κυθήνη (Κιθαιρώνι, Zahn) for Κυνοσούρη (§ 1), τοῦ ήλίου for Ἰλίου (§ 1), εμφρόνου for εμφρονος ($ 2), χαλκώ for χαλκεί ($ 3), Μωϋσέως for μυήσεως (§ 6), while in one place (§ 3 εἰ καὶ ἐσταυρώθη κ.τ.λ.) several lines had dropped out owing to a homoeoteleuton. The superior materials at my disposal have enabled me to give an entirely new and, as I hope, greatly superior text. Of the Greek MSS P, which is here made known for the first time, is quite the best, while the full collation of L is also important. The Coptic Versions preserve a text in some respects more ancient than any other authority, and from them I have extracted readings which, though evidently correct, do not appear elsewhere.

The chronological notices at the beginning and end of these Acts in my text assume entirely new forms, which are not without an interest for the Ignatian controversy.

Though these Roman Acts are quite valueless as history, they are interesting as a specimen of apologetics. For this reason I have thought it worth while to add full explanatory and illustrative notes, which hitherto they have lacked.

The variations of the versions (which in some cases are very considerable) are not given unless they have a bearing on the Greek text or possess some interest of their own.

I. "Αρτι διαδεξαμένου κ.τ.λ.] The death of Nerva, with the consequent accession of Trajan, took place on Jan. 25, A.D. 98 (Chron. Pasch. I. p. 469, ed. Bonn.), or probably two days later (Reimar on Dion Cass. lxviii. 3); see Clinton Fast. Rom. I. p. 84.

'Ιωάννου μαθητής] See again § 3 έγεγόνεισαν γάρ πάλαι μαθηταί 'Ιωάννου with the note. This is the earliest direct statement that Ignatius had S. John as his master. Older writers say not a word of it, though we should expect some reference to it, either in the scattered notices of Irenæus or in the memoir of Eusebius or in the encomium of Chrysostom, if it had been true. Moreover the absolute silence of Ignatius himself respecting this Apostle, while he mentions S. Peter and S. Paul by name, is unfavourable to its truth. A highly probable explanation of the origin of the story is given by Zahn I. v. A. p. 46 sq. Eusebius in his Chronicon (II. p. 162 sq), speaking of S. John, says $\mu \in \theta'$ ον Παππίας Ἱεραπολίτης καὶ Πολύκαρπος Σμύρνης ἐπίσκοπος ἀκουσταὶ αὐτοῦ έγνωρίζουτο (Syncellus has here preserved the exact words of Eusebius, as the Armenian Version shows). This becomes in Jerome's edition 'post quem auditores ejus insignes fuerunt Papias Hieropolitanus episcopus et Polycarpus Zmyrnaeus et Ignatius Antiochenus.' We may however question whether, as Zahn assumes, Jerome himself supposed Ignatius to have been a disciple of S. John. In his notices of Ignatius and Polycarp, Vir. Ill. §§ 16, 17, he twice states the fact of Polycarp, 'auditor Joannis', 'Joannis apostoli discipulus', but abstains from stating the same of Ignatius, notwithstanding the temptation. It seems more probable therefore that he rapidly added et Ignatius Antiochenus', intending έν τοῖς πάσιν ἀποστολικός, ἐκυβέρνα τὴν ἐκκλησίαν ἀντιοχέων δς τοὺς πάλαι χειμῶνας μόλις παραγαγῶν τῶν πολλῶν ἐπὶ Δομετιανοῦ διωγμῶν, καθάπερ κυβερνήτης ἀγαθός, τῷ οἴακι τῆς προσευχῆς καὶ τῆς νηστείας, τῆ συνεχεία τῆς διδασκαλίας, τῷ τόνῳ τῷ πνευματικῷ, ! πρὸς τὴν ζάλην τῆς ἀντικειμένης ἀντεῖχεν δυνάμεως, δεδοικῶς μή τινα τῶν ὀλιγοψύχων ἢ ἀκεραιοτέρων ἀπο-

to understand merely 'insignis fuit' with it, though the form of the sentence suggests a close connexion with all the preceding words. He excuses his work as 'tumultuarium' in his preface and says that he 'notario velocissime dictavit'. similar addition to the language of Eusebius is made, as Zahn points out, in the Syriac abstract (II. p. 214, Schoene), 'post quem, qui eum audiverant innotuerunt Papias Ierapolitanus et Polycarpos episcopus eorum qui Smyrnae sedem (suam) collocaverant, praeterea autem Ignatios episcopus Antiochenorum'; and this renders it probable that the name of Ignatius was added in some Greek copies of Eusebius, the addition being perhaps suggested by the connexion of the names in Euseb. H. E. iii. 36. From such an addition, loosely worded or carelessly interpreted, the story would take its rise. It is repeated in the Chron. Pasch. p. 416 6 'Ιωάννου τοῦ θεολόγου γνήσιος μαθητής νεγονώς, in the Hymn of S. Joseph 3 (Anal. Sacr. Spic. Sol. I. p. 389) μαθητευθείς...τῷ ἱεροφάντορι καὶ θεολόγω κ.τ.λ., and in the Menæa Dec. 20. So also in two Syriac chronicles (Cureton C. I. pp. 221, 252; comp. Land Anecd. Syr. I. p. 116), belonging apparently to the seventh and eighth or ninth centuries respectively (see Wright's Catal. of Syr. MSS in the Brit. Mus. pp. 1040, 1041), and in the Syriac writer Solomon, author of the Bee (Cureton C. I. pp. 220, 251), who flourished about A.D. 1220 (Assem. Bibl. Orient. III. p. 309). On the other hand Socrates (H. E. vi. 8) says of Ignatius merely τοίς ἀποστόλοις αὐτοίς συνδιέτριψεν, and Gregory the Great regards him as a disciple, not of S. John, but of S. Peter, Epist. v. 39 ad Anast. 'magistrum ejus apostolorum principem,' 'ejusdem principis discipulum' (Op. VII. p. 320, Venet. 1770).

The corruption of τῆς ἀντικειμένης into τὴν ἀντικειμένην has led to the rejection or alteration of δυνάμεως. 7 ἀκεραιοτέρων] There is no sufficient reason for thinking with Zahn that the versions had different readings, though they translate loosely; e.g. he supposes magis simplies of L to represent ἀφελεστέρων, but ἀκέραιος is always translated simplex in the Vulg. of the N. T.; Matt. x. 16, Rom. xvi. 19, Phil. ii. 15. 9 λωφήσαντος] λοφήσαντος G. 10 τῆς ὅντως] GS; vere (=ὅντως, om. τῆς) L; in plenum [Β]; om. by Clement of Alexandria (Strom. ii. 20, p. 489). Tertullian distinguishes apostolici or apostolici viri from apostoli, using the term with the meaning 'disciples of apostles' (e.g. de Praescr. 32, adv. Marc. iv. 2), though Clement calls Barnabas ἀπόστολος and ἀποστολικός in different places. Our martyrologist probably means 'a true disciple of apostles in all respects.' Comp. Trall. inscr. ἐν ἀποστολικῷ χαρακτῆρι.

 παραγαγών] 'having passed by, escaped,' or perhaps 'having turned aside, diverted.' For this latter meaning see Herod. i. 91 οὐκ οἶόν τε ἐγένετο παραγαγείν μοίρας.

3. τῶν πολλῶν] The persecution of Domitian, unlike that of Nero, consisted of repeated attacks; see Clem. Rom. I τὰς αἰφνιδίους καὶ ἐπαλλήλους [γινομ]ένας ἡμῦν συμφορὰς κ.τ.λ. with the note. There is no satisfactory evidence however that it extended beyond Rome; and the martyrolo-gist's accuracy therefore is not above suspicion.

Ps-Ign. ad Mar. 4 παρακαλών $\pi\rho \circ \sigma\theta \epsilon \hat{\imath} \nu \alpha \imath \tau \hat{\varphi} \tau \acute{o} \nu \varphi$, where there is the same v. l. πόνω as here. The word is put into the mouth of Ignatius himself in the Menæa Dec. 20 èβóas, άθλητά. Μηδείς όχλείτω, μηδείς μου θρύψει τὸν τόνον (p. 141, ed. Venet. 1863). It is used by Plutarch to describe the 'atrocem animum Catonis', Vit. Pomp. 44; comp. also Aristid. Ορ. Ι. p. 524 του τόνου της γνώμης. Though the word might suggest a continuation of the nautical metaphor of the previous clauses (comp. Herod. vii. 36), it is difficult to find an appropriate application of such an image here.

I), besides Clinton and older writers, e.g. Tillemont Empereurs II. pp. 553 sq, 560 sq, Eckhel Doct. Num. VI. p. 414. Recent discoveries have added to our knowledge on this subject; see above p. 404 sq. The First Dacian War began A.D. 101 and ended A.D. 103 (or at the close of A.D. 102); the Second was waged during the years 105, 106, and (as Mommsen thinks) 107 also.

The mention of the Scythians here in connexion with the Dacians is borrowed from Euseb. Chron. II. p. 162 'Trajanus de Dacis et Scythis triumphavit.' They are not mentioned, so far as I am aware, in any histories or monuments relating to the period. In the Metaphrast's Acts of Ignatius they displace the Dacians, who disappear altogether. See above, p. 410, and comp. Hodgkin Italy and her Invaders I. p. 84 sq.

έτέρων πολλῶν ἐθνῶν] This is a rhetorical flourish; but during the Second Dacian War (A.D. 105 or 106) Palmas the governor subjugated Arabia Petræa and added it to the dominions of Trajan, Dion Cass. lxviii. 14 (comp. Chron. Pasch. II. p. 472); see above, p. 406 sq.

of Trajan at Antioch immediately after the end of the Dacian Wars. This however is not consistent with the known facts. The Dacian Wars ended A.D. 107 at the latest; while the Eastern expedition did not commence till the autumn A.D. 113. The interval of six or seven years was spent by the emperor at Rome or the neighbourhood. On the attempts which have been made to interpolate an earlier expedition to the East and consequent residence at Antioch in this interval, see above p. 407 sq.

'Ignatius', says Leclerc, 'vocem Christianorum more interpretatur, quasi Trajanus κακοδαίμονα dixisset ένεργούμενον, ut loquamur, ecclesiastico more, seu a malo daemone obsessum.' But the passages which I have quoted show that he is hardly justified in adding 'qua in re, quod cum pace sanctissimorum manium dictum esto, nonnulla tamen cavillatio fuisse videtur.' Κακοδαίμων is the direct antithesis to σπουδάζων διατάξεις ύπερβαίνειν μετὰ τοῦ καὶ ἐτέρους ἀναπείθειν 'ίνα κακῶς ἀπολοῦνται; 'Ιγνάτιος εἶπεν· Οὐδεὶς θεοφόρον ἀποκαλεῖ κακοδαίμονα· ἀφεστήκασι γὰρ μακρὰν ἀπὸ τῶν δούλων τοῦ Θεοῦ τὰ δαιμόνια. εἰ δέ, ὅτι τούτοις ἐπαχθής εἰμι, κακόν με πρὸς τοὺς 5 δαίμονας ἀποκαλεῖς, συνομολογῶ· Χριστὸν γὰρ ἔχων ἐπουράνιον βασιλέα τὰς τούτων καταλύω ἐπιβουλάς. But αίμοβόροις is unobjectionable in itself (comp. e.g. Aristot. Hist. An. viii. 11, p. 596, 4 Macc. x. 17), and

ἐμὸς δεσπότης. With this meaning it corresponds to the Latin munera; see Lactant. Div. Inst. vi. 20 'venationes quae vocantur munera', with Lenglet-Dufresnoy's note; and Euseb. Mart. Pal. 6 τὰς φιλοτίμους θέας ...πλεῖόν τι καὶ παράδοξον χρῆν ὑπάρξαι ταῖς φιλοτιμίαις, where, as here, the subject is a martyrdom. There is an approach to this sense in Demosth. de Cor. p. 312 χορηγεῖν, τριηραρχεῖν, εἰσφέρειν, μηδεμιᾶς φιλοτιμίας μήτε ἰδίας μήτε δημοσίας ἀπολείπεσθαι.

22. Νεάπολιν] As S. Paul does in Acts xvi. 11. See the language of Ignatius himself Polyc. 8 διὰ τὸ ἐξαίφνης πλεῖν με ἀπὸ Τρωάδος εἰς Νεάπολιν.

διὰ Φιλιππησίων] Polycarp mentions the stay of Ignatius at Philippi in his letter to this church § 9 (comp. § 1). The spurious letters to the Tarsians (§ 10), to the Antiochenes (§ 14), and to Hero (§ 8), profess to have been written from Philippi; and the pseudo-Ignatius writes afterwards to the Philippians themselves from the neighbourhood of Rhegium (Philipp. 15).

Ποτιόλων The word Ποτίολοι is the proper Greek form (e.g. C. I. G. 5853, an inscription at Puteoli itself) corresponding to the Latin Puteoli, which is derived from putei (Strabo v. 4, p. 245, ἀπὸ τῶν φρεάτων); but its ancient Greek name was Δικαιάρχεια. There seems to have been a vulgar tendency however to insert a ν into the name in Greek: and in this form it became a fertile source of legend. Thus it is written Πουτιόλη in Act. Petr. et Paul. 12, 14 (p. 5, ed. Tisch.), and a miracle is founded on this bad spelling, την πόλιν έκείνην την καλουμένην Ποντιόλην πεποντισμένην, and again έκ της πόλεως Ποντιόλης της ποντισθείσης άπήγγειλαν τώ Καίσαρι είς 'Ρώμην ότι Ποντιόλη $\epsilon \pi$ οντίσθη. So here also in the Bollandist Acts § 5 the passage appears 'Et cum inde ascenderet ad Tyranicum, ostensum est sancto Pontiolo episcopo, quod ipse transiturus esset; et obviam ei exiens festinabat sequi ejus vestigia, tanquam apostoli Pauli; et non potuit sequi, spiritu navis prorae incumbente: et Ignatius beatificans in eo loco fratrem suum in dilectione ita navigavit.' Thus the seaport is transformed into a person, the bishop apparently of Tyranicum (= Τυρρηνικον' the Tyrrhene Sea'), who puts out to sea to follow Ignatius, but is prevented by adverse winds and receives a passing benediction from the saint on ship-board. There must have been a corrupt reading τῷ ἀγίφ Ποντιόλφ, and this S. Pontiolus was made into a bishop by some scribe to account for his sudden appearance on the scene. The Bollandist editors are content to suggest Puteolono (Puteolano?), and στένοντες ἐπὶ τῷ ἀφ' ἡμῶν μέλλοντι χωρισμῷ τοῦ δικαίου γίνεσθαι, τῷ δὲ κατ' εὐχὴν ἀπέβαινεν σπεύδοντι θᾶττον ἀναχωρῆσαι τοῦ κόσμου, 'ίνα φθάση πρὸς δν ἤγάπησεν Κύριον. καταπλεύσας γοῦν εἰς τοὺς λιμένας 'Ρωμαίων, μελλούσης λήγειν τῆς ἀκαθάρτου φιλοτιμίας, οἱ μὲν στρατιῶται ὑπὲρ τῆς βραδύτητος ἤσχαλλον, ὁ δὲ ἐπίσκοπος χαίρων κατεπείγουσιν ὑπήκουεν.

5. κατ' ἄχνος κ.τ.λ.] Suggested by Ephes. 12 Παύλον...οῦ γένοιτό μοι ὑπὸ τὰ ἄχνη εὑρεθῆναι; see the note there. His imitation of S. Paul is a frequent topic in the Menæa Dec. 20. See the Hymn of S. Joseph 5 (p. 389).

18. "εωθεν" όρμηθέντες"] This conjecture suggested itself to me from a comparison of the various readings. The Armenian translator had before him the uncorrupted text; of which also the Syriac is perhaps a loose paraphrase. But some letters having dropped out by homœoteleuton, εω[θενορμη]θεντες became εωθεντες, which was treated as if ωσθέντες by the Latin translator, and altered into εωθησαν by the Greek scribe in order to get a finite verb. At all events it is clear from the authorities that $\tilde{\epsilon}\omega\theta\epsilon\nu$ ought somehow to be brought into the text.

19. Πόρτου] Owing to the gradual silting up of the Tiber at Ostia, it became necessary in early imperial times to construct an artificial harbour for Rome. This work was carried out mainly by Claudius (Dion Cass. lx. 11), and called Portus Augusti. It was considerably to the north of Ostia, on the right branch of the river. Trajan afterwards added an inner basin which was called after him Portus Trajani (Clem. Hom. xii. 10). In the neighbourhood of this twofold harbour grew up the town of Portus-the present Porto-with which the name of Hippolytus is connected. But it would hardly, I think, have been mentioned, as it is in our martyrology, at the date of Ignatius' death, when Trajan's part of the work can only have been very recently constructed, if it existed at all. Döllinger Hippolytus

9. μη φθονήσαι] Rom. 5 μηθέν με ζηλώσαι τῶν ὑρατῶν κ.τ.λ., ib. 7 βασκανία ἐν ὑμῖν μὴ κατοικείτω.

18. τρισκαιδεκάτη] i.e. the 'thirteenth beforethe Kalends of January', as stated in § 7. The Saturnalia had originally occupied one day only, xiv Kal. Jan. (Dec. 19). But Cæsar's reforms in the calendar, by adding two days to the month of January, had caused some uncertainty and confusion with respect to the right day of celebration; and, in order to meet this difficulty, by an edict of Augustus they were extended backward to three days, xvi, xv, xiv Kal. Jan. (Dec. 17, 18, 19); see Macrob. Sat. i. 10. 2—6, 23. Afterwards the festival was still further prolonged by the addition of the Sigillaria, which commenced xiii Kal. Jan. (Dec. 20). In this way before the close of the reign of the emperor Gaius the festival extended over a fifth day (Sueton. Calig. 17, Dion Cass. lix. 6, lx. 25), the Sigillaria occupying two days; and ultimately four days were assigned to the Sigillaria, so that the whole festival took up seven days (Lucian, Saturn. 2, 25), xvi-x Kal. Jan. (Dec. 17-23); comp. Macrob. i. 10. 24 'Sigillariorum adjecta celebritas in septem dies discursum publicum et laetitiam religionis extendit.' This part of the festival derives its name from the 'sigilla', little images of clay or of sweetmeats or of precious metal, which were exposed for sale at the fair and given as presents. The 'thirteenth' therefore was the first day of the Sigillaria and the middle day of the whole festival, and seems to have had, at least in later times, a special distinction; Macrob. Saturn. i. 11. 50 'ideo Saturnalibus talium commerciorum coepta celebritas septem occupat dies, quos tantum feriatos facit esse, non festos omnes: nam medio, id est tertio decimo Kalendas, festum probavimus etc.' During the festival there were gladiatorial and other contests of the arena; Auson. Ecl. de Fer. 32 sq 'Aediles plebeii etiam aedilesque curules Sacra sigillorum nomine dicta colunt; Et gladiatores funebria praelia notum Decertasse foro; nunc sibi arena suos Vindicat; extremo qui jam sub fine Decembris Falcigerum placant sanguine Caeligenam', Lactant. Div. Inst. vi. 20 'venationes quae vocantur munera Saturno sunt attributae' (see the note on φιλοτιμίαs above, § 5). For the customs of this festival see Marquardt Röm. Alterth. IV. p. 459 sq, Forbiger Hellas u. Rom I. 2 pp. 157 sq, 183 sq. The coincidence is purely accidental in 2 Macc. xv. 36 ἔχειν δὲ ἐπίσημον τὴν τρισκαιδεκάτην τοῦ δωδεκάτου μηνός.

afterwards corrected his mistake (see the other references in this note). This interpretation seemed to be favoured by an inscription on a lead weight in the Borgian Museum, SOSETSVRA COSIT, taken to mean 'Sosio et Sura consulibus iterum', but Borghesi (see De Rossi Inscr. Christ. Urb. Rom. I. p. 4 sq) points out that this would require the order IT . COS, and that IT therefore stands for 'Italica libra'. In fact Sura and Senecio never were consuls together more than once. In Clinton indeed, and in other lists, the consuls for A.D. 102 appear as C. Sosius Senecio III, L. Licinius Sura II; but this is conjectural, the old lists giving the former name Servillus, Severianus, or Συριανός. An inscription discovered since Clinton's time (Corp. Inscr. Lat. VI. 2185) shows that the consuls of that year were C. Julius Ursus Servianus II, L. Licinius Sura II; see Visconti Ann. dell' Inst. di Archeol. 1860, XXXII. p. 440 sq: and this agrees with the notice of the consulate in Spartian. Vit. Hadr. 3 'Praetor factus est sub Surano bis Serviano iterum consulibus', though Spartianus has here assigned the prætorship of Hadrian to a wrong year (see Visconti l.c., Mommsen C. I. L. III. p. 102). The two consulships of Senecio were in 99 and 107. The second and third of Sura were in 102 and 107, as we have seen; but his first cannot have been an ordinary consulship, as it does not appear in the fasti, and its year is therefore unknown (see Mommsen in Hermes III. p. 129, note 3). His three consulships are mentioned, C. I. L. II. 4536—4548, III. 356. For this Sura see Borghesi Œuvres V. p. 34 sq, C. I. L. II. p. 602 sq, VI. p. 315; comp. Julian Cæs. p. 327; for Senecio see Borghesi VIII. p. 367. Both Sura and Senecio were highly honoured by Trajan; Dion Cass. lxviii. 15, 16.

This consulate (A.D. 107) is not reconcilable with the statement § 2 έννάτω έτει. Trajan was adopted by Nerva and assumed the tribunician power in the autumn 97 (see above, p. 398); Nerva died at the end of January 98. Thus Dec. 20, A.D. 107, fell not before the 10th year of his reign, on the strictest reckoning, and the 11th of his tribunician power, whatever mode of reckoning the years we adopt (see above, p. 399 sq). Nor can the two notices be reconciled by supposing the events which intervened between the point of time designated in § 2 and the martyrdom to have extended into the following year of Trajan's reign; for the date assigned to the martyrdom, Dec. 20, A.D. 107, is not towards the beginning, but at the very end of the 10th year.

Objection has been taken to this narrative on the ground that these eye-witnesses did not need to be convinced of the saint's death (e.g. by Grabe Spicil. II. p. 22, and Zahn I. v. A. p. 43). But, on the supposition that this part of the narrative is a fiction, our martyrologist was not so stupid as to make such an obvious blunder; and τοὺς ϵννάτω The Coptic version shows that this is the right reading. So long as it was found only in L, it was open to grave suspicion; and Zahn (I. v. A. p. 16) seemed justified in inferring that it was an arbitrary correction of the scribe, who elsewhere has altered the narrative so as to make it conform to the Antiochene story (§ 10 σπαράξαντες κατέδοντο κ.τ.λ.). But this solution is no longer possible. This version also shows how the corruption arose; for it is written with the numeral o (evνάτω), which would easily be altered into $\in (\pi \epsilon \mu \pi \tau \omega)$. Hence the not unfrequent confusion of 5 and 9 in Greek documents. For several instances of this interchange as affecting the Chronicon of Eusebius, see Hort in the Academy, Sept. 15, 1871, p. 435. This common corruption suggests an easy correction in the heading of the letter of M. Aurelius, Euseb. H. E. iv. 13 `Aρμένιος...δημαρχικῆς ἐξουσίας τὸ πέμπτον καὶ [τὸ] δέκατον, ὕπατος τὸ τρίτον. If ἔννατον be substituted for πέμπτον, the letter (if genuine) will belong to A.D. 165, and the emperor's titles will be in strict accordance with history.

Τραϊανοῦ] The tradition, so far as it is worth anything, points consistently to Trajan as the emperor under whom Ignatius suffered. The confusion in the Coptic seems to be due to an Egyptian mode of representing the Greek Δ , and does not betoken any wavering in the tradition. Thus the Δ of Darius is written in the hieroglyphics NT: see Lepsius, Königsbuch p. 172. So also in the Orac. Sibyll. viii. 65 τὸν μέτα τρεῖς ἄρξουσι πανύστατον ἦμαρ ἔχοντες, Οὕνο-

μα πληρώσαντες ἐπουρανίοιο Θεοῖο, the connexion between the name of the Antonini and Adonai is much closer than the commentators generally seem to be aware, because the latter might be represented in Egyptian writing (and probably in Egyptian pronunciation also) as Antonai.

τουτέστι κ.τ.λ.] I have restored these words from the Coptic version. The different Greek texts betray their history. The lacuna is left unmended in P, though δευτέρω ἔτει is meaningless after ἔτει πέμπτω. The mutilated text is then patched up in different ways: (1) In L μηνὶ is substituted for ¿τει in order to make some sense; (2) In V καὶ is inserted before δευτέρω έτει, and ένυπατίας is substituted for ἐν ὑπατία (or ύπατεία), so as to read 'and in the second year of the consulship of etc.' The substantive ἐνυπατία (or ἐνυπατεία) does not occur elsewhere, nor is it justified by the occurrence of the verb ένυπατεύειν (Plut. Mor. p. 797 οἷς ὀρθῶς ἐνυπατεύων); for the verb signifies 'to spend the consulate in,' and is only explained by its context.

The first numeral in the Coptic is not easily deciphered, but it can hardly be anything else than σ = 200. The 2nd year of the 223rd Olympiad however does not correspond either to the consulate named or to the 9th year of Trajan, but is A.D. 114. We must therefore suppose that our hagiologist got his dates from different sources; (1) the 9th year of Trajan from Eusebius, if not from tradition (see above p. 450 sq); (2) Olymp. 223. 2 directly or indirectly from some chronographer who believed the story of the interview at Antioch, and consequently gave this year as being the date of Trajan's sojourn there. Having got these dates from different sources, he put them together without enquiring whether they coincided. The alternative would be to read CKA for CKT. We should thus get A.D. 106. It was not uncommon in these ages to give the Olympiad years with the names of the consuls; e.g. Socr. H. E. i. 40, ii. 47, iv. 38, etc.

3. 'Αττίκου κ.τ.λ. The true names of the consuls for this year, A.D. 104, are Sextus Attius Suburanus II, Marcus Asinius Marcellus, as appears from a Greek inscription recently published, Wood's Discoveries at Ephesus Inscr. vi. 1, p. 36; see Mommsen Hermes III. p. 132. But as it is probable that our hagiologist himself did not write the names correctly, I have given in the text the nearest approximation which the authorities countenance. The name Suburanus is rightly given in Idatius, but corrupted into Suranus, Urbanus, and Suplavos, in the other consular lists. His first consulate was A.D. 101, when he was suffectus; see C.I.L. VI. 2074. The substitution of Atticus for Attius may perhaps have been owing to a reminiscence of Hegesippus as quoted by Euseb. ἐπίσκοπος τῆς ἀντιοχείας δεύτερος μετὰ τοὺς ἀποστόλους γενόμενος (Εὐόδιον γὰρ διεδέξατο) μετὰ ἐπιμελεστάτης φρουρῶν φυλακῆς ἀπὸ Cυρίας ἐπὶ τὴν 'Ρωμαίων πόλιν παρεπέμφθη τῆς εἰς Χριστὸν Ένεκα μαρτυρίας. ἦσαν δὲ οἱ φυλάσσοντες αὐτὸν Τραϊανοῦς προτίκτορες δέκα τὸν ἀριθμόν, ἀνήμεροὶ τινες καὶ θηρίων

H. E. iii. 32, where Atticus is twice named as the legate of Syria who under Trajan condemned Symeon the son of Clopas to death.

Modern writers for the most part, following Noris and Fabretti, have transposed the consuls of 103 and 104, as they appear in all the ancient lists, owing to a spurious inscription on a coin, and have assigned Suburanus II, Marcellus, to A.D. 103, giving Imp. Nerva Trajanus Aug. V, M'. Laberius Maximus II, the proper consuls of A.D. 103, to A.D. 104 (see C. I. L. III. p. 864, V. 4067, VII. 1193). So e.g. Clinton, Eckhel Doctr. Num. VI. p. 415 sq, and even Borghesi Œuvres III. p. 70. Mommsen (Hermes III. p. 126 sq) has vindicated the old lists and restored the consuls of these two years to their proper places.

In no case however can this consulate be reconciled with the year of Trajan's reign as given just before, whether $\pi \dot{\epsilon} \mu \pi \tau \phi$ or $\dot{\epsilon} \nu \nu \dot{\alpha} \tau \phi$ be read. If the reckoning be by tribunician years, the date of the martyrdom (July 1) would fall in the one case in A.D. 101 and in the other in A.D. 105.

If on the other hand the Egyptian computation be followed (see p. 412, note 3), as is not improbable, July I in the 5th year would be A.D. 102, and in the 9th A.D. 106.

vi. 24. 9 'Devotissimos protectores, qui armatam militiam subeuntes, non solum defendendi corporis sui, verum etiam protegendi lateris nostri sollicitudinem patiuntur (unde etiam protectorum nomen sortiti sunt), ingloriosos esse non patimur'. For this office and its duties see Gothofred's paratitlon and notes Cod. Theod. Lib. vi. Tit. xxiv (II. p. 130 sq), Ducange Gloss. Lat. s. v. protector. They are styled in the inscriptions 'protectores Augusti' or 'Augustorum' (e.g. Corp. Insc. Lat. III. 327, 3126, 3424); the name of the emperor being sometimes added e.g. 'protector Aureliani Augusti' (ib. III. 327); also 'protectores lateris divini' (ib. III. 1805, an inscription of the year A.D. 280). A soldier so serving was said 'protegere' (ib. III. 6194 'deinde protexit'). We read also of the 'protectoria dignitas' being bestowed on veterans (Cod. Fust. xii. 47. 2); and altogether the 'protectores' were treated with the highest honour (Cod. Just. xii. 17. 1, 2). The career of such a person is sketched out in C. I. L. III. 371 'militavit in vexillatione Fesianesa annis xxiii, unde factus protector, idequi (l. indeque or idemque) militavit in schola protectorum annis quinque'. For the 'schola protectorum' see also Cod. Theod. vi. 24. 3, Cod. Just. xii. 17. 2, Amm. Marcell. xiv. 7. 9. These officers appear in the martyrdoms of a later age; e.g. Act. SS. Philem. et Apoll. 9 ὁ Διοκλετιανὸς ἀπέστειλε προτίκτορας πρός αὐτὸν ἐν τῆ Θηβαΐδι ...οί προτίκτορες συνέλαβον αὐτὸν κ.τ.λ., quoted in Ducange Gloss. Lat. s. v.: see also his Gloss. Graec. s. v., and comp. Ps-Prochorus Act. Joann. p. 48 (ed. Zahn). But the name is an anachronism in the time of Trajan. In the inscriptions the office is mentioned under Gallienus A.D. 267, C.I.L. III. 3424. Spartianus (Vit. Carac.) writes § 5 'cum protectoribus', and § 7 'inter protectores suos', speaking of Caracalla; but perhaps he was unconsciously attributing to a former age an institution with which he was familiar in his own time.

Alex. Protr. p. 32, and by Orig. c. Cels. iii. 43, and alluded to by Tatian ad Graec. 27. Chrysostom Hom. in Ep. ad Tit. 3 (Op. XI. p. 744) ascribes these verses to Epimenides. The inscription on this tomb of Zeus at Gnossus was ZAN KPONOY according to Lactantius Epit. 13, on the authority of Euhemerus as reproduced by Ennius (comp. Div. Inst. i. 11). Pythagoras is said by Porphyry (Vit. Pyth. 17) to have written on the tomb some verses (ἐπίγραμμα ἐπεχάραξεν ἐπὶ τῷ τάφω), which began δοδε θανών κείται Ζαν ον Δία κικλήσκουσιν. Hence Chrysostom (1. c.) gives the actual inscription on the tomb as Ἐνταῦθα Ζᾶν κεῖται ον Δία κικλήσκουσι. See Hoeck Kreta III. p. 335 sq (comp. p. 297 sq). 1. ἐν Κυνοσούρη] Cic. de Nat. Deor. iii. 22 'Is [i.e. 'Aesculapius secundus', for he mentions three], fulmine percussus, dicitur humatus esse Cynosuris': comp. Clem. Alex. Protr. 2 (p. 26) οὖτος μὲν οὖν [ὁ 'Ασκλήπιος] κεῖται κεραυνωθεὶς ἐν τοῖς Κυνοσουρίδος ὁρίοις, Lactant. Epit. 8 'Cynosuris, ut Cicero ait, sepultus, cum esset ictu fulminis interemtus' (comp. Div. Inst. i. 10). The place intended was perhaps the Spartan Cynosura, on which see Müller Dorians II. p. 48 (Eng. Trans.), Leake

Travels in the Morea I. p. 178, Boeckh C. I. G. I. p. 609; or it may have been the Cynosura of Arcadia, as Curtius (Peloponnesos I. p. 391 sq) with some reason supposes. There can be no doubt but that the right word is preserved by P. The ultimate Latin and Armenian reading 'Cithaerone' is an attempt to get an intelligible name out of a mutilation or corruption κүθηρη or κүθηρω, to which the readings of LV point, but no tradition placed the death or burial of Æsculapius on Cithæron. As regards the termination, I have retained that which alone the authorities support here; but in the parallel passages it is -ρίς -ρίδος, or -ρα -ρων.

2. μετὰ Κινύρου] Cinyras held the foremost place in Cyprian legend. The myths respecting him are minutely investigated in Engel's Kypros II. p. 94 sq (comp. ib. I. p. 203 sq). The story was variously told. The main points however are these. Cinyras was the founder of Cyprian civilisation and the institutor of the worship of the Paphian Aphrodite; he was the ancestor of the Paphian priests, the Cinyradæ; he was the beloved of the goddess herself; he met with a violent death; and he was buried in the sanctuary of Aphrodite, where also the remains of his descendants lay. On this last point see Clem. Alex. Protr. 3 (р. 40) Птоλεμαίος δὲ ὁ τοῦ ᾿Αγησάρχου ἐν τῷ πρώτω των περί τον Φιλοπάτορα έν Πάφω λέγει έν τῶ τῆς Αφροδίτης ἱερῶ Κινύραν τε καὶ τοὺς Κινύρου ἀπογόνους κεκηδεῦσθαι. So too Arnob. adv. Gent. vi. 6, who mentions the same fact on the same authority of Ptolemy, and obviously copies Clement. The Christian apologists, in their attacks on pagan mythology, frequently allude to the love of Aphrodite for Cinyras and represent her as a harlot whom he deified; Clem. Alex. Protr. 2 (p. 5) ὁ Κύπριος ὁ νησιώτης Κινύρας... τὰ περὶ τὴν 'Αφροδίτην μαχλώντα ὄργια έκ νυκτός ήμέρα παραδούναι τολμήσας, φιλοτιμούμενος θειάσαι πόρνην πολίτιδα (comp. ib. pp. 13, 29), Arnob. adv. Gent. iv. 25 'Quis rege a Cyprio, cujus nomen Cinyras est, ditatam meretriculam Venerem divorum in numero consecratam...prodidit?' (comp. ib. v. 19), Firm. Matern. 10 'Audio Cinyram Cyprium templum amicae meretrici donasse etc.', and Euseb. Praep. Ev. ii. 3. 14, 15, who quotes Clement of Alexandria as above cited. The apologists do not generally speak of the death or burial of the goddess, but are content to refer to her being wounded by Diomed. The tomb however is mentioned in Clem. Hom. v. 23, vi. 21, Clem. Recogn. x. 24, and in the passage of Cæsarius corresponding to the reference in the Recognitions, Dial. ii. Resp. 102 έν Κύπρω την Κύπριν κόπρω έν τάφω κειμένην, έν δὲ Θράκη "Αρην τὸν της ἀρᾶς ἐπώνυμον, where he makes merry with the names. [The only reference given in Engel (II. p. 75) is 'Klemens v. Alex. Recognit. B. 13. Καρ. 24 'Αφροδίτης ὁ τάφος δείκνυται έν Πάφω.' It would hardly be possible to crowd more blunders into a single reference. The quotation is taken from the Metaphrast's Martyr. Ignat. § 7 (and therefore derived ultimately from our martyrologist) and appears in Cotelier's note as an illustration of the statement in Clem. Recogn. x. 24. With Clement of Alexandria it has not any, even the remotest connexion.] I do not find any references given from classical writers, which mention this tomb of Aphrodite. The reading κυνηγοῦ is apparently an emendation or a further corruption of κυνηρου, itself corrupted by itacism from κινυρου; but it seems to be intended for Adonis. Though in one form of the legend Adonis was the son of Cinyras, vet (so far as I am aware) he was never represented as buried in Paphos.

When our martyrologist adds διὰ μοιχείαν, he apparently confuses this binding of Ares by the Aloidæ with the other binding of the same god by Hephæstos, as told also by Homer Od. viii. 295 sq. The adultery of Ares with Aphrodite is a frequent topic of the apologists; Tatian ad Graec. 34, Athenag. Suppl. 21, Minuc. Oct. 23, Firm. Matern. 12, Cypr. ad Donat. 8, Lactant. Div. Inst.

16. τῷ πεπεδημένῳ κ.τ.λ.] 'to the blacksmith with the crippled feet.' The reference is to the common story of Hephæstos, as told from Homer (Il. i. 590 sq) onward. Allusions to the lameness of this god and its cause in Christian apologists appear in Tatian ad Graec. 8, Theoph. ad Autol. i. 3, Minuc. Octav. 22, Firm. Matern. 12, Arnob. iv. 24, Clem. Alex. Protr. 2 (p. 25). For this sense of πεπεδημένος, 'maimed, crippled', see Hom. Il. xiii. 435 πέδησε δὲ φαίδιμα γυῖα (comp. iv. 517).

χαλκεί] Hephæstos is so called in Hom. II. xv. 309. Again in Od. viii. 273 he goes to his 'smithy' (βη ρ΄ ἴμεν εἰς χαλκεῶνα). So too his festival at Athens was called χαλκεῖα. See also Tertull. ad Nat. i. 10 'In Vulcano

4. εἰς ἀετὸν κ.τ.λ.] The amours and transformations of Zeus were a fertile theme of invective for Christian writers in their attacks upon paganism. The fullest list is in Clem. Hom. v. 13, from which I extract the particulars referred to in our martyrology, Αἰγίνη τῆ ᾿Ασωποῦ πλησιάζει γενόμενος ἀετός...Δανάη τῆ ᾿Ακρισίου χρυσός ἐπερρύη...Καλλιστοί τῆ Λυκάονος ηγριώθη λέων...Εὐρώπη τη Φοίνικος διὰ ταύρου συνηλθεν...Νεμέσει τη Θεστίου, τη καὶ Λήδα νομισθείση, κύκνος ή χην γενόμενος Έλένην έτεκνώσατο...Περσεφόνην αὐτὸς ἐκνυμφεύει την θυγατέρα, αὐτὸς ὁμοιωθεὶς δράκοντι where $\hat{\eta}$ $\chi \hat{\eta} \nu$ is added by the author himself in ridicule; comp. Clem. Recogn. x. 22. See also the invective in Arnob. ad Nat. v. 20 sq. So too [Justin] Orat. ad Gent. 2 & " 'Αντιόπη μέν ώς σάτυρος, καὶ Δανάη χρυσός, καὶ ἐπ' Εὐρώπη ταῦρος ἦν, έπτεροῦτο δὲ παρὰ Λήδα, Tertull. Protr. 2 (p. 31), Tertull. ad Nat. ii. 13, Arnob. vii. 33, Lactant. Div. Inst. i. 11, Epit. 10, 11, Euseb. Theoph. ii. 15, iii. 61, with the verses of Greg. Naz. Op. II. pp. 366, 456, ed. Caillau (see the commentary of Cosmas in Migne's ed. of Greg. Naz. Op. IV. pp. 404 sq, 580 sq). The passage of Homer (Il. xiv. 315 sq), in which Zeus mentions his various loves, is quoted by [Justin] Coh. ad Graec. 3 (p. 3) and Athenag. Suppl. 21. For the transformation into the dragon, which marked the climax of this god's turpitude, see esp. Clem. Hom. v. 14, Tatian Or. ad Graec. 10, Athenag. Suppl. v. 20, Clem. Alex. Protr. 2 (p. 14), Arnob. v. 21. The eagle is connected in Clem. Hom. v. 13 (quoted above) with Ægina, but other Christian writers associate it with the better known myth of Ganymede.

Sic. i. 84, 88); the goat Mendes of the Mendesian nome (Herod. ii. 42, 46, Diod. i. 84, Strabo xvii. p. 802, 812); the ibis sacred to Thoth, at Hermopolis (Herod. ii. 67, 75); the ape, the cynocephalus (Strabo xvii.

p. 812, Horapollo i. 14—16) and the cercopithecus (Juv. Sat. xv. 4), the former certainly, the latter apparently, sacred to Thoth, at Hermopolis and at Thebes; the asp sacred to Neph, at Thebes (Plut. Mor. p. 380 sq, comp. Herod. ii. 74); the wolf sacred to Osiris (?), at Lycopolis (Plut. Mor. p. 380, Diod. i. 88, Strabo xvii. p. 812); the dog supposed to have been sacred to Anubis, at Cynopolis (Herod. ii. 67, Diod. i. 87, Plut. Mor. 368, Strabo xvii. p. 812); the lion sacred to Djom, at Leontopolis (Strabo xvii. p. 812, Diod. i. 84, Plut. Mor. p. 366); the crocodile sacred to Savak, in Crocodilopolis and the Arsinoite nome (Herod. ii. 69, 148, Strabo xvii. p. 811, Diod. i. 84, 89); some of these animals being also worshipped throughout Egypt. A convenient list of the animals of Egypt, sacred and not sacred, is given in Wilkinson's Ancient Egyptians v. p. 116 sq. The following are among the references to the animal worship of Egypt in early Christian writers; Clem. Hom. vi. 23, x. 16 καὶ ὧν πάσχω λόγον οὐ ποιοῦμαι. Τραϊανὸς εἶπεν Θῦσον τοῖς θεοῖς. Cels. iii. 19 καί φησί γε ήμας των μέν Αίγυπτίων καταγελάν, καίτοι πολλά καὶ οὐ φαῦλα παρεχόντων αὶνίγματα κ.τ.λ. It is strange that our martyrologist in his enumeration has omitted the scoff at the 'cats and weasels,' with which other early writers barb their invective against this animal worship (e.g. αίλουροι καὶ yalaî, Clem. Alex. Protr. 2, p. 39).

5. As the introduction of Heraclitus' name appears only in the Coptic versions, and can be explained by the corruption in the Memphitic of Balacche into θαλλης in the next clause, which introduced the name of Thales and thus suggested the introduction of Heraclitus also, it should probably be rejected. Yet curiously enough we have the same connexion in Arnob. adv. Nat. ii. 9, 10 'Qui cunctarum rerum originem ignem esse dicit aut aquam, non Thaleti aut Heraclito credit?...Vidit enim Heraclitus res ignium conversionibus fieri, concretione aquarum Thales,' Lactant. Div. Inst. ii. 10 'Heraclitus ex igne nata esse omnia dixit, Thales Milesius ex aqua', Tertull. adv. Marc. i. 13 'ut Thales aquam, ut Heraclitus ignem'; comp. de Anim. 5, Justin. Coh. ad Gent. 3 (p. 4), Clem. Alex. Protr. 5 (p. 55 sq). The Memphitic scribe has confused the name of two philosophers together, Heraclitus and Heraclides. How easy such a confusion would be, appears from Tertull. de Anim. 9 'Non ut aer...etsi hoc Aenesidemo visum est et Anaximeni, puto secundum quosdam et Heraclito, nec ut lumen, etsi hoc placuit Pontico Heraclidi.' This Heraclides

I. $\mathring{\eta}$ χθονί φ κ.τ.λ.] The insertion in the Armenian and Latin may be explained by a repetition of syllables, so as to read $\mathring{\eta}$ χθονὶ $\mathring{\eta}$ χθονί φ κ.τ.λ., or by a corruption of $\mathring{\eta}$ χθονί φ into $\mathring{\eta}$ χθονὶ $\mathring{\eta}$ κ.τ.λ. When the mention of Earth as an object of worship was once introduced, the explanation 'Demeter (Ceres)' would follow. Previous editors have acquiesced in $\hat{\epsilon}\pi\iota\chi\theta\circ\iota\dot{\omega}$: but $\hat{\epsilon}\pi\iota\chi\theta\circ\iota\iota\omega$, meaning terricola, is no epithet of Pluto, though it might be of Plato.

8. κἀκεῖνον κ.τ.λ.] This was a compromise which the heathen apologists constantly put forward in the declining years of polytheism; see e.g. Macar. Magn. Apocr. iv. 20, 26, where this father replies at length to the 'sophism' that Θεὸς οὖκ ἃν μονάρχης κυρίως ἐκλήθη, εὶ μὴ θεῶν ἦρχε.

3. στερροποιεί] The word occurs Polyb. v. 24. 9, and elsewhere.

4. Σιδήρεος] Euseb. Laud. Const. 16 § 11 τίς οὕτω σιδήριος τὴν ψυχήν; For the form see Steph. Thes. s. v. p. 224 (ed. Hase et Dind.), Lobeck Phryn. p. 208. I have adopted it here, because it explains the readings of all the MSS.

5. ἀπεσκληκώs] 'hardened, obdurate,' as e.g. Chrysost. de Sacerd. vi. συσαι τοῖς θεοῖς. 27. ἐπιρρήτουs] 'infamous'; as Euseb. H. E. ix. 5 ἐπίρρητά τινα γυναικάρια ἐξ ἀγορᾶς κ.τ.λ., V. C. iii. 55 ἄρρητοί τε καὶ ἐπίρρητοι πράξεις (comp. L. C. 8). The word occurs in this sense as early as Xen. Oecon. 4. 2 αι γε βαναυσικαὶ καλούμεναι [τέχ-

I. οὐ καλῶς δὲ κ.τ.λ.] This mode of speaking would hardly be intelligible to Trajan or his contemporaries. The word αἴρεσις was neutral, like our 'persuasion,' and had not necessarily any depreciatory sense. More than two centuries later Constantine in Eusebius (H. E. x. 5. 21) expresses his displeasure at those who are making schisms by separating from 'the Catholic heresy' (τῆς αἰρέσεως τῆς καθολικῆς ἀποδιἴστασθαι).

5. μυήσεως] 'initiation,' i.e. instruction in His Gospel and admission to His Church. In Apost. Const. vii. 42 μύησις is used of baptism, not without a reference to the previous catechetical instruction; and so οἱ μυούμενοι, οἱ μεμνημένοι, ἐδ. vi. 15, vii. 22 ὁ εἰs τὸν αὐτοῦ θάνατον μυούμενος, vii. 38 οἱ κατὰ Χριστὸν μεμνημένοι, viii. 8, while οἱ ἀμύητοι are 'the unbaptized' vii. 25. Of baptism also it is used Sozom. H.E. i. 3 ἀμυήτοις μὲν μύησιν κατὰ τὸν νόμον τῆς ἐκκλησίας, τοῖς δὲ μεμνημένοις τὸ μὴ πάλιν ἁμαρτεῦν, and in other writers. No sense can be extracted from the reading Μωυσέως, which is retained by previous editors.

4. πεντήκοντα κ.τ.λ.] Reckoned from the death of Julius Cæsar, as in Jos. Ant. xviii. 2. 2 έπτὰ δὲ καὶ πεντήκοντα της άρχης έτη, προς οίς μηνες έξ ήμεραίν δυοίν πλείονες, τούτου δε αὐτῷ τοῦ χρόνου τεσσαρεσκαίδεκα έτη συνῆρξεν 'Αντώνιος. Theophilus (ad Autol. iii. 27) reckons it 56 years, 4 months, I day; Tertullian (adv. Jud. I) says 56 years. Eusebius in the Ecclesiastical History (i. 9) makes it 57 years; but in the Chronicon (II. p. 138, Schoene) 56 years and 6 months. This last is also the reckoning in the Chron. Pasch. p. 360 (ed. Bonn.). See the next note. It was actually 57 years, 5 months, and 5 days; see Clinton Fast. Hell. III. p. 280 (276). Dion Cass. (lvi. 30) gives the duration of his sole sovereignty, μοναρχήσας ἀφ' οδ πρὸς τῷ 'Ακτίω ἐνίκησε τέσσαρα καὶ τεσσαράκοντα ἔτη δεκατριῶν ημερών δέοντα. The whole term of power might be said to extend over μονονουχὶ αἰῶνα ὅλον: for αἰών corresponds to the Latin saeculum, which was used loosely, sometimes denoting a generation or a third of a century, sometimes the period of a man's life, sometimes a longer recurring interval such as the 110 years of the secular games. Jerome on Ezek. xxvii. 36 είς τὸν αἰῶνα (Ορ. V. p. 324) says, 'usque in saeculum, unius saeculi tempus ostendit, quod juxta aetatem hominis annorum septuaginta circulo supputatur.'

έξ] I have followed the Armenian here, as it agrees with both Josephus and Eusebius. The Greek and Latin texts seem to have altered the number of months to conform to the number of units in the years $(\epsilon \pi \tau \hat{a})$. The presence of the word $\tilde{a}\lambda\lambda o\iota s$ shows that some number had a place here.

In Clem. Alex. Paedag. i. 7 (p. 134) and Origen Sel. in Psalm. ii. 3 (Op. II. p. 542) it is differently interpreted.

Alexandr. 21 ἐσχάζοσαν is quoted. So John xv. 22, 24, εἴχοσαν, Rom. iii. 13 ἐδολιοῦσαν (from the LXX). For this form, which is more common in the aorist, see Kühner I. p. 531 sq, Winer § xiii. p. 91 (Moulton). The correctness of the reading here is assured by the consistent accentuation in the MSS, as well as by the imperfects in the parallel clauses. Dressel substituted ἐνετρυφησαν, for which Zahn (correcting the false accent) writes ἐνετρύφησαν.

- 7. τὴν τῷ Κρόνῳ κ.τ.λ.] Cronos was the Molech of the Phœnicians and Carthaginians, to whom they constantly offered human victims. An occasion is recorded (Diod. Sic. xx. 14, Pescenius Festus in Lactant. Div. Inst. i. 21), when two hundred persons were sacrificed by the Carthaginians, while three hundred more offered themselves voluntarily for sacrifice. References to human victims immolated to Saturn are frequent in the apologists; e.g. Justin Apol. ii. 12 (p. 50), Tertull. Apol. 9, Minuc. Octav. 30, Lactant. Div. Inst. l. c., Euseb. Land. Const. 13, Athan. c. Graec. 25. But this particular sacrifice to Saturn by the Romans ($\psi_{\mu} \epsilon \hat{\iota} s$) is not explained by any other passage which I have come across. It may have something to do with the usage in primeval Latium mentioned by Varro as reported in Macrobius Sat. i. 7. 31, 'cumque diu humanis capitibus Ditem et virorum victimis Saturnum placare se crederent propter oraculum in quo erat, καὶ κεφαλάς Αΐδη καὶ τῷ πατρὶ πέμπετε φῶτα, Herculem ferunt...suasisse illorum posteris ut faustis sacrificiis infausta mutarent, inferentes Diti non hominum capita sed oscilla...et aras Saturnias non mactando viro sed accensis luminibus excolentes, quia non solum virum sed et lumina $\phi \hat{\omega} \tau a$ significat, inde mos per Saturnalia missitandis cereis coepit' (comp. i. 11. 48). But the apologists are silent about the sacrifice of this damsel. On the other hand they repeatedly mention a human victim as offered in Rome itself to Jupiter Latiaris even in their own time; Justin l. c. (?), Tatian ad Graec. 29, Theoph. ad Autol. iii. 8, Tertull. Apol. 9, Scorp. 7, Minuc. Octav. l.c., Firm. Matern. 26, Lactant. l.c. Even this last writer speaks of the practice as still existing. Nor is the statement confined to Christian apologists. Porphyry also gives it as a well-known fact, de Abst. ii. 56 έτι γε νῦν τίς άγνοεῖ κατὰ τὴν μεγάλην πόλιν τῆ τοῦ Λατιαρίου Διὸς έορτη σφαζόμενον άν- $\theta \rho \omega \pi o \nu$. This passage of Porphyry is directly quoted by Eusebius Praep.

Ev. iv. 16. 10, and is repeated word for word by him without any signs of quotation in Land. Const. 13, Theoph. ii. 64, so that he adopts the statement as true for his own time. The last passage of Eusebius stands in Lee's translation (p. 123) 'Whom has it escaped, that even to this time a man is sacrificed in the Great City (Megalopolis) at the feast of Jupiter Latiaris? For even up to this time, it was not only to Jupiter in Arcadia nor to Saturn at Carthage, that they all commonly sacrifice men' etc. Thus translated, Eusebius is made to assert that the sacrifice to Jupiter Latiaris took place in the Arcadian Megalopolis. But of this extraordinary blunder he is quite innocent. The Syriac here freely translated 'to Jupiter' represents the Greek τοῦς Λυκαίοις 'at the Lycæa,' an Arcadian festival of Zeus. The reference to human sacrifices in Arcadia is quite a separate notice in Porphyry himself (de Abst. ii. 27), and is given as a separate quotation by Eusebius elsewhere (Praep. Ev. l.c.), though immediately after the mention of Jupiter Latiaris. Nor can we suppose that he intended to refer to the same sacrifice in the two successive sentences here. The confusion is Lee's own.] Somewhat later however Athanasius c. Graec. 25 (I. p. 19) writes οἱ πάλαι Ῥωμαῖοι τὸν καλούμενον Λατιάριον Δία ἀνθρωποθυσίaις έθρήσκευον. The reason why we hear nothing else of it in classical writers seems to be explained by the language of Tertullian Apol. 9, 'Ecce in illa religiosissima urbe Aeneadarum piorum est Jupiter quidam, quem ludis suis humano produnt sanguine. Sed, bestiarii, inquitis. Hoc opinor minus quam hominis. An hoc turpius, quod mali hominis?' The victim was a criminal condemned to the wild beasts, and this was his mode of execution (comp. [Cyprian] de Spect. 5 'nonnunquam et homo fit hostia latrocinio sacerdotis' with the context). There is an interesting correspondence of Stanhope, Peel, and Macaulay, on this human sacrifice to Jupiter Latiaris, in Earl Stanhope's Miscellanies p. 128 sq, but it does not go below the surface. Examples of human sacrifices in the earlier history of Rome are noticed by Minuc. Octav. l. c., 'ritus fuit... Romanis Graecum et Graecam, Gallum et Gallam, sacrificii loco viventes obruere.' Two soldiers of Julius Cæsar also, who had mutinied, were sacrificed έν τρόπω τινὶ ίερουργίας by the pontifices and the priest of Mars in the Campus Martius (Dion Cass. xliii. 24). Tatian also (l.c.) refers to the cultus of Diana near Rome as belonging to the same category. He must be referring to the goddess of Aricia, whose priest procured his office by the murder of his predecessor: see Preller Röm. Mythol. p. 278 sq.

4. μόνος δυνάστης] From I Tim. vi. 15. The versions might seem rather to suggest δυνατός as the word here; but, inasmuch as the Coptic frequently substitutes one Greek form for another, and the Latin translates δυνάστης by 'potens' in I Tim. l. c., I have preferred the latter word as more likely to have suggested the interpolation μακάριος καὶ, which must be rejected.

5. Κραβαττοπυρίαις] 'gridirons.' No other example of the word is given. For κράβαττος see Lobeck Phryn. p. 62. As regards the orthography, I have adopted the form which has the highest support in the MSS of the N. T. and is confirmed by the quantity of the Latin 'grabātus.'

6. Καλόν, κ.τ.λ.] See Mart. Polyc. 11, which is closely followed here.

9. Toîs "vvēw] 'claws.' We find this instrument of torture at least as early as Tertull. Apol. 12 'Ungulis deraditis latera Christianorum' (see Oehler's note, and comp. § 30), Cyprian Ep. 10 (p. 491 Hartel) 'laniantes ungulas,' ib. 20 (p. 532) 'in poena ungularum fortiter est confessus,' and elsewhere.

Ep. iii. 72 $\pi \rho \delta \xi \epsilon v o v \epsilon \tilde{v} v a t \tilde{\eta} s \kappa o v \omega v l a s$, Schol. on Arist. Nub. 243 $\tau \tilde{a} \delta v \sigma \pi \epsilon \tau a \tau \tilde{\omega} v \sigma t t \omega v v \delta \sigma \omega v \pi \rho \delta \xi \epsilon v a v l v \epsilon \tau a$. In Asch. Suppl. 809 $\tau \tilde{a} \delta \epsilon \phi \rho o l \mu a \pi \rho \delta \xi \epsilon v a \pi \delta v \omega v$, the word is a conjectural emendation; and it is discredited by the fact that all the other examples of this use are late. On the other hand the occurrence of the verb $\pi \rho o \xi \epsilon v \epsilon \tilde{u} v$ in this metaphorical sense is much earlier and more frequent.

προσπτύειν τινός occurs in Ælian H. A. iv. 22, where it is altered by the editors. The word belongs to the category of verbs denoting depreciation and contempt; comp. Kühner II. p. 326 sq.

I. εἰς ὁμοήθειαν] i.e. 'drawn to conformity with (the sufferings of) Christ,' in accordance with his own wish Rom. 6 ἐπιτρέψατέ μοι μιμητὴν εἶναι τοῦ πάθους τοῦ θεοῦ μου. I have been led to this conjectural reading by the fact that Ignatius twice uses ὁμοήθειαν Θεοῦ in the sense of 'conformity with God,' Magn. 6, Polyc. 1, and that in the latter passage the Greek MS substitutes βοήθειαν for ὁμοήθειαν. Moreover ἐφελκομένης εἰς βοήθειαν Χριστὸν is awkward alike in expression and in order, while important authorities have Χριστοῦ.

2. ἔδραμον κ.τ.λ.] On the relation of this account to the divergent story of the Antiochene Acts, see above, pp. 372 sq, 431 sq. The MS L has interpolated from the latter here and below, p. 538, l. 3.

The presence of the saint's bones was to guard the city from harm. The word φυλακτήριον always has an active sense (e.g. Plut. Mor. p. 820 τιμης φυλακτήριον, ib. 821 φυλακτήριον...ταις $\pi \delta \lambda \epsilon \sigma \iota$), so that there can be no doubt about its meaning here. The 'phylacteries' mentioned in the Gospel (Matt. xxiii. 5) seem to have been so called originally, because in pursuance of a literal fulfilment of the Mosaic precept they were designed to preserve the law in memory (Exod. xiii. 10 φυλάξεσθε τὸν νόμον, Deut. vi. 2 φυλάσσεσθε πάντα τὰ δικαιώματα, 3 φύλαξαι ποιείν, 17 φυλάσσων φυλάξη τας έντολας κ.τ.λ.; comp. the explanation in Justin Dial. 46); but the word and the mode of wearing them would at a later date suggest no other idea but that of amulets to protect the wearer. On φυλακτήριον see also Colossians p. 69.

simus occurs twice in the Menæa. On Feb. 15 he is commemorated alone. Here he is called a slave Φιλήμονος ἀνδρὸς 'Ρωμαίου πρὸς ον γράφει ὁ ἄγιος ἀπόστολος Παῦλος; he is arraigned before Tertullus 'the prefect of the country'; and he is sent to Puteoli and there put to death by having his legs broken. This is also the story in the Metaphrast. On Nov. 22 again the Menæa commemorate 'the holy Apostle Philemon and those with him, Apphia, Archippus, and Onesimus.' They are here related to have suffered at Colossæ; they are brought before Androcles the governor of Ephesus, and after undergoing other tortures are stoned to death. Though no special details are given about Onesimus, he is not dissociated from the others in the list. Latin Martyrologies make Feb. 16 (not Feb. 15) the day of his commemoration; and they represent him as put to death by stoning, not however at Puteoli, but at Rome. They celebrate Philemon and Apphia alone on Nov. 22; but, like the Menæa, they represent them as stoned to death at Colossæ. These facts will explain the glosses which have been substituted for $\epsilon r \epsilon \lambda \epsilon \iota \omega \theta \eta$.

9. ηκει δε αὐτῷ κ.τ.λ.] The whole of this account is taken from Eusebius H. E. iii. 33, whose language our author follows in the main, forgetting even to change the oblique narration (πρὸς â τὸν Τραϊανὸν κ.τ.λ.). But, though the account is taken from the History of Eusebius, the sequence of events is suggested by the Chronicle of the same author; see above, p. 449. At the same time the notices relating to Ignatius are our martyrologist's own insertions in order to connect the correspondence of Pliny and Trajan with the fate of the martyr. Eusebius himself does not derive his information direct from Pliny, but from a Greek translation of Tertullian Apol. 2, which he quotes. His knowledge is so entirely derived at second hand, that he does not even know the name of the province which Pliny governed, Chron. II. p.

Πλινίου Σεκούνδου This refers to the celebrated letter, Plin. Epist. x. 97. The date of Pliny's Bithynian government was variously placed by older critics from A.D. 103 or 104 (Tillemont, Clinton) onward. But a recently discovered inscription (C. I.L. III. 777) has decided the time within narrow limits; see Mommsen in Hermes III. p. 55 sq. It appears from the correspondence of Pliny and Trajan (Plin. Epist. x. 81; comp. 51, 68, 70) that Calpurnius Macer was governor of the neighbouring province, Mæsia Inferior, at the same time that Pliny held office in Bithynia; and the inscription just referred to, belonging to this province and bearing the date A.D. 112, mentions him as proprætor. the length of the tenure of such offices was from two to three years at the outside, a closely approximate date is ascertained. Arguing on this basis and following the sequence of the letters, Mommsen concludes that the correspondence extends from about Sept. III to Jan. II3; so that the letter relating to the Christians will have been written in the autumn or winter of 112 from Amisus or the neighbourhood. On the impossibility of reconciling this date with the other indications of time given

5. τοῦ Θεοῦ δίκην] 'after the manner of God,' 'as God,' according to the classical usage of δίκην. But this use seems to have puzzled a later age, so that δίκην is struck out in some texts. The correctness of the reading $\delta i \kappa \eta \nu$ is verified by the text of Eusebius. The Latin of Tertullian (Apol. 2), from which this is ultimately derived, stands in the authorities generally 'ad canendum Christo et Deo,' which Oehler retains and attempts to defend, but the emendation 'ut Deo' for 'et Deo' is certain; for (1) Pliny's own words are 'carmenque Christo quasi Deo dicere'; (2) The Greek translation of Tertullian, as quoted by Eusebius, is $\tau \delta \nu \quad X \rho \iota \sigma \tau \delta \nu \quad \Theta \epsilon \sigma \delta \delta \iota \kappa \eta \nu \quad \psi \mu \nu \epsilon \tilde{\iota} \nu ;$ (3) The natural order otherwise would be not 'Christo et Deo,' but 'Deo et Christo.'

12. $\mu\dot{\eta}$ ἐκζητεῖσθαι μ έν] The various readings show that our author originally copied Eusebius, but that his text was subsequently corrupted by successive stages. The $\mu\dot{\eta}$ was first displaced and transferred to the second clause, so that the sentence then ran ἐκζητεῖσθαι μ ὲν ἐμπεσὸν δὲ $\mu\dot{\eta}$ κολάζεσθαι; but this was felt to be absurd, and it was emended by substituting first εὐρεθὲν for ἐμπεσὸν, and then ἀναιρεῖσθαι for κολάζεσθαι. The $\mu\dot{\eta}$ is omitted in the Armenian Chronicon (II. p. 162).

9. $\kappa a i \epsilon \sigma \tau i \nu \kappa \tau \lambda$.] This is doubtless the original reading of our Acts. The day of Ignatius is given according to the Egyptian calendar as Panemus (i.e. July) 1st: see above, p. 423. In different recensions it is altered according to the usages of different churches. In LV the day is Dec. 20 according to the later Greek usage (see above, p. 422 sq), to which L adds Jan. 29 as the day of the translation of the reliques from Rome to Antioch; while in B it becomes Feb. I after the Latin calendar (see above, p. 428), where again at least one MS adds Dec. 17 as the day of the translation according to the Latin calendar.

EPISTLES OF S. IGNATIUS.

I.

TO THE EPHESIANS.

I GNATIUS, who is also Theophorus, unto her which hath been blessed in greatness through the plenitude of God the Father; which hath been foreordained before the ages to be for ever unto abiding and unchangeable glory, united and elect in a true passion, by the will of the Father and of Jesus Christ our God; even unto the church which is in Ephesus [of Asia], worthy of all felicitation: abundant greeting in Christ Jesus and in blameless joy.

I. While I welcomed in God [your] well-beloved name, which ye bear by natural right [in an upright and virtuous mind] by faith and love in Christ Jesus our Saviour—being imitators of God, and having your hearts kindled in the blood of God, ye have perfectly fulfilled your congenial work—for when ye heard that I was on my way from Syria, in bonds for the sake of the common Name and hope, and was hoping through your prayers to succeed in fighting with wild beasts in Rome, that by so succeeding I might have power to be a disciple, ye were eager to visit me:—seeing then that in God's name I have received your whole multitude in the person of Onesimus, whose love passeth utterance and who is moreover your bishop [in the flesh]—and I pray that ye may love him according to

- 2. But as touching my fellow-servant Burrhus, who by the will of God is your deacon blessed in all things, I pray that he may remain with me to the honour of yourselves and of your bishop. Yea, and Crocus also, who is worthy of God and of you, whom I received as an ensample of the love which ye bear me, hath relieved me in all ways—even so may the Father of Jesus Christ refresh him—together with Onesimus and Burrhus and Euplus and Fronto; in whom I saw you all with the eyes of love. May I have joy of you always, if so be I am worthy of it. It is therefore meet for you in every way to glorify Jesus Christ who glorified you; that being perfectly joined together in one submission, submitting yourselves to your bishop and presbytery, ye may be sanctified in all things.
- 3. I do not command you, as though I were somewhat. For even though I am in bonds for the Name's sake, I am not yet perfected in Jesus Christ. [For] now am I beginning to be a disciple; and I speak to you as to my school-fellows. For I ought to be trained by you for the contest in faith, in admonition, in endurance, in long-suffering. But, since love doth not suffer me to be silent concerning you, therefore was I forward to exhort you, that ye run in harmony with the mind of God: for Jesus Christ also, our inseparable life, is the mind of the Father, even as the bishops that are settled in the farthest parts of the earth are in the mind of Jesus Christ.
- 4. So then it becometh you to run in harmony with the mind of the bishop; which thing also ye do. For your honourable presbytery, which is worthy of God, is attuned to the bishop, even as its strings to a lyre. Therefore in your concord and harmonious love Jesus Christ is sung. And do ye, each and all, form yourselves into a chorus, that being harmonious in concord and taking the key note of God ye may in unison sing with one voice through Jesus Christ unto the Father, that He may both hear you and acknowledge you by your good deeds to be members of His Son. It is therefore profitable for you to be in blameless unity, that ye may also be partakers of God always.

- 5. For if I in a short time had such converse with your bishop, which was not after the manner of men but in the Spirit, how much more do I congratulate you who are closely joined with him as the Church is with Jesus Christ and as Jesus Christ is with the Father, that all things may be harmonious in unity. Let no man be deceived. If any one be not within the precinct of the altar, he lacketh the bread [of God]. For, if the prayer of one and another hath so great force, how much more that of the bishop and of the whole Church. Whosoever therefore cometh not to the congregation, he doth thereby show his pride and hath separated himself; for it is written, God resisteth the proud. Let us therefore be careful not to resist the bishop, that by our submission we may give ourselves to God.
- 6. And in proportion as a man seeth that his bishop is silent, let him fear him the more. For every one whom the Master of the household sendeth to be steward over His own house, we ought so to receive as Him that sent him. Plainly therefore we ought to regard the bishop as the Lord Himself. Now Onesimus of his own accord highly praiseth your orderly conduct in God, for that ye all live according to truth, and that no heresy hath a home among you: nay, ye do not so much as listen to any one, if he speak of aught else save concerning Jesus Christ in truth.
- 7. For some are wont of malicious guile to hawk about the Name, while they do certain other things unworthy of God. These men ye ought to shun, as wild-beasts; for they are mad dogs, biting by stealth; against whom ye ought to be on your guard, for they are hard to heal. There is one only physician, of flesh and of spirit, generate and ingenerate, God in man, true Life in death, Son of Mary and Son of God, first passible and then impassible, Jesus Christ our Lord.

- 8. Let no one therefore deceive you, as indeed ye are not deceived, seeing that ye belong wholly to God. For when no lust is established in you, which hath power to torment you, then truly ye live after God. I devote myself for you, and I dedicate myself as an offering for the church of you Ephesians which is famous unto all the ages. They that are of the flesh cannot do the things of the Spirit, neither can they that are of the Spirit do the things of the flesh; even as faith cannot do the things of unfaithfulness, neither unfaithfulness the things of faith. Nay, even those things which ye do after the flesh are spiritual; for ye do all things in Jesus Christ.
- 9. But I have learned that certain persons passed through you from yonder, bringing evil doctrine; whom ye suffered not to sow seed in you, for ye stopped your ears, so that ye might not receive the seed sown by them; forasmuch as ye are stones of a temple, which were prepared beforehand for a building of God the Father, being hoisted up to the heights through the engine of Jesus Christ, which is the Cross, and using for a rope the Holy Spirit; while your faith is your windlass, and love is the way that leadeth up to God. So then ye are all companions in the way, carrying your God and your shrine, your Christ and your holy things, being arrayed from head to foot in the commandments of Jesus Christ. And I too, taking part in the festivity, am permitted by letter to bear you company and to rejoice with you, that ye set not your love on anything after the common life of men, but only on God.
- 10. And pray ye also without ceasing for the rest of mankind (for there is in them a hope of repentance), that they may find God. Therefore permit them to take lessons at least from your works. Against their outbursts of wrath be ye meek; against their proud words be ye humble; against their railings set ye your prayers; against their errors be ye stedfast in the faith; against their fierceness be ye gentle. And be not zealous to imitate them by requital. Let us show ourselves their brothers by our forbearance; but let us be zealous to be imitators of the Lord, vying with each other who shall suffer the greater wrong, who shall be defrauded, who shall be set at nought; that no herb of the devil be found in you: but in all purity and temperance abide ye in Christ Jesus, with your flesh and with your spirit.

- II. These are the last times. Henceforth let us have reverence; let us fear the long suffering of God, lest it turn into a judgment against us. For either let us fear the wrath which is to come or let us love the grace which now is—the one or the other; provided only that we be found in Christ Jesus unto true life. Let nothing glitter in your eyes apart from Him, in whom I carry about my bonds, my spiritual pearls in which I would fain rise again through your prayer, whereof may it be my lot to be always a partaker, that I may be found in the company of those Christians of Ephesus who moreover were ever of one mind with the Apostles in the power of Jesus Christ.
- 12. I know who I am and to whom I write. I am a convict, ye have received mercy: I am in peril, ye are established. Ye are the high-road of those that are on their way to die unto God. Ye are associates in the mysteries with Paul, who was sanctified, who obtained a good report, who is worthy of all felicitation; in whose foot-steps I would fain be found treading, when I shall attain unto God; who in every letter maketh mention of you in Christ Jesus.
- 13. Do your diligence therefore to meet together more frequently for thanksgiving to God and for His glory. For when ye meet together frequently, the powers of Satan are cast down; and his mischief cometh to nought in the concord of your faith. There is nothing better than peace, in which all warfare of things in heaven and things on earth is abolished.
- 14. None of these things is hidden from you, if ye be perfect in your faith and love toward Jesus Christ, for these are the beginning and end of life—faith is the beginning and love is the end—and the two being found in unity are God, while all things else follow in their train unto true nobility. No man professing faith sinneth, and no man possessing love hateth. The tree is manifest from its fruit; so they that profess to be Christ's shall be seen through their actions. For the Work is not a thing of profession now, but is seen then when one is found in the power of faith unto the end.

- 15. It is better to keep silence and to be, than to talk and not to be. It is a fine thing to teach, if the speaker practise. Now there is one teacher, who spake and it came to pass: yea and even the things which He hath done in silence are worthy of the Father. He that truly possesseth the word of Jesus is able also to hearken unto His silence, that he may be perfect; that through his speech he may act and through his silence he may be known. Nothing is hidden from the Lord, but even our secrets are nigh unto Him. Let us therefore do all things as knowing that He dwelleth in us, to the end that we may be His temples and He Himself may be in us as our God. This is so, and it will also be made clear in our sight from the love which we rightly bear towards Him.
- 16. Be not deceived, my brethren. Corrupters of houses shall not inherit the kingdom of God. If then they which do these things after the flesh are put to death, how much more if a man through evil doctrine corrupt the faith of God for which Jesus Christ was crucified. Such a man, having defiled himself, shall go into the unquenchable fire; and in like manner also shall he that hearkeneth unto him.
- 17. For this cause the Lord received ointment on His head, that He might breathe incorruption upon the Church. Be not anointed with the ill odour of the teaching of the prince of this world, lest he lead you captive and rob you of the life which is set before you. And wherefore do we not all walk prudently, receiving the knowledge of God, which is Jesus Christ? Why perish we in our folly, not knowing the gift of grace which the Lord hath truly sent?
 - 18. My spirit is made an offscouring for the Cross, which is a stumbling-block to them that are unbelievers, but to us salvation and life eternal. Where is the wise? Where is the disputer? Where is the boasting of them that are called prudent? For our God, Jesus the Christ, was conceived in the womb by Mary according to a dispensation, of the seed of David but also of the Holy Ghost; and He was born and was baptized that by His passion He might cleanse water.

- 19. And hidden from the prince of this world were the virginity of Mary and her child-bearing and likewise also the death of the Lord-three mysteries to be cried aloud-the which were wrought in the silence of God. How then were they made manifest to the ages? A star shone forth in the heaven above all the stars; and its light was unutterable, and its strangeness caused amazement; and all the rest of the constellations with the sun and moon formed themselves into a chorus about the star; but the star itself far outshone them all; and there was perplexity to know whence came this strange appearance which was so unlike them. From that time forward every sorcery and every spell was dissolved, the ignorance of wickedness vanished away, the ancient kingdom was pulled down, when God appeared in the likeness of man unto newness of everlasting life; and that which had been perfected in the counsels of God began to take effect. Thence all things were perturbed, because the abolishing of death was taken in hand.
- 20. If Jesus Christ should count me worthy through your prayer, and it should be the Divine will, in my second tract, which I intend to write to you, I will further set before you the dispensation whereof I have begun to speak, relating to the new man Jesus Christ, which consisteth in faith towards Him and in love towards Him, in His passion and resurrection, especially if the Lord should reveal aught to me. Assemble yourselves together in common, every one of you severally, man by man, in grace, in one faith and one Jesus Christ, who after the flesh was of David's race, who is Son of Man and Son of God, to the end that ye may obey the bishop and the presbytery without distraction of mind; breaking one bread, which is the medicine of immortality and the antidote that we should not die but live for ever in Jesus Christ.

21. I am devoted to you and to those whom for the honour of God ye sent to Smyrna; whence also I write unto you with thanksgiving to the Lord, having love for Polycarp as I have for you also. Remember me, even as I would that Jesus Christ may also remember you. Pray for the church which is in Syria, whence I am led a prisoner to Rome—I who am the very last of the faithful there; according as I was counted worthy to be found unto the honour of God. Fare ye well in God the Father and in Jesus Christ our common hope.

TO THE MAGNESIANS.

I GNATIUS, who is also Theophorus, unto her which hath been blessed through the grace of God the Father in Christ Jesus our Saviour, in whom I salute the church which is in Magnesia on the Mæander, and I wish her abundant greeting in God the Father and in Jesus Christ.

- I. When I learned the exceeding good order of your love in the ways of God, I was gladdened and I determined to address you in the faith of Jesus Christ. For being counted worthy to bear a most godly name, in these bonds, which I carry about, I sing the praise of the churches; and I pray that there may be in them union of the flesh and of the spirit which are Jesus Christ's, our never-failing life—an union of faith and of love which is preferred before all things, and—what is more than all—an union with Jesus and with the Father; in whom if we endure patiently all the despite of the prince of this world and escape therefrom, we shall attain unto God.
 - 2. Forasmuch then as I was permitted to see you in the person of Damas your godly bishop and your worthy presbyters Bassus and Apollonius and my fellow-servant the deacon Zotion, of whom I would fain have joy, for that he is subject to the bishop as unto the grace of God and to the presbytery as unto the law of Jesus Christ:—

- 3. Yea, and it becometh you also not to presume upon the youth of your bishop, but according to the power of God the Father to render unto him all reverence, even as I have learned that the holy presbyters also have not taken advantage of his outwardly youthful estate, but give place to him as to one prudent in God; yet not to him, but to the Father of Jesus Christ, even to the Bishop of all. For the honour therefore of Him that desired you, it is meet that ye should be obedient without dissimulation. For a man doth not so much deceive this bishop who is seen, as cheat that other who is invisible; and in such a case he must reckon not with flesh but with God who knoweth the hidden things.
- 4. It is therefore meet that we not only be called Christians, but also be such; even as some persons have the bishop's name on their lips, but in everything act apart from him. Such men appear to me not to keep a good conscience, forasmuch as they do not assemble themselves together lawfully according to commandment.
- 5. Seeing then that all things have an end, and these two—life and death—are set before us together, and each man shall go to his own place; for just as there are two coinages, the one of God and the other of the world, and each of them hath its proper stamp impressed upon it, the unbelievers the stamp of this world, but the faithful in love the stamp of God the Father through Jesus Christ, through whom unless of our own free choice we accept to die unto His passion, His life is not in us:—
- 6. Seeing then that in the aforementioned persons I beheld your whole people in faith and embraced them, I advise you, be ye zealous to do all things in godly concord, the bishop presiding after the likeness of God and the presbyters after the likeness of the council of the Apostles, with the deacons also who are most dear to me, having been entrusted with the diaconate of Jesus Christ, who was with the Father before the worlds and appeared at the end of time. Therefore do ye all study conformity to God and pay reverence one to another; and let no man regard his neighbour after the flesh, but love ye one another in Jesus Christ always. Let there be nothing among you which shall have power to divide you, but be ye united with the bishop and with them that preside over you as an ensample and a lesson of incorruptibility.

- 7. Therefore as the Lord did nothing without the Father, [being united with Him], either by Himself or by the Apostles, so neither do ye anything without the bishop and the presbyters. And attempt not to think anything right for yourselves apart from others: but let there be one prayer in common, one supplication, one mind, one hope, in love and in joy unblameable, which is Jesus Christ, than whom there is nothing better. Hasten to come together all of you, as to one temple, even God; as to one altar, even to one Jesus Christ, who came forth from One Father and is with One and departed unto One.
- 8. Be not seduced by strange doctrines nor by antiquated fables, which are profitless. For if even unto this day we live after the manner of Judaism, we avow that we have not received grace: for the divine prophets lived after Christ Jesus. For this cause also they were persecuted, being inspired by His grace to the end that they which are disobedient might be fully persuaded that there is one God who manifested Himself through Jesus Christ His Son, who is His Word that proceeded from silence, who in all things was well-pleasing unto Him that sent Him.
- 9. If then those who had walked in ancient practices attained unto newness of hope, no longer observing sabbaths but fashioning their lives after the Lord's day, on which our life also arose through Him and through His death which some men deny—a mystery whereby we attained unto belief, and for this cause we endure patiently, that we may be found disciples of Jesus Christ our only teacher—if this be so, how shall we be able to live apart from Him? seeing that even the prophets, being His disciples, were expecting Him as their teacher through the Spirit. And for this cause He whom they rightly awaited, when He came, raised them from the dead.

- 10. Therefore let us not be insensible to His goodness. For if He should imitate us according to our deeds, we are lost. For this cause, seeing that we are become His disciples, let us learn to live as beseemeth Christianity. For whoso is called by another name besides this, is not of God. Therefore put away the vile leaven which hath waxed stale and sour, and betake yourselves to the new leaven, which is Jesus Christ. Be ye salted in Him, that none among you grow putrid, seeing that by your savour ye shall be proved. It is monstrous to talk of Jesus Christ and to practise Judaism. For Christianity did not believe in Judaism, but Judaism in Christianity, wherein every tongue believed and was gathered together unto God.
- In Now these things I say, my dearly beloved, not because I have learned that any of you are so minded; but as being less than any of you, I would have you be on your guard betimes, that ye fall not into the snares of vain doctrine; but be ye fully persuaded concerning the birth and the passion and the resurrection, which took place in the time of the governorship of Pontius Pilate; for these things were truly and certainly done by Jesus Christ our hope; from which hope may it not befal any of you to be turned aside.
- I2. Let me have joy of you in all things, if I be worthy. For even though I am in bonds, yet am I not comparable to one of you who are at liberty. I know that ye are not puffed up; for ye have Jesus Christ in yourselves. And, when I praise you, I know that ye only feel the more shame; as it is written The righteous man is a self-accuser.
- 13. Do your diligence therefore that ye be confirmed in the ordinances of the Lord and of the Apostles, that ye may prosper in all things whatsoever ye do in flesh and spirit, by faith and by love, in the Son and Father and in the Spirit, in the beginning and in the end, with your revered bishop, and with the fitly wreathed spiritual circlet of your presbytery, and with the deacons who walk after God. Be obedient to the bishop and to one another, as Jesus Christ was to the Father [according to the flesh], and as the Apostles were to Christ and to the Father, that there may be union both of flesh and of spirit.

- 14. Knowing that ye are full of God, I have exhorted you briefly. Remember me in your prayers, that I may attain unto God; and remember also the church which is in Syria, whereof I am not worthy to be called a member. For I have need of your united prayer and love in God, that it may be granted to the church which is in Syria to be refreshed by the dew of your fervent supplication.
- 15. The Ephesians from Smyrna salute you, from whence also I write to you. They are here with me for the glory of God, as also are ye; and they have comforted me in all things, together with Polycarp bishop of the Smyrnæans. Yea, and all the other churches salute you in the honour of Jesus Christ. Fare ye well in godly concord, and possess ye a stedfast spirit, which is Jesus Christ.

TO THE TRALLIANS.

I GNATIUS, who is also Theophorus, unto her that is beloved by God the Father of Jesus Christ; to the holy church which is in Tralles of Asia, elect and worthy of God, having peace in flesh and spirit through the passion of Jesus Christ, who is our hope through our resurrection unto Him; which church also I salute in the Divine plenitude after the apostolic fashion, and I wish her abundant greeting.

I. I have learned that ye have a mind unblameable and stedfast in patience, not from habit, but by nature, according as Polybius your bishop informed me, who by the will of God and of Jesus Christ visited me in Smyrna; and so greatly did he rejoice with me in my bonds in Christ Jesus, that in him I beheld the whole multitude of you. Having therefore received your godly benevolence at his hands, I gave glory, forasmuch as I had found you to be imitators of God, even as I had learned.

- 2. For when ye are obedient to the bishop as to Jesus Christ, it is evident to me that ye are living not after men but after Jesus Christ, who died for us, that believing on His death ye might escape death. It is therefore necessary, even as your wont is, that ye should do nothing without the bishop; but be ye obedient also to the presbytery, as to the Apostles of Jesus Christ our hope; for if we live in Him, we shall also be found in Him. And those likewise who are deacons of the mysteries of Jesus Christ must please all men in all ways. For they are not deacons of meats and drinks but servants of the Church of God. It is right therefore that they should beware of blame as of fire.
- 3. In like manner let all men respect the deacons as Jesus Christ, even as they should respect the bishop as being a type of the Father and the presbyters as the council of God and as the college of Apostles. Apart from these there is not even the name of a church. And I am persuaded that ye are so minded as touching these matters: for I received the ensample of your love, and I have it with me, in the person of your bishop, whose very demeanour is a great lesson, while his gentleness is power—a man to whom I think even the godless pay reverence. Seeing that I love you I thus spare you, though I might write more sharply on his behalf: but I did not think myself competent for this, that being a convict I should order you as though I were an Apostle.
- 4. I have many deep thoughts in God: but I take the measure of myself, lest I perish in my boasting. For now I ought to be the more afraid and not to give heed to those that would puff me up: for they that say these things to me are a scourge to me. For though I desire to suffer, yet I know not whether I am worthy: for the envy of the devil is unseen indeed by many, but against me it wages the fiercer war. So then I crave gentleness, whereby the prince of this world is brought to nought.

- 5. Am I not able to write to you of heavenly things? But I fear lest I should cause you harm being babes. So bear with me, lest not being able to take them in, ye should be choked. For I myself also, albeit I am in bonds and can comprehend heavenly things and the arrays of the angels and the musterings of the principalities, things visible and things invisible—I myself am not yet by reason of this a disciple. For we lack many things, that God may not be lacking to us.
- 6. I exhort you therefore—yet not I, but the love of Jesus Christ—take ye only Christian food, and abstain from strange herbage, which is heresy: for these men do even mingle poison with Jesus Christ, imposing upon others by a show of honesty, like persons administering a deadly drug with honied wine, so that one who knoweth it not, fearing nothing, drinketh in death with a baneful delight.
- 7. Be ye therefore on your guard against such men. And this will surely be, if ye be not puffed up and if ye be inseparable from [God] Jesus Christ and from the bishop and from the ordinances of the Apostles. He that is within the sanctuary is clean; but he that is without the sanctuary is not clean, that is, he that doeth aught without the bishop and presbytery and deacons, this man is not clean in his conscience.
- 8. Not indeed that I have known of any such thing among you, but I keep watch over you betimes, as my beloved, for I foresee the snares of the devil. Do ye therefore arm yourselves with gentleness and recover yourselves in faith which is the flesh of the Lord, and in love which is the blood of Jesus Christ. Let none of you bear a grudge against his neighbour. Give no occasion to the Gentiles, lest by reason of a few foolish men the godly multitude be blasphemed: for Woe unto him through whom My name is vainly blasphemed before some.

- 9. Be ye deaf therefore, when any man speaketh to you apart from Jesus Christ, who was of the race of David, who was the Son of Mary, who was truly born and ate and drank, was truly persecuted under Pontius Pilate, was truly crucified and died in the sight of those in heaven and those on earth and those under the earth; who moreover was truly raised from the dead, His Father having raised Him, who in the like fashion will so raise us also who believe on Him—His Father, I say, will raise us—in Christ Jesus, apart from whom we have not true life.
- Io. But if it were as certain persons who are godless, that is unbelievers, say, that He suffered only in semblance, being themselves mere semblance, why am I in bonds? And why also do I desire to fight with wild beasts? So I die in vain. Truly then I lie against the Lord.
- II. Shun ye therefore those vile offshoots that gender a deadly fruit, whereof if a man taste, forthwith he dieth. For these men are not the Father's planting: for if they had been, they would have been seen to be branches of the Cross, and their fruit imperishable—the Cross whereby He through His passion inviteth us, being His members. Now it cannot be that a head should be found without members, seeing that God promiseth union, and this union is Himself.
- 12. I salute you from Smyrna, together with the churches of God that are present with me; men who refreshed me in all ways both in flesh and in spirit. My bonds exhort you, which for Jesus Christ's sake I bear about, entreating that I may attain unto God; abide ye in your concord and in prayer one with another. For it becometh you severally, and more especially the presbyters, to cheer the soul of your bishop unto the honour of the Father [and to the honour] of Jesus Christ and of the Apostles. I pray that ye may hearken unto me in love, lest I be for a testimony against you by having so written. And pray ye also for me who have need of your love in the mercy of God, that I may be vouchsafed the lot which I am eager to attain, to the end that I be not found reprobate.

13. The love of the Smyrnæans and Ephesians saluteth you. Remember in your prayers the church which is in Syria; whereof [also] I am not worthy to be called a member, being the very last of them. Fare ye well in Jesus Christ, submitting yourselves to the bishop as to the commandment, and likewise also to the presbytery; and each of you severally love one another with undivided heart. My spirit is offered up for you, not only now, but also when I shall attain unto God. For I am still in peril; but the Father is faithful in Jesus Christ to fulfil my petition and yours. May we be found unblameable in Him.

TO THE ROMANS.

I GNATIUS, who is also Theophorus, unto her that hath found mercy in the bountifulness of the Father Most High and of Jesus Christ His only Son; to the church that is beloved and enlightened through the will of Him who willed all things that are, by faith and love towards Jesus Christ our God; even unto her that hath the presidency in the country of the region of the Romans, being worthy of God, worthy of honour, worthy of felicitation, worthy of praise, worthy of success, worthy in purity, and having the presidency of love, walking in the law of Christ and bearing the Father's name; which church also I salute in the name of Jesus Christ the Son of the Father; unto them that in flesh and spirit are united unto His every commandment, being filled with the grace of God without wavering, and filtered clear from every foreign stain; abundant greeting in Jesus Christ our God in blamelessness.

- I. Forasmuch as in answer to my prayer to God it hath been granted me to see your godly countenances, so that I have obtained even more than I asked; for wearing bonds in Christ Jesus I hope to salute you, if it be the Divine will that I should be counted worthy to reach unto the end; for the beginning verily is well ordered, if so be I shall attain unto the goal, that I may receive mine inheritance without hindrance. For I dread your very love, lest it do me an injury; for it is easy for you to do what ye will, but for me it is difficult to attain unto God, unless ye shall spare me.
- 2. For I would not have you to be men-pleasers but to please God, as indeed ye do please Him. For neither shall I myself ever find an opportunity such as this to attain unto God, nor can ye, if ye be silent, win the credit of any nobler work. For, if ye be silent and leave me alone, I am a word of God; but if ye desire my flesh, then shall I be again a mere cry. [Nay] grant me nothing more than that I be poured out a libation to God, while there is still an altar ready; that forming yourselves into a chorus in love ye may sing to the Father in Jesus Christ, for that God hath vouchsafed that the bishop from Syria should be found in the West, having summoned him from the East. It is good to set from the world unto God, that I may rise unto Him.
- 3. Ye never grudged any one; ye were the instructors of others. And my desire is that those lessons shall hold good which as teachers ye enjoin. Only pray that I may have power within and without, so that I may not only say it but also desire it; that I may not only be called a Christian, but also be found one. For if I shall be found so, then can I also be called one, and be faithful then, when I am no more visible to the world. Nothing visible is good. For our God Jesus Christ, being in the Father, is the more plainly visible. The Work is not of persuasiveness, but Christianity is a thing of might, whensoever it is hated by the world.

- 4. I write to all the churches, and I bid all men know, that of my own free will I die for God, unless ye should hinder me. I exhort you, be ye not an 'unseasonable kindness' to me. Let me be given to the wild beasts, for through them I can attain unto God. I am God's wheat, and I am ground by the teeth of wild beasts that I may be found pure bread [of Christ]. Rather entice the wild beasts, that they may become my sepulchre and may leave no part of my body behind, so that I may not, when I am fallen asleep, be burdensome to any one. Then shall I be truly a disciple of Jesus Christ, when the world shall not so much as see my body. Supplicate the Lord for me, that through these instruments I may be found a sacrifice to God. I do not enjoin you, as Peter and Paul did. They were Apostles, I am a convict; they were free, but I am a slave to this very hour. Yet if I shall suffer, then am I a freed-man of Jesus Christ, and I shall rise free in Him. Now I am learning in my bonds to put away every desire.
- 5. From Syria even unto Rome I fight with wild beasts, by land and sea, by night and by day, being bound amidst ten leopards, even a company of soldiers, who only wax worse when they are kindly treated. Howbeit through their wrong doings I become more completely a disciple; yet am I not hereby justified. May I have joy of the beasts that have been prepared for me; and I pray that I may find them prompt; nay I will entice them that they may devour me promptly, not as they have done to some, refusing to touch them through fear. Yea though of themselves they should not be willing while I am ready, I myself will force them to it. Bear with me. I know what is expedient for me. Now am I beginning to be a disciple. May naught of things visible and things invisible envy me; that I may attain unto Jesus Christ.

Come fire and cross and grapplings with wild beasts, [cuttings and manglings,] wrenching of bones, hacking of limbs, crushings of my whole body, come cruel tortures of the devil to assail me. Only be it mine to attain unto Jesus Christ.

- 6. The farthest bounds of the universe shall profit me nothing, neither the kingdoms of this world. It is good for me to die for Jesus Christ rather than to reign over the farthest bounds of the earth. Him I seek, who died on our behalf; Him I desire, who rose again [for our sake]. The pangs of a new birth are upon me. Bear with me, brethren. Do not hinder me from living; do not desire my death. Bestow not on the world one who desireth to be God's, neither allure him with material things. Suffer me to receive the pure light. When I am come thither, then shall I be a man. Permit me to be an imitator of the passion of my God. If any man hath Him within himself, let him understand what I desire, and let him have fellow-feeling with me, for he knoweth the things which straiten me.
- 7. The prince of this world would fain tear me in pieces and corrupt my mind to Godward. Let not any of you therefore who are near abet him. Rather stand ye on my side, that is on God's side. Speak not of Jesus Christ and withal desire the world. Let not envy have a home in you. Even though I myself, when I am with you, should be seech you, obey me not; but rather give credence to these things which I write to you. [For] I write to you in the midst of life, yet lusting after death. My lust hath been crucified, and there is no fire of material longing in me, but only water living †and speaking† in me, saying within me 'Come to the Father.' I have no delight in the food of corruption or in the delights of this life. I desire the bread of God, which is the flesh of Christ who was of the seed of David; and for a draught I desire His blood, which is love incorruptible.
- 8. I desire no longer to live after the manner of men; and this shall be, if ye desire it. Desire ye, that ye yourselves also may be desired. In a brief letter I beseech you; believe me. And Jesus Christ shall make manifest unto you these things, that I speak the truth—Jesus Christ, the unerring mouth in whom the Father hath spoken [truly]. Entreat ye for me, that I may attain [through the Holy Spirit]. I write not unto you after the flesh, but after the mind of God. If I shall suffer, it was your desire; if I shall be rejected, it was your hatred.

- 9. Remember in your prayers the church which is in Syria, which hath God for its shepherd in my stead. Jesus Christ alone shall be its bishop—He and your love. But for myself I am ashamed to be called one of them; for neither am I worthy, being the very last of them and an untimely birth: but I have found mercy that I should be some one, if so be I shall attain unto God. My spirit saluteth you, and the love of the churches which received me in the name of Jesus Christ, not as a mere wayfarer: for even those churches which did not lie on my route after the flesh went before me from city to city.
- Io. Now I write these things to you from Smyrna by the hand of the Ephesians who are worthy of all felicitation. And Crocus also, a name very dear to me, is with me, with many others besides.

As touching those who went before me from Syria to Rome unto the glory of God, I believe that ye have received instructions; whom also apprise that I am near; for they all are worthy of God and of you, and it becometh you to refresh them in all things. These things I write to you on the 9th before the Kalends of September. Fare ye well unto the end in the patient waiting for Jesus Christ.

TO THE PHILADELPHIANS.

I GNATIUS, who is also Theophorus, to the church of God the Father and of Jesus Christ, which is in Philadelphia of Asia, which hath found mercy and is firmly established in the concord of God and rejoiceth in the passion of our Lord and in His resurrection without wavering, being fully assured in all mercy; which church I salute in the blood of Jesus Christ, that is eternal and abiding joy; more especially if they be at one with the bishop and the presbyters who are with him, and with the deacons that have been appointed according to the mind of Jesus Christ, whom after His own will He confirmed and established by His Holy Spirit.

- I. This your bishop I have found to hold the ministry which pertaineth to the common weal, not of himself or through men, nor yet for vain glory, but in the love of God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. And I am amazed at his forbearance; whose silence is more powerful than others' speech. For he is attuned in harmony with the commandments, as a lyre with its strings. Wherefore my soul blesseth his godly mind, for I have found that it is virtuous and perfect—even the imperturbable and calm temper which he hath, while living in all godly forbearance.
- 2. As children therefore [of the light] of the truth, shun division and wrong doctrines; and where the shepherd is, there follow ye as sheep. For many specious wolves with baneful delights lead captive the runners in God's race; but, where ye are at one, they will find no place.
- 3. Abstain from noxious herbs, which are not the husbandry of Jesus Christ, because they are not the planting of the Father. Not that I have found division among you, but filtering. For as many as are of God and of Jesus Christ, they are with the bishop; and as many as shall repent and enter into the unity of the Church, these also shall be of God, that they may be living after Jesus Christ. Be not deceived, my brethren. If any man followeth one that maketh a schism, he doth not inherit the kingdom of God. If any man walketh in strange doctrine, he hath no fellowship with the passion.

- 4. Be ye careful therefore to observe one eucharist (for there is one flesh of our Lord Jesus Christ and one cup unto union in His blood; there is one altar, as there is one bishop, together with the presbytery and the deacons my fellow-servants), that whatsoever ye do, ye may do it after God.
- 5. My brethren, my heart overfloweth altogether in love towards you; and rejoicing above measure I watch over your safety; yet not I, but Jesus Christ, wearing whose bonds I am the more afraid, because I am not yet perfected. But your prayer will make me perfect [unto God], that I may attain unto the inheritance wherein I have found mercy, taking refuge in the Gospel as the flesh of Jesus and in the Apostles as the presbytery of the Church. Yea, and we love the prophets also, because they too pointed to the Gospel in their preaching and set their hope on Him and awaited Him; in whom also having faith they were saved in the unity of Jesus Christ, being worthy of all love and admiration as holy men, approved of Jesus Christ and numbered together in the Gospel of our common hope.
- 6. But if any one propound Judaism unto you, hear him not: for it is better to hear Christianity from a man who is circumcised than Judaism from one uncircumcised. But if either the one or the other speak not concerning Jesus Christ, I look on them as tombstones and graves of the dead, whereon are inscribed only the names of men. Shun ye therefore the wicked arts and plottings of the prince of this world, lest haply ye be crushed by his devices, and wax weak in your love. But assemble yourselves all together with undivided heart. And I give thanks to my God, that I have a good conscience in my dealings with you, and no man can boast either in secret or openly, that I was burdensome to anyone in small things or in great. Yea and for all among whom I spoke, it is my prayer that they may not turn it into a testimony against themselves.

- 7. For even though certain persons desired to deceive me after the flesh, yet the spirit is not deceived, being from God; for it knoweth whence it cometh and where it goeth, and it searcheth out the hidden things. I cried out, when I was among you; I spake with a loud voice, with God's own voice, Give ye heed to the bishop and the presbytery and deacons. Howbeit there were those who suspected me of saying this, because I knew beforehand of the division of certain persons. But He in whom I am bound is my witness that I learned it not from flesh of man; it was the preaching of the Spirit who spake on this wise; Do nothing without the bishop; keep your flesh as a temple of God; cherish union; shun divisions; be imitators of Jesus Christ, as He Himself also was of His Father.
- 8. I therefore did my own part, as a man composed unto union. But where there is division and anger, there God abideth not. Now the Lord forgiveth all men when they repent, if repenting they return to the unity of God and to the council of the bishop. I have faith in the grace of Jesus Christ, who shall strike off every fetter from you; and I entreat you, Do ye nothing in a spirit of factiousness but after the teaching of Christ. For I heard certain persons saying, 'If I find it not in the charters, I believe it not in the Gospel.' And when I said to them 'It is written,' they answered me 'That is the question.' But as for me, my charter is Jesus Christ, the inviolable charter is His cross and His death and His resurrection, and faith through Him; wherein I desire to be justified through your prayers.
- 9. The priests likewise were good, but better is the Highpriest to whom is committed the holy of holies; for to Him alone are committed the hidden things of God; He Himself being the door of the Father, through which Abraham and Isaac and Jacob enter in, and the Prophets and the Apostles and the whole Church; all these things combine in the unity of God. But the Gospel hath a singular preeminence in the advent of the Saviour, even our Lord Jesus Christ, and His passion and resurrection. For the beloved Prophets in their preaching pointed to Him; but the Gospel is the completion of immortality. All things together are good, if ye believe through love.

- 10. Seeing that in answer to your prayer and to the tender sympathy which ye have in Christ Jesus, it hath been reported to me that the church which is in Antioch of Syria hath peace, it is, becoming for you, as a church of God, to appoint a deacon to go thither as God's ambassador, that he may congratulate them when they are assembled together, and may glorify the Name. Blessed in Jesus Christ is he that shall be counted worthy of such a ministration; and ye yourselves shall be glorified. Now if ye desire it, it is not impossible for you to do this for the name of God; even as the churches which are nearest have sent bishops, and others presbyters and deacons.
- good report, who now also ministereth to me in the word of God, together with Rhaius Agathopus, an elect one who followeth me from Syria, having bidden farewell to this present life; the same who also bear witness to you—and I myself thank God on your behalf, because ye received them, as I trust the Lord will receive you. But may those who treated them with dishonour be redeemed through the grace of Jesus Christ. The love of the brethren which are in Troas saluteth you; from whence also I write to you by the hand of Burrhus, who was sent with me by the Ephesians and Smyrnæans as a mark of honour. The Lord shall honour them, even Jesus Christ, on whom their hope is set in flesh and soul and spirit, by faith, by love, by concord. Fare ye well in Christ Jesus our common hope.

I GNATIUS, who is also Theophorus, to the church of God the Father and of Jesus Christ the Beloved, which hath been mercifully endowed with every grace, being filled with faith and love and lacking in no grace, most reverend and bearing holy treasures; to the church which is in Smyrna of Asia, in a blameless spirit and in the word of God abundant greeting.

- I. I give glory to Jesus Christ the God who bestowed such wisdom upon you; for I have perceived that ye are established in faith immovable, being as it were nailed on the cross of the Lord Jesus Christ, in flesh and in spirit, and firmly grounded in love in the blood of Christ, fully persuaded as touching our Lord that He is truly of the race of David according to the flesh, but Son of God by the Divine will and power, truly born of a virgin and baptised by John that all righteousness might be fulfilled by Him, truly nailed up in the flesh for our sakes under Pontius Pilate and Herod the tetrarch (of which fruit are we—that is, of His most blessed passion); that He might set up an ensign unto all the ages through His resurrection, for His saints and faithful people, whether among Jews or among Gentiles, in one body of His Church.
- 2. For He suffered all these things for our sakes [that we might be saved]; and He suffered truly, as also He raised Himself truly; not as certain unbelievers say, that He suffered in semblance, being themselves mere semblance. And according as their opinions are, so shall it happen to them, for they are without body and demon-like.
- 3. For I know and believe that He was in the flesh even after the resurrection; and when He came to Peter and his company, He said to them, Lay hold and handle me, and see that I am not a demon without body. And straightway they touched Him, and they believed, being joined unto His flesh and His blood. Wherefore also they despised death, nay they were found superior to death. And after His resurrection He [both] ate with them and drank with them as one in the flesh, though spiritually He was united with the Father.

- 4. But these things I warn you, dearly beloved, knowing that ye yourselves are so minded. Howbeit I watch over you betimes to protect you from wild beasts in human form—men whom not only should ye not receive, but, if it were possible, not so much as meet [them]; only pray ye for them, if haply they may repent. This indeed is difficult, but Jesus Christ, our true life, hath power over it. For if these things were done by our Lord in semblance, then am I also a prisoner in semblance. And why then have I delivered myself over to death, unto fire, unto sword, unto wild beasts? But near to the sword, near to God; in company with wild beasts, in company with God. Only let it be in the name of Jesus Christ, so that we may suffer together with Him. I endure all things, seeing that He Himself enableth me, who is perfect Man.
- 5. But certain persons ignorantly deny Him, or rather have been denied by Him, being advocates of death rather than of the truth; and they have not been persuaded by the prophecies nor by the law of Moses, nay nor even to this very hour by the Gospel, nor by the sufferings of each of us severally; for they are of the same mind also concerning us. For what profit is it [to me], if a man praiseth me, but blasphemeth my Lord, not confessing that He was a bearer of flesh? Yet he that affirmeth not this, doth thereby deny Him altogether, being himself a bearer of a corpse. But their names, being unbelievers, I have not thought fit to record in writing; nay, far be it from me even to remember them, until they repent and return to the passion, which is our resurrection.
 - 6. Let no man be deceived. Even the heavenly beings and the glory of the angels and the rulers visible and invisible, if they believe not in the blood of Christ [who is God], judgment awaiteth them also. He that receiveth let him receive. Let not office puff up any man; for faith and love are all in all, and nothing is preferred before them. But mark ye those who hold strange doctrine touching the grace of Jesus Christ which came to us, how that they are contrary to the mind of God. They have no care for love, none for the widow, none for the orphan, none for the afflicted, none for the prisoner, none for the hungry or thirsty. They abstain from eucharist (thanksgiving) and prayer, because they allow not that the eucharist is the flesh of our Saviour Jesus Christ, which flesh suffered for our sins, and which the Father of His goodness raised up.

- 7. They therefore that gainsay the good gift of God perish by their questionings. But it were expedient for them to have love, that they may also rise again. It is therefore meet that ye should abstain from such, and not speak of them either privately or in public; but should give heed to the Prophets, and especially to the Gospel, wherein the passion is shown unto us and the resurrection is accomplished.
- 8. [But] shun divisions, as the beginning of evils. Do ye all follow your bishop, as Jesus Christ followed the Father, and the presbytery as the Apostles; and to the deacons pay respect, as to God's commandment. Let no man do aught of things pertaining to the Church apart from the bishop. Let that be held a valid eucharist which is under the bishop or one to whom he shall have committed it. Wheresoever the bishop shall appear, there let the people be; even as where Jesus may be, there is the universal Church. It is not lawful apart from the bishop either to baptize or to hold a love-feast; but whatsoever he shall approve, this is well-pleasing also to God; that everything which ye do may be sure and valid.
- 9. It is reasonable henceforth that we wake to soberness, while we have [still] time to repent and turn to God. It is good to recognise God and the bishop. He that honoureth the bishop is honoured of God; he that doeth aught without the knowledge of the bishop rendereth service to the devil. May all things therefore abound unto you in grace, for ye are worthy. Ye refreshed me in all things, and Jesus Christ shall refresh you. In my absence and in my presence ye cherished me. May God recompense you; for whose sake if ye endure all things, ye shall attain unto Him.

- ro. Philo and Rhaius Agathopus, who followed me in the cause of God, ye did well to receive as ministers of [Christ] God; who also give thanks to the Lord for you, because ye refreshed them in every way. Nothing shall be lost to you. My spirit is devoted for you, as also are my bonds, which ye despised not, neither were ashamed of them. Nor shall He, who is perfect faithfulness, be ashamed of you, even Jesus Christ.
- II. Your prayer sped forth unto the church which is in Antioch of Syria; whence coming a prisoner in most godly bonds I salute all men, though I am not worthy to belong to it, being the very last of them. By the Divine will was this vouchsafed to me, not of my own complicity, but by God's grace, which I pray may be given to me perfectly, that through your prayers I may attain unto God. Therefore that your work may be perfected both on earth and in heaven, it is meet that your church should appoint, for the honour of God, an ambassador of God that he may go as far as Syria and congratulate them because they are at peace, and have recovered their proper stature, and their proper bulk hath been restored to them. It seemed to me therefore a fitting thing that ye should send one of your own people with a letter, that he might join with them in giving glory for the calm which by God's will had overtaken them, and because they were already reaching a haven through your prayers. Seeing ye are perfect, let your counsels also be perfect; for if ye desire to do well, God is ready to grant the means.
 - 12. The love of the brethren which are in Troas saluteth you; from whence also I write to you by the hand of Burrhus, whom ye sent with me jointly with the Ephesians your brethren. He hath refreshed me in all ways. And I would that all imitated him, for he is an ensample of the ministry of God. The Divine grace shall requite him in all things. I salute your godly bishop and your venerable presbytery [and] my fellow-servants the deacons, and all of you severally and in a body, in the name of Jesus Christ, and in His flesh and blood, in His passion and resurrection, which was both carnal and spiritual, in the unity of God and of yourselves. Grace to you, mercy, peace, patience, always.

13. I salute the households of my brethren with their wives and children, and the virgins who are called widows. I bid you farewell in the power of the Father. Philo, who is with me, saluteth you. I salute the household of Gavia, and I pray that she may be grounded in faith and love both of flesh and of spirit. I salute Alce, a name very dear to me, and Daphnus the incomparable, and Eutecnus, and all by name. Fare ye well in the grace of God.

TO POLYCARP.

I GNATIUS, who is also Theophorus, unto Polycarp who is bishop of the church of the Smyrnæans or rather who hath for his bishop God the Father and Jesus Christ, abundant greeting.

I. Welcoming thy godly mind which is grounded as it were on an immovable rock, I give exceeding glory that it hath been vouchsafed me to see thy blameless face, whereof I would fain have joy in God. I exhort thee in the grace wherewith thou art clothed to press forward in thy course and to exhort all men that they may be saved. Vindicate thine office in all diligence of flesh and of spirit. Have a care for union, than which there is nothing better. Bear all men, as the Lord also beareth thee. Suffer all men in love, as also thou doest. Give thyself to unceasing prayers. Ask for larger wisdom than thou hast. Be watchful, and keep thy spirit from slumbering, Speak to each man severally after the manner of God. Bear the maladies of all, as a perfect athlete. Where there is more toil, there is much gain.

- 2. If thou lovest good scholars, this is not thankworthy in thee. Rather bring the more pestilent to submission by gentleness. All wounds are not healed by the same salve. Allay sharp pains by fomentations. Be thou prudent as the serpent in all things and guileless always as the dove. Therefore art thou made of flesh and spirit, that thou mayest humour the things which appear before thine eyes; and as for the invisible things, pray thou that they may be revealed unto thee; that thou mayest be lacking in nothing, but mayest abound in every spiritual gift. The season requireth thee, as pilots require winds or as a storm-tossed mariner a haven, that it may attain unto God. Be sober, as God's athlete. The prize is incorruption and life eternal, concerning which thou also art persuaded. In all things I am devoted to thee—I and my bonds which thou didst cherish.
- 3. Let not those that seem to be plausible and yet teach strange doctrine dismay thee. Stand thou firm, as an anvil when it is smitten. It is the part of a great athlete to receive blows and be victorious. But especially must we for God's sake endure all things, that He also may endure us. Be thou more diligent than thou art. Mark the seasons. Await Him that is above every season, the Eternal, the Invisible, who became visible for our sake, the Impalpable, the Impassible, who suffered for our sake, who endured in all ways for our sake.
- 4. Let not widows be neglected. After the Lord be thou their protector. Let nothing be done without thy consent; neither do thou anything without the consent of God, as indeed thou doest not. Be stedfast. Let meetings be held more frequently. Seek out all men by name. Despise not slaves, whether men or women. Yet let not these again be puffed up, but let them serve the more faithfully to the glory of God, that they may obtain a better freedom from God. Let them not desire to be set free at the public cost, lest they be found slaves of lust.

- 5. Flee evil arts, or rather hold thou discourse about these. Tell my sisters to love the Lord and to be content with their husbands in flesh and in spirit. In like manner also charge my brothers in the name of Jesus Christ to love their wives, as the Lord loved the Church. If any one is able to abide in chastity to the honour of the flesh of the Lord, let him so abide without boasting. If he boast, he is lost; and if it be known beyond the bishop, he is polluted. It becometh men and women too, when they marry, to unite themselves with the consent of the bishop, that the marriage may be after the Lord and not after concupiscence. Let all things be done to the honour of God.
- 6. Give ye heed to the bishop, that God also may give heed to you. I am devoted to those who are subject to the bishop, the presbyters, the deacons. May it be granted me to have my portion with them in the presence of God. Toil together one with another, struggle together, run together, suffer together, lie down together, rise up together, as God's stewards and assessors and ministers. Please the Captain in whose army ye serve, from whom also ye will receive your pay. Let none of you be found a deserter. Let your baptism abide with you as your shield; your faith as your helmet; your love as your spear; your patience as your body armour. Let your works be your deposits, that ye may receive your assets due to you. Be ye therefore long-suffering one with another in gentleness, as God is with you. May I have joy of you always.
- 7. Seeing that the church which is in Antioch of Syria hath peace, as it hath been reported to me, through your prayers, I myself also have been the more comforted since

God hath banished my care; if so be I may through suffering attain unto God, that I may be found a disciple through your intercession. It becometh thee, most blessed Polycarp, to call together a godly council and to elect some one among you who is very dear to you and zealous also, who shall be fit to bear the name of God's courier-to appoint him, I say, that he may go to Syria and glorify your zealous love unto the glory of God. A Christian hath no authority over himself, but giveth his time to God. This is God's work, and yours also, when ye shall complete it: for I trust in the Divine grace, that ye are ready for an act of well-doing which is meet for God. Knowing the fervour of your sincerity, I have exhorted you in a short letter.

8. Since I have not been able to write to all the churches, by reason of my sailing suddenly from Troas to Neapolis, as the Divine will enjoineth, thou shalt write to the churches in front, as one possessing the mind of God, to the intent that they also may do this same thing-let those who are able send messengers, and the rest letters by the persons who are sent by thee, that ye may be glorified by an ever memorable deed-for this is worthy of thee.

I salute all by name, and especially the wife of Epitropus with her whole household and her children's. I salute Attalus my beloved. I salute him that shall be appointed to go to Syria. Grace shall be with him always, and with Polycarp who sendeth him. I bid you farewell always in our God Jesus Christ, in whom abide ye in the unity and supervision of God. I salute Alce, a name very dear to me. Fare ye well in the Lord.

MARTYRDOM OF S. IGNATIUS.

I.

ANTIOCHENE ACTS.

I. NOT long after Trajan had succeeded to the empire of the Romans, Ignatius the disciple of the Apostle John, a man of apostolic character in all ways, governed the Church of the Antiochenes. He had with difficulty weathered the past storms of the many persecutions in the time of Domitian, and, like a good pilot, by the helm of prayer and fasting, by the assiduity of his teaching, and by his spiritual earnestness, had withstood the surge of the enemy's power, fearful lest he should lose any of the faint-hearted or over-simple. Thus while he rejoiced at the tranquillity of the Church, when the persecution abated for a while, he was vexed within himself, thinking that he had not yet attained true love towards Christ or the complete rank of a disciple: for he considered that the confession made by martyrdom would attach him more closely to the Lord. Therefore remaining a few years longer with the Church, and like a lamp of God illumining the mind of every one by his exposition of the scriptures, he attained the fulfilment of his prayer.

2. It so happened that after these things Trajan in the ninth year of his reign, being elated with his victory over the Scythians and Dacians and many other nations, and considering that the godly society of the Christians was still lacking to him to complete the subjection, unless they chose to submit to the service of the devils together with all the nations, threatened [to subject them to] persecution and would have compelled all those who were leading a pious life either to offer sacrifice or to die. At that time therefore the brave soldier of Christ, being afraid for the Church of the Antiochenes, was taken of his own free will before Trajan who was staying at that moment in Antioch, making ready to march against Armenia and the Parthians.

And when he stood face to face with Trajan [the king]; Who art thou, said Trajan, thou wretch of a devil, that art so ready to transgress our orders, whilst thou seducest others also, that they may come to a bad end? Ignatius said; No man calleth one that beareth God a wretch of a devil; for the devils stand aloof from the servants of God. But if, because I am troublesome to these, thou callest me a wretch toward the devils, I agree with thee: for having Christ a heavenly king, I confound the devices of these. Trajan said; And who is he that beareth God? Ignatius answered, He that hath Christ in his breast. Trajan said; Dost thou not think then that we too have gods in our heart, seeing that we employ them as allies against our enemies? Ignatius said; Thou art deceived, when thou callest the devils of the nations gods. For there is one God who made the heaven and the earth and the sea and all things that are therein, and one Christ Jesus His only-begotten Son, whose friendship I would fain enjoy. Trajan said; Speakest thou of him that was crucified under Pontius Pilate? Ignatius said; I speak of Him that nailed on the cross sin and its author, and sentenced every malice of the devils to be trampled under foot of those that carry Him in their heart. Trajan said; Dost thou then carry Christ within thyself? Ignatius said; Yes, for it is written, 'I will dwell in them and will walk about in them.' Trajan gave sentence; It is our order that Ignatius who saith that he beareth about the crucified in himself shall be put in chains by the soldiers and taken to mighty Rome, there to be made food for wild beasts, as a spectacle and a diversion for the people. The holy martyr, when he heard this sentence, shouted aloud with joy; I thank Thee, Lord and Master, that Thou hast vouchsafed to honour me by perfecting my love towards Thee, in that Thou hast bound me with chains of iron to Thine Apostle Paul. Having said this and having invested himself in his chains with gladness, after praying over the Church and commending it with tears to the Lord, like a choice ram the leader of a goodly flock, he was hurried away by the brutal cruelty of the soldiers to be carried off to Rome as food for bloodthirsty brutes.

3. So then with much eagerness and joy, in longing desire for the Lord's passion, he went down from Antioch to Seleucia, and from thence he set sail. And having put in at the city of the Smyrnæans after much stress of weather, he disembarked with much joy and hastened to see the holy Polycarp, bishop of the Smyrnæans, his fellow-student; for in old times they had been disciples of John. And being entertained by him on landing, and having communicated with him his spiritual gifts, and glorying in his bonds, he entreated them to aid him in his purpose—asking this in the first place of every church collectively (for the cities and churches of Asia welcomed the saint through their bishops and presbyters and deacons, all men flocking to him, in the hope that they might receive a portion of some spiritual gift), but especially of the holy Polycarp, that by means of the wild beasts disappearing the sooner from the world, he might appear in the presence of Christ.

4. And these things he so spake and so testified, carrying his love towards Christ to such a pitch, as if he would storm heaven by his good confession and by the fervour of those who joined with him in prayer over his combat, while at the same time he recompensed those churches which came to meet him in the person of their rulers, by sending out letters of thanks to them shedding upon them the dew of spiritual grace with prayer and exhortation. Therefore when he saw that they all were kindly disposed towards him, being afraid lest haply the affection of the brotherhood might uproot his zeal for the Lord, when a goodly door of martyrdom was thus opened to him, he writes to the Church of the Romans in the words which are here subjoined.

5. Having therefore by his letter appeased, as he desired, those of the brethren in Rome who were averse, this done he set sail from Smyrna (for the Christ-bearer was hurried forward by the soldiers to be in time for the sports in the great city, that given to wild beasts in the sight of the Roman people he might by such a combat obtain the crown of righteousness); and thence he put in at Troas. Then departing thence he landed at Neapolis; and passing through Philippi he journeyed by land across Macedonia and the part of Epirus which lies by Epidam-And here on the sea coast he took ship and sailed across the Hadriatic sea, and thence entering the Tyrrhene and passing by islands and cities, the holy man when he came in view of Puteoli was eager himself to disembark, desiring to tread in the footsteps of the Apostle [Paul]; but forasmuch as a stiff breeze springing up prevented it, the ship being driven by a stern wind, he commended the love of the brethren in that place, and so sailed by. Thus in one single day and night, meeting with favourable winds, we ourselves were carried forward against our will, mourning over the separation which must soon come between ourselves and this righteous man; while he had his wish fulfilled, for he was eager to depart from the world quickly, that he might hasten to join the Lord whom he loved. Wherefore, as he landed at the harbour of the Romans just when the unholy sports were drawing to a close, the soldiers were vexed at the slow pace, while the bishop gladly obeyed them as they hurried him forward.

6. So we set out thence at break of day, leaving the place called Portus; and, as the doings of the holy martyr had already been rumoured abroad, we were met by the brethren, who were filled at once with fear and with joy-with joy because they were vouchsafed this meeting with the God-bearer, with fear because so good a man was on his way to execution. And some of them he also charged to hold their peace, when in the fervour of their zeal they said that they would stay the people from seeking the death of the righteous man. For having recognised these at once by the Spirit and having saluted all of them, he asked them to show him genuine love, and discoursed at greater length than in his epistle, and persuaded them not to grudge one who was hastening to meet his Lord; and then, all the brethren falling on their knees, he made entreaty to the Son of God for the churches, for the staying of the persecution, and for the love of the brethren one to another, and was led away promptly to the amphitheatre. Then forthwith he was put into the arena in obedience to the previous orders of Cæsar, just as the sports were drawing to a close (for the day called the Thirteenth in the Roman tongue was, as they thought, a high day, on which they eagerly flocked together), whereupon he was thrown by these godless men to savage brutes, and so the desire of the holy martyr Ignatius was fulfilled forthwith (according to the saying of Scripture The desire of the righteous man is acceptable), that he might not be burdensome to any of the brethren by the collection of his reliques, according as he had already in his epistle expressed his desire that his own martyrdom might be. For only the tougher parts of his holy reliques were left, and these were carried back to Antioch and laid in a sarcophagus, being left to the holy Church a priceless treasure by the Divine grace manifested in the martyr.

7. Now these things happened on the 13th before the Kalends of January, when Sura, and Senecio for the second time, were consuls among the Romans.

Having with tears beheld these things with our own eyes, and having watched all night long in the house, and having often and again entreated the Lord with supplication on our knees to confirm the faith of us weak men after what had passed, when we had fallen asleep for a while, some of us suddenly beheld the blessed Ignatius standing by and embracing us, while by others again he was seen praying over us, and by others dripping with sweat, as if he were come from a hard struggle and were standing at the Lord's side with much boldness and unutterable glory. And being filled with joy at this sight, and comparing the visions of our dreams, after singing hymns to God the giver of good things and lauding the holy man, we have signified unto you both the day and the time, that we may gather ourselves together at the season of the martyrdom and hold communion with the athlete and valiant martyr of Christ, who trampled the devil under foot and accomplished the race of his Christian devotion, in Christ Jesus our Lord, through whom and with whom is the glory and the power unto the Father with the Holy Spirit for ever and ever. Amen.

- IN the ninth year of the reign of Trajan Cæsar, being the second year of the 223rd Olympiad, in the consulship of Atticus Surbanus and Marcellus, Ignatius who became bishop of Antioch the second in order after the Apostles (for he succeeded Euodius) was escorted under the strictest custody of guards from Syria to the city of the Romans on account of his testimony to Christ. Now his keepers were bodyguards of Trajan, ten in number, savage wretches with the tempers of wild beasts; and they conducted the blessed saint a prisoner through Asia and thence to Thrace and Rhegium by land and sea. illusing the holy man day and night, although in every city they were kindly treated by the brethren. Yet none of these things appeased their fury, but they crushed the saint with implacable and pitiless eyes, as he himself bears witness, saying in a passage in one of his epistles; From Syria even unto Rome I fight with wild beasts, [conducted] by land and sea, bound amidst ten leopards, I mean a band of soldiers, who only grow worse, when they are kindly treated.
- 2. Having set sail therefore from Rhegium they arrive in Rome; and they announced his coming to the emperor. Then the emperor commanded him to be brought before him in the presence of the Senate, and said to him; Art thou that Ignatius who turned the city of the Antiochenes upside down, insomuch that it hath come to my ears that thou didst draw away all Syria from the religion of the Greeks to the religion of the Christians. Ignatius said; Would, O king, that I were able to draw thee also away from thine idolatry, and bring thee to the God of the universe, and present thee a friend of Christ, and make thine empire more secure to thee. Trajan said; If thou desirest to confer a favour on me and to be reckoned among my friends, abandon this mind and sacrifice to the gods, and thou shalt be high-priest of mighty Zeus and shalt share my kingdom with me. Ignatius said; It is right to confer those favours only, O king, which do no harm to the soul, not those which condemn to eternal punishment. But thy promises, which thou didst promise to bestow on me, I judge worthy of no account. For neither do I serve gods of whom I have no knowledge, nor do I know who this Zeus of thine is, nor do I desire a worldly kingdom. 'For what shall it profit me, if I shall gain the whole world and forfeit mine own soul?' Trajan said; Thou seemest to me to be utterly devoid of sound sense; and therefore thou holdest my promises cheap. So then, if thou provokest me to displeasure, I will punish thee with every kind of torture, not only as disobedient but also as ungrateful, and as refusing to submit to the decree of the sacred senate and sacrifice [to the gods]. Ignatius said; Do as seemeth fit to thee; for I offer no sacrifice. For neither fire nor cross nor rage of wild beasts nor loss of limbs shall induce me to fall away from the living God: for I love not the present world, but Christ who died and rose for me.

3. The Senate said; We know that the gods are immortal; but how sayest thou, Ignatius, that Christ died? Ignatius said; My Lord, though He died, died by reason of a dispensation, but rose again after three days; while your gods died as mortals and were not raised up. For instance Zeus is buried in Crete, and Æsculapius struck by a thunder-bolt in Cynosura; Aphrodite is buried in Paphos with Cinyras; Hercules is consumed by fire. For your gods deserved such punishments, since they were incontinent and evildoers and corruptors of men; whereas our Lord, even though He was crucified and died, yet showed His own power by rising from the dead and avenging Him on His murderers by your hands. And again; your gods were made by Him to pay the penalty as workers of iniquity; whereas our Lord was slain in the flesh by wicked men who could not bear His rebukes, after He had shown all beneficence but had met with ingratitude from unbelievers. Trajan said; I advise thee to shun death and cling to life. Ignatius said; Thou advisest me well, O king; for I flee from eternal death and take refuge in eternal life. Trajan said; And how many deaths are there? Ignatius said; Two; the one momentary, the other eternal. And so likewise there are two lives; the one for a brief space, the other eternal. Trajan said; Sacrifice to the gods and shun punishment; for thou art not better than the Senate. Ignatius said; To what gods wouldest thou have me sacrifice? To him who was shut up in a cask thirteen months for adultery? Or to the blacksmith with the crippled feet? Or to him who failed in his divination and was defeated by a woman? Or to the man-woman who was torn to pieces by Titans? Or to those who built the walls of Ilium and were defrauded of their wages? Or to those goddesses who imitate the doings of men and forget the doings of women? I am ashamed to speak of gods who are sorcerers and violaters of boys and adulterers, changing themselves, as you say, into an eagle and a bull, and into gold, and into a swan and a dragon, not for any good purpose but for the subversion of others' wedlock—gods whom ye ought to loathe and not to worship as ye do. To these deities your wives pray, that they may preserve their chastity for you! Trajan said; I make myself an accomplice with thee in thy blasphemy towards the gods, because I do not torture thee. Ignatius said; I have told thee long ago, that I am ready for every torture and every kind of death, since I am eager to go to God.

- 4. Trajan said; If thou wilt not sacrifice, thou shalt repent of it. Therefore spare thyself, before thou come to harm. Ignatius said; Unless I had spared myself, I should have fulfilled thy commands. Trajan said; Torture his back with leaded thongs. Ignatius said; Thou hast intensified my longing for God, O king. Trajan said; Lacerate his sides with hooks and rub salt into his wounds. Ignatius said; My whole mind yearneth intensely towards God, and I make no account of what I suffer. Trajan said; Sacrifice to the gods. Ignatius said; To what gods? Perchance thou biddest me sacrifice to the gods of the Egyptians, to a calf and a goat, to an ibis and an ape and a venomous asp, or to a wolf and a dog, to a lion and a crocodile, or to the fire of the Persians, or to the water of the sea, or to infernal Pluto, or to Hermes the thief. Trajan said; I said unto thee, Sacrifice; for thou wilt get no good by talking thus. Ignatius said; I said unto thee, I do not sacrifice, neither forsake I the one only God, who made the heaven and the earth, the sea and all things that are therein, who hath power over all flesh; the God of spirits and King of everything sensible and intelligible. Trajan said; Why what hindcreth thee from worshipping him as God, if he existeth, and these likewise whom we all acknowledge in common? Ignatius said; Natural discernment, when it is unclouded, doth not confound falsehood with truth, darkness with light, bitter with sweet. For woe threateneth such as make no distinction between these. For 'What agreement hath Christ with Belial? Or what portion hath a believer with an unbeliever? And what concord is there between a temple of God and idols?'
 - 5. Trajan said; Open out his hands and fill them with fire. Ignatius said; Neither fire that burneth nor teeth of wild beasts nor wrenching of bones nor manglings of my whole body, nay not the tortures of the devil, shall separate me from my love towards God. Trajan said; Dip paper in oil and steep it till it is soft; then set fire to it and burn his Ignatius said; Thou seemest to me, O king, not to know that there is a God living within me, and He supplieth me with strength and hardeneth my soul; for otherwise I should not have been able to bear thy tortures. Trajan said; Thou art made of iron, methinks, and art quite callous; for else thou wouldest have yielded after all this, with the pain of thy wounds, and have sacrificed to the gods. Ignatius said; It is not because I do not feel the tortures, O king, that I sustain and endure them, but because in the hope of good things to come my affection towards God doth relieve my pains: for neither burning fire nor drenching water shall ever have power to quench my love towards God. Trajan said; Bring fire and spread live coals on the ground, and make Ignatius stand on them, that so at length he may be induced to submit to me and to sacrifice to the gods. Ignatius said; The burning of this fire of thine leadeth me to remembrance of the eternal and unquenchable fire, though this is but for a season. Trajan said; I suppose it is by some sorcery that thou despisest the tortures: for otherwise thou wouldest have submitted to us, after suffering so much at our hands. Ignatius said; Tell me, how can men who abandon demons, as being rebels against God, and abominate idols, be sorcerers? Surely ye who worship these are more justly open to such reproaches; but for us it is ordained by law that we suffer not wizards nor enchanters nor observers of omens to live; nay we are wont to burn even the books of those that practise curious arts, as infamous. Therefore it is not I that am a sorcerer, but ye, since ye worship the demons. Trajan said; By the gods, Ignatius, I am weary of thee by this time, and I am at a loss what tortures I shall apply to thee to induce thee to submit to the orders which are given thee. Ignatius said; Grow not weary, O king, but either put me into the fire, or hack me with the sword, or east me into the deep, or throw me to wild beasts, that thou mayest be convinced that none of these things is terrible to us for the love we have to God.

6. Trajan said; What hope thou hast in prospect, Ignatius, that thou art dying in these sufferings which thou endurest, I cannot say. Ignatius said; They that are ignorant of the God who is over all and of the Lord Jesus Christ, are ignorant also of the good things that are prepared for the godly. Wherefore they consider that their existence is confined to this world only, even as that of brutes without reason; and they picture to themselves nothing better after their departure hence. But we who have knowledge of godliness are aware that after our departure hence we shall rise again and have an everlasting life in Christ, a life which shall never fail neither give place to another, and from which pain and grief and mourning have fled away. Trajan said; I will destroy your heresy and will bring you to your senses and teach you not to fight obstinately against the decrees of the Romans. Ignatius said; And who is able, O king, to destroy God's building? [for] if a man shall attempt it, he will gain nothing but to wage war against God. For Christianity will not only not be destroyed by men, but will increase daily by the power of Christ in growth and magnitude. It will advance in the same manner and in the same course, flashing out coruscations alike of splendour and of awe: for 'The whole earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, as much water covereth the seas.' But thou doest not well, O king, to call Christianity a heresy; for heresy is far apart from Christianity. Nay, Christianity is the full knowledge of the true and very God and of His only begotten Son and of His dispensation in the flesh and His teaching, this infallible religion being accompanied also by the virtues of our outward life. But what men among us hast thou known to love faction and war, and not to pay obedience to rulers whereinsoever obedience is free from peril, living peacefully and harmoniously in friendly intercourse, 'paying to all their due, tribute to whom tribute is due, fear to whom fear, customs to whom customs, honour to whom honour,' being careful to 'owe no man anything save to love one another'? For we have been taught by our Lord not only to 'love our neighbour' but also to 'do good to our enemy' and to 'love them that hate us' and to 'pray for them that evil intreat us and persecute us.' But say wherein the preaching of Christianity hath thwarted thee, since it began. Hath any strange disaster befallen the empire of the Romans? Nay, was not the rule of many exchanged for the rule of one? And did not Augustus thy ancestor, in whose time our Saviour was born of a virgin, and He who till then was God the Word became also man for our sakes, reign nearly a whole age, having for fifty-seven whole years and six months besides swayed the empire of the Romans and ruled alone, as none other did of those who went before him? Was not every tribe made subject to him, while the former separation of nations and their mutual hatred ceased from the time when our Saviour sojourned upon earth?

7. The Senate said; Yes, these things are so as thou hast said, Ignatius; but this it is which vexeth us, that he abolished the worship of the gods. Ignatius said; O illustrious Senate, just as He subjected the less intelligent nations to the rule of the Romans, which our oracles call 'a rod of iron,' so also He drove away from mankind the tyrannical spirits of evil, by proclaiming one only God, even Him that is over all. And not only this, but He wrought deliverance also from the cruel bondage under their bloodthirsty and pitiless rule. Did they not revel in the death of those dearest to you? Did they not embrue you with civil wars? Did they not compel you to behave unseemly, exposing you naked as a spectacle, and carrying your wives naked in procession as if they were prisoners of war, defiling the earth with bloodshed, and darkening the pure air with impurities? Ask the Scythians whether they did not sacrifice human beings to Artemis; for assuredly, though ve may deny for very shame the slaughter of a virgin to Cronos, the Greeks glory in such human sacrifices, having derived this wicked practice from barbarians. Trajan said; By the gods, I admire thee, Ignatius, for thy much learning, even though I praise thee not for thy religion. Ignatius said; And what dost thou condemn in our divine religion? Trajan said; That ye worship not our lord the Sun, nor the Heaven, nor the holy Moon the common nurse of all. Ignatius said; And who would choose, O king, to worship the Sun which hath an outward shape, which falleth under the senses, which sheddeth and again replenisheth from fire the heat which it hath shed, which undergoeth eclipse, which can never change its own order against the mind of Him that ordered it to accomplish its course? And how should the heaven be worshipped, which is veiled with clouds, which the Creator 'stretched out as a hide' and 'fixed as a vault' and set firm as a cube? or the moon which waxeth and diminisheth and waneth and is subject to vicissitudes? But to say that because their light is bright men ought therefore to worship them is to say what is altogether untrue: for they were given for illumination to men and not for worship; they were appointed to mellow and warm the fruits, to brighten the day and to illumine the night. And the stars of the heaven too were appointed for signs and for seasons and for notes of time and to cheer and sustain the mariners. But none of these ought to be worshipped, neither water which ye call Poscidon, nor fire which ye call Hephæstos, nor air which ye call Here, nor earth which ye call Demeter, nor the fruits. For all these things, though they have been made for our sustenance, are yet perishable and lifeless.

8. Trajan said; Did I not then say rightly at the beginning, that thou art he who did turn the East upside down, forbidding it to reverence the gods? Ignatius said; And doth it vex thee, O king, that we advise men not to reverence things which ought not to be worshipped, but the true and living God, the maker of heaven and earth, and His only-begotten Son? for this is the only true religion, supreme and undisputed, taking delight in divine and spiritual doctrines. But the teaching of the Greek religion which prevaileth among you is an atheist polytheism, easily upset, unstable, veering about, and standing on no secure foundation: for 'The instruction that is without reproof goeth astray.' For how is it not full of falsehoods of all kinds, when at one time it saith that the common gods of the universe are twelve in number, and then again supposeth them to be more? Trajan said; I can no longer bear thine insolence, for thou revilest us shamefully, desiring to defeat us with thy glibness of speech. Therefore sacrifice; for thou hast said enough with all the fine words wherewith thou hast deluged us. If not, I will torture thee again and afterwards give thee to wild beasts. Ignatius said; How long dost thou threaten and not fulfil thy promises? For I am a Christian and I offer no sacrifice to wicked demons, but I worship the true God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who 'enlightened me with the light of knowledge,' and 'opened mine eyes to discern His marvellous things.' Him I reverence and honour: for He is God and Lord and King and 'only Potentate.'

9. Trajan said; I put thee to death on a gridiron, unless thou repentest. Ignatius said; Repentance from evil deeds is a noble thing, O king, but repentance from good deeds is criminal: for we ought to betake ourselves to a better course and not to a worse. Nothing is better than godliness. Trajan said; Lacerate his back with hooks, saying to him, Obey the emperor and sacrifice to the gods according to the decree of the senate. Ignatius said; I fear the decree of God which saith 'Thou shalt have none other gods but me,' and 'He that sacrificeth to other gods shall be put to death.' But when senate and king bid me transgress the laws, I do not listen to them: for 'Thou shalt not accept the person of a ruler,' so the laws distinctly say, and 'Thou shalt not consort with numbers to do evil.' Trajan said; Pour vinegar mixed with sait upon his wounds. Ignatius said; All things that befall me for confessing God must be borne that they may be the harbingers of rewards: for 'The sufferings of the present season are not worthy in comparison of the glory that shall be revealed.' Trajan said; Spare thyself, fellow, henceforth, and submit to the orders given thee; for, if not, I will employ worse tortures against thee. Ignatius said; 'Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation or distress or persecution or famine or nakedness or peril or sword? For I am persuaded that neither life nor death' shall be able to part me from godliness, being confident in the power of Christ. Trajan said; Thinkest thou to gain a victory over me by thine endurance? for man is a creature fond of victory. Ignatius said; I do not think but believe that I have prevailed and shall prevail, that thou mayest learn how wide is the gulf between godliness and ungodliness. Trajan said; Take him and put him in irons and, when ye have made his feet fast in the stocks, throw him into the inner prison, and let no person whatsoever see him in the dungeon. And for three days and three nights let him eat no bread and drink no water, that after the three days he may be cast to wild beasts and so depart from life. The Senate said; We too give our assent to the sentence against him: for he insulted us all along with the emperor, in not consenting to sacrifice to the gods, but he persisted that he was a Christian. Ignatius said; 'Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ' who of His abundant goodness vouchsafed that I should be a partaker of the sufferings of His Christ and a true and faithful witness of His Godhead.

10. On the third day Trajan, having summoned the Senate and the prefect, went forth into the amphitheatre, where also was a concourse of the Roman people; for they had heard that the bishop from Syria was to fight with wild beasts. And he ordered the holy Ignatius to be led in. And when he beheld him, he said to him; I wonder that thou art alive after so many tortures and so long famine. But now at length obey me, that thou mayest escape from the miseries which lie in thy path, and thou shalt have us as thy friend. Ignatius said; Thou seemest to me to have the form of a man but the ways of a fox, which fareneth with its tail while it plotteth in its mind; for thou feignest the words of one kindly disposed, and yet thy counsels are not sound. So understand henceforth plainly, that I make no account of this mortal and frail life for Jesus' sake whom I desire. I go my way to Him; for He is the bread of immortality and the draught of eternal life. I am wholly His, and I yearn for Him in my mind; and I despise thy tortures, and I spit upon thy glory. Trajan said; Since he is insolent and contemptuous, bind him fast, and let two lions loose upon him, that they may not leave so much as a relique of him behind. But when the wild beasts were let loose, the blessed saint beholding them said to the people; Ye Romans, who are spectators of this contest, I suffer these things, not for any base action or any blameable thing, but for godliness. For I am the wheat of God, and I am ground by the teeth of wild beasts that I may be found pure bread. But Trajan, when he heard these things, was greatly astonished saying; Great is the endurance of those who set their hope on Christ; [for] what Greek or barbarian ever endured for his own god such sufferings as this man endureth for him in whom he believeth? Ignatius said; It is no work of human power that I bear up against such sufferings, but of zeal and faith alone, which are drawn into conformity with Christ. And when he had said these things, the lions rushed upon him, and attacking him from either side crushed him to death only, but did not touch his flesh, so that his reliques might be a protection to the great city of the Romans, in which likewise Peter was crucified and Paul was beheaded and Onesimus was made perfect by martyrdom.

- 11. But Trajan rose up and was filled with wonder and amazement. Meanwhile letters reach him from Plinius Secundus the governor, who was troubled at the number of those that underwent martyrdom, seeing how they died for the faith. He also informed him at the same time that they did nothing impious or contrary to the laws; only they rose at daybreak and sang a hymn to Christ as God; [for this they underwent punishment;] but adultery and murder and horrible offences akin to these they were the first to forbid, and in all things their conduct was in accordance [with the laws]. Whereupon we are told that Trajan taking into consideration what had happened in the case of the blessed [and holy Ignatius—for he led the van in the army of martyrs—issued a decree to the effect that the Christian people should not be sought out, but when accidentally found should be punished. And as regards the reliques of the blessed Ignatius he gave orders that those who wished to take them up and bury them should not be hindered. Then the brethren in Rome, to whom also he had written asking them not to sue for his deliverance from martyrdom, and thus rob him of his cherished hope, took his body and laid it apart in a place where they were permitted to assemble themselves together and praise God and His Christ for the perfecting of the holy bishop and martyr Ignatius; for The memory of the righteous is commended.
- 12. And Irenæus also, the bishop of Lyons, is aware of his martyrdom, and makes mention of his epistles in these words: One of our own people, when condemned to wild beasts for his testimony towards God, hath said; I am the wheat of God and I am ground by the teeth of wild beasts, that I may be found pure bread. And Polycarp also, who was bishop of the brotherhood sojourning in Smyrna, makes mention of these things, when writing to the Philippians; I exhort you all therefore to be obedient and to practise all endurance, such as ye saw with your own eyes not only in the blessed saints Ignatius and Rufus and Zosimus, but also in many others of your own people, and in Paul himself and those who believed together with him, how that all these ran not in vain, but in faith and righteousness, and that they are gone to the place assigned to them in the presence of the Lord, whose sufferings also they shared. For they loved not the present world, but yearned after Christ who died and rose again for us. And again after a short space; The letters of Ignatius which were sent to us by him, and all others which we had in our keeping, we send to you, as ye enjoined; the which are subjoined to this letter. Where-

Such was the martyrdom of Ignatius; and his successor in the bishopric of Antioch was Hero. Now the commemoration of the brave martyr Ignatius, who was very dear to God, is in the month Panemus, on the first day of the month.

Additional MSS of the Antiochene Acts including the Epistle to the Romans.

THE Antiochene Acts of Martyrdom, which incorporate the Epistle to the Romans in its Middle (genuine) form, have been known hitherto only from a single MS, Paris. 1451 (see I. p. 75, II. p. 363). The recent researches of Prof. Rendel Harris, to whom I am deeply indebted, have revealed two other MSS in the libraries of the East. Unfortunately these MSS, like Paris. 1451, are comparatively late and belong to the same family; but it is a distinct gain to have a threefold cord of evidence for the Greek text, which has hitherto hung on a single thread.

(1) The first of these, designated A in the following collation, is 18 S. Sab. in the Library of the Patriarch at Jerusalem. An account is given of this library by Prof. Rendel Harris in Haverford College Studies, no. 1, p. 1 sq. It comprises three collections of books now gathered under one roof, namely those of (1) the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem; (2) the Convent of Mar Saba near the Dead Sea; (3) the Convent of the Holy Cross about two miles from Jerusalem on the Jaffa road.

The MS in question belongs to the second of these. A photograph was procured from which the collation was taken. The Martyrdom of Ignatius is followed immediately by the Acts of the Cretan Martyrs, Theodulus, Saturninus, etc (Dec. 23). The MS seems to belong to the Xth century.

(2) The second of these MSS, designated B in the collation, is in the Library of the Monastery of Sinai (no. 519). It is briefly described in Gardthausen's Catalogue of the Sinai MSS thus;

Incipit primo folio (manu rec. scr.) martyrio Symeonis Stylitae, ξένον καὶ παράδοξον (Fabric. Bibl. Graec. x. p. 324, Harles). Ultimus titulus; in fol. σμθ (verso) Martyrium Martiniani (m. Febr. d. xiii). Codex in fine mutilus est.

This MS omits large portions of the Epistle to the Romans; but its omissions do not correspond either with those of the Curetonian Syriac or with those of the Metaphrast.

Though it is no part of my work to deal with the text of the Metaphrast, I thought it might be useful to others if I included a collation which Prof. Rendel Harris procured of this text from Sin. 508. This MS is described by Gardthausen;

Λόγοι πανηγυρικοί (m. Dec.) cod. membr. $33 \times 25^{\circ}6$ centim., binis columnis saec. x scr., quamquam lineae summas litteras stringunt...In initio codex mutilus est. Primus titulus diei Danielis prophetae ($\Delta \epsilon \kappa. \ \iota \xi$), ultimus Melaniae Romanae ($\Delta \epsilon \kappa. \ \lambda a$). Notae nonnullae additae sunt latine scriptae.

It is designated S in the following collation.

Prof. Rendel Harris has also collated (for the Epistle to the Romans only) a Jerusalem MS of the eleventh century, S. Sep. vii f. 236, designated H in the collation.
